him." But where has been that diligent search for God in all his ways, desiring nothing but a knowledge of his will concerning us? This is the only desire of a heart wholly consecrated to God. Feeling that no works of righteousness that we can do by our wisdom or strength are commendable before the great I AM, the only question is, How shall I please the Lord in thinking, talking, dressing, writing, eating, drinking, and working? If we please the Lord in thought, our mind is staid on him, and our meditation in his law is sweet, having the law of Christ dwelling in us richly; and from the abundance of such hearts we shall get the sweet words of life in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs; and instead of trying to make melody for one another, or for outsiders, our singing is with grace in the heart to the Lord. Now self-praise is all gone, and the Lord is all and in all, and we can say,

"My God and my Bible are all that I desire,
To holiness of heart I'll continually aspire."

Praise the good Lord that it is possible for us to hold fast our confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope, firm to the end. The Lord is at hand. Let us be careful for nothing (like the world), but in every thing by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let our requests be made known unto God. "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your heart and mind, through Christ Jesus." Says Peter, "Casting all (not a part) your care upon him," for the blessed reason that "he careth for you." And he pitieth us, as a father doth his only son that serveth him.

Then why should we doubt his divine love and care for us in all things? Says he, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added." It is not for us first to make sure by our efforts what we want to eat, drink, and wear, just as the world does, and then expect the Lord will add the kingdom in the end; he wants us to live by faith, and prove his faithfulness here, by receiving the exceeding great and precious blessings promised, as the father of the faithful received the promised blessings, because he counted Him faithful who had promised, and staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith giving glory to God. Says Christ to the Jews, "If ye were the children of Abraham, ye would do the works of Abraham." And can we claim to be his children any more than they, unless we walk in the steps of his faith, and go out entirely free from the world, wholly detached from earth, and can say, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly? By faith Enoch was translated, for before his translation he had this testimony, his ways pleased the Lord. Without this witness or testimony in the heart, of our ways pleasing the Lord, we have no kingdom given us, after all our anticipation of glory. Praise the Lord, it is not by the righteousness of work we get the testimony; for "this is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent"; that he will save us from all sin now, and give us an abundance of grace, and the gift of righteousness, if we are humble enough to receive it as a gift. Then he works in us to will and to do, and it is easy doing his will, for when we really get his yoke on it is easy, and his burden is light. It is love to God and man. Instead of his commands being grievous, they are in the heart like a well of water, springing up into everlasting life, written there by the Spirit of the living God; and we live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of the Lord. For the Spirit leadeth into all truth and shows us things to come. Praise the Lord forever!

Your Sr. in hope, Lovina W. Bragg.

From Bro. E. I. Bean.

Bro. Grant:—I am not a subscriber to your paper; am not acquainted with you personally, for I never saw you in my life, and perhaps never shall in this vale of sighs and tears; but if not, I hope we shall meet in the paradise of God. I claim to be an earnest seeker after and lover of the truth, especially Bible truth; and that is about all the apology I have to offer for writing you. Furthermore, I am ready to accept the truth, let it come from whatever source it may.

I used to call myself a Freewill Baptist, and believed in the theory taught by that and other like denominations; but within a year or two I have been brought in contact with those who hold different views. I have had the privilege of reading the Crisis occasionally. I have also read several tracts printed at the same place, and I have found that they present a different view of things from what I had taken; and the Scriptures, too, seemed to be brought along so plain to prove the position taken, that I was completely baffled.

Well, what could be done? It appeared to me that I must throw away either my creed or my Bible. I read, and studied, and prayed, and besought the Lord for that one thing; and he tells me to throw away creed, rather than Bible; and I believe I ought to obey him rather than man, and I mean to try and do so.

There are a few passages of Scripture, however, that I would like to have explained, if you feel free to do so. They are these:—Mark 12: 20–28, 1 Cor. 15: 50, Luke 23: 46, Lk. 24: 39. If you think proper to give some explanation through the Crisis, it will be thankfully received. I can think of many other things I would like to write, but I forbear. I live about eighteen miles from Carthage, where Bro. John Wheeler lives, in an easterly direction; and I hope that he, or some other Advent Bro. will come and preach to the people before long. Your brother in Christ, E. I. Bean.

Bean's Cr., Franklin Co., Me.

From Bro. J. Reynolds.

Bro. Grant:—We are on our journey home, and as we move along we wish to teach the truth as it is revealed in God's word; and from experience I have learned that we need patience and much thought if we would have a right view of the Bible; because we must take nothing second-hand, and every word on which any doctrine depends should be examined with care. After all our care we cannot always understand what we wish to; there is a certain view which we cannot get just when we would, and we have to leave the subject for another time; so by learning some other truth we can often get a clear view of what we wished to know before.

The Bible is a perfect book, and will explain itself; so it is only by examining the whole with an unprejudiced mind that we can understand its doctrines. But there are few minds free from prejudice, and but a few that examine and compare scripture with scripture, but the great majority take the opinions of uninspired men, and know but little or nothing about the Bible.

The teachers, or, as they like to be called, "Reverends," generally explain some portions of Scripture as they like to have it, and as it will serve their purpose. Yet many of these are very good men, and some of the best on earth, but they are as liable to mistake and to be influenced by their interest as other men, and that they are mistaken in acting the gentleman is quite certain, and it was so understood by Thomas Scott, the Calvinist commentator; and in his note in Pilgrim's Progress, page 146, are these words:—"Perhaps Satan never carried a more important point, within the visible church, than when the opinion was adopted that the clergy were gentlemen by profession; and when he led them to infer from it that they and their families ought to live in a genteel and fashionable style." The whole note is very good, and particularly applicable to these times.

But as to the title of "Reverend," it would be pleasant to know where it came from; but that it is a curse to the church is quite certain; and it is also certain that it is contrary to the teaching of our Lord. The society of Friends understand this truth.

Marblehead, Mass. J. Reynolds.

From Sr. I. Davis.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord has been working powerfully with his people in waking up the church throughout the town, independent of name. All his people seemed to awake. It has been a glorious work. I think some over twenty have given good evidence of a change. Others are interested. The work has abated a little on account of gathering in the lambs to their different folds. But in the midst of God's work the devil is not asleep. He is seeking whom he may devour. What a consolation in the midst of tumult and strife that we may look to Christ. He comforts and guides. I have had many precious seasons the last winter with the dear saints laboring for the salvation of sinners, and God has blessed our united efforts. I scatter tracts among the converts. Some are much interested in our faith. Husband scatters tracts and your works around amongst a class I can not reach. So we are getting the truth out as fast as we can. If we stop here, we hope to get some of God's ministers to show the people the truth. Pray for us, that we may contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, be wise as serpents, yet harmless as doves. Mrs. Isaac Davis.

Fitzwilliam, Mar. 16th.

From Bro. E. Barron.

Bro. Grant:—With the love of God in my heart, I want to let you know how I get along. Although I have had a very hard time for a few months past, the word of God has been my study; not to argue upon, but to learn the truth, as it is in the book of God. And how precious it is, when we understand it aright. My prayer is that all God's children may come to the light as it is taught by him. What a strong tide there is against it in the world; and how hard for man to admit that he is not right, because father and mother taught him that it was so. Such may be honest, but are wrong. This was my case; and when I heard the Advent doctrine, it was a hard pill to take. And why was it so? Because Paul says, the word of God is "quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Glory be to God for the word as it is.

Woodhull. E. Barron.

From Bro. H. McClary.

Bro. Grant:—Will you give place for a few extracts from "Peter Cartwright's* Autobiography"? He says on page seventy-four, in 1804:—

"I was sent to the Kentucky district. We had a little book concern. We had no 'Missionary Society,' no 'Sunday School Society,' no church papers, no Bible or 'Tract Society'; no colleges, seminaries, academies, or universities. We had no pewed church, no choirs, no organs; in a word, we had no instrumental music in our churches anywhere. The Methodists in that early day dressed plain, and attended their meetings faithfully, especially preaching, prayer and class meetings; they wore no jewelry, no ruffles; they would frequently walk three or four miles to class meetings; they would go thirty or forty miles to their quarterly meetings, and think it a glorious privilege. The Methodists in that day would stand up and face their preacher when they sung; they kneeled down in the public congregation as well as elsewhere when the minister said, 'let us pray.' There was no standing among the members in time of prayer, especially the abominable practice of sitting down during that exercise was unknown among early Methodists. Parents did not allow their children to go to plays or balls; they did not send them to dancing schools. If the Methodists had dressed in the same 'superfluity of naughtiness' then as they do now, there were very few even out of the church that would have had any confidence in their religion. But oh! how have things changed for the worst in this educational age of the world. There was little or no necessity for preachers to say any thing against fashionable, superfluous dressing in those primitive times of early Methodism; the very wicked themselves knew it was wrong in the members of the church, and spoke out against it. The moment we saw members begin to trim in dress after the fashionable world, we all knew they would not hold out." H. McClary.

New Phase of the Papal Question.—The Paris Temps, without vouching for the truth of the statement, says, on authority of private information from Rome, that the Pope, after announcing his intention to the Catholic world in a solemn encyclical, is to address a letter to the Emperor Napoleon, proposing to deliver over to him as Grand Vicar the States of the Church, comprising the provinces which Italy annexed pursuant to royal decrees, and which annexation the French government originally disavowed. The motives of the Pope for taking that step are the danger menacing the temporal power and his unwillingness in spite of his weakness, to abandon the "patrimony of St. Peter" to the revolution. And as it cannot defend by itself the possessions secured to it by the two founders of the Carlovingian dynasty, the papacy has no alternative but to leave them in the hands of the successor of Pepin—the sovereign of France. The original giver would thus resume, until better days come, the guardianship of those possessions, and as the Pope claims to be the spiritual Vicar of Christ, so the Emperor Napoleon would become the temporal Vicar of the Pope.

Ordination.—According to appointment of the Ecclesiastical Council, called for ordaining to the work of the ministry Mr. S. H. Pratt, son of Henry Pratt, the ordination service was held in the Second Baptist Church, Springfield, Tuesday evening, Aug. 7th. The order of exercises was as follows: Reading of Scripture and prayer by Rev. Mr. Averill, of Holyoke. Sermon by Rev. C. B. Crane, of Hartford, Conn., from 2 Cor. 4: 2,—"Commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." Ordaining prayer by Rev. Mr. Jennings, of Westfield. Charge to the candidate by Rev. Dr. Ide, of Springfield. Benediction by candidate.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 21. The United States officers are still receiving ovations everywhere from the Russian Government, merchant princes and the populace. The Emperor has honored them with the review of 50,000 of the Guards.

The Russian Ambassador at the German Bund has been recalled.

The Polish exiles in Eastern Siberia revolted; thirty-five were killed and the rest captured or dispersed.

Athens, Aug. 9. Advices from Candia state that the Christians, being refused reforms, rose in arms, displaying the standards of the three protecting Powers of Greece, and proclaimed their independence. The Governor treats them as rebels, and has sent for Turkish reinforcements.

Vienna, Aug. 21. The King of Hanover, who is here, is advised that Prussia demands his abdication. The King is an old blind man, and is willing to abdicate in favor of his son. The Queen is using every effort to secure succession to her son, but Prussia will give no such assurance.

Cholera is making ravages at Bremen, Pesth and Nicholsburg, and among the wounded soldiers at Vienna.

Paris, Aug. 20. It is denied on authority that the Empress of Mexico, who is here, has threatened that Maximilian will abdicate when the French troops are withdrawn from Mexico. It is also stated by authority that her mission to France is to ask assistance of the French forces in Mexico, prior to their evacuation of the country, to quell insurgents.

Paris, Aug. 21—A. M. It is rumored that a treaty has been made between Prussia, Austria and Bavaria. A report is also current that the Czar of Russia has taken formal steps toward the negotiation of a treaty of alliance between Russia, France and Austria.

Berlin, Aug. 22. Peace is concluded with Bavaria and Hesse Darmstadt. Bavaria cedes the Northern District to Prussia and pays her thirty millions of florins. Darmstadt cedes to Prussia Hesse Hamburg and the exclusive right to garrison Mentz, but retains Upper Hesse, which joins the Northern Confederation. The Prussians are beginning to evacuate Bohemia. Their withdrawal will finish by Sept. 15.

Paris, Aug. 22. The Patrie of this afternoon says Napoleon will cede Venetia direct to Italy.

Pesth, Aug. 22. After the conclusion of peace Austria intends appointing a responsible conservative Hungarian ministry. The Diet is to be reopened in September.

Athens, Aug. 18. The Turks have commenced hostilities against the Christians in Candia. Several consulates, especially those of Holland, Sweden and the United States, having suffered much damage, have protested. The insurgents, 25,000 strong, hold important points.

Paris, Wednesday evening, Aug. 22. It is said that the Empress of Mexico has failed in her mission, Napoleon having, it is understood, refused to grant assistance of the French troops prior to their evacuation of Mexico to quell the insurgents.

In connection with this statement a report is current, with some degree of credibility, that the Emperor Maximilian will soon return to Europe.

News by Atlantic Cable.

Paris, Aug. 22. The Patrie of this afternoon says that the Emperor Napoleon will cede Venetia, as handed over to France by Austria, direct to Italy, to be held as part of the kingdom of Victor Emmanuel.

Florence, Aug. 23. The Austrians continue to remove national relics and objects of art from Venice; 2000 Italian prisoners have been released.

Berlin, Aug. 23. All defensive measures of Switzerland are discontinued.

Vienna, Aug. 23. The feeling in Austria is peace for the present, but war in the future to re-establish her power in Germany.

The Decline of the Papal Power.—It is idle to suppose that the recent brief but decisive war in Europe will confine its results to the political condition of the nations which have engaged in it. While France has lost her dictatorship and sunk into one of the many co-ordinate powers, while Austria loses her influence in the west, and Russia suddenly finds a powerful nation between her and the rest of Europe, none of these has lost so much as the Papal power, which has suffered the greatest disaster of all. Not a single Catholic nation in Europe can be pointed out as a firm ally of the Pope. France, we have already shown in former articles, cares nothing for his temporal, and believes to-day more in the philosophy of Voltaire than the religion of St. Peter. Spain is orthodox, but the government is weak, and is governed by men who detest war for an abstract principle. Austria has lost her power on the Peninsular, and the sentiments of her Hungarian population will not allow her to exercise a temporal influence in spiritual matters; meanwhile the poor priests at Rome are left to depend on Heaven and Napoleon as their only protectors, while the former gives victory to the "infidels," and the latter refuses to intervene and save the faithful. In the future disposition of Italian affairs the voice of Prussia will be quite as potent as that of France has been. She will not forget the service which Italy has rendered her in absorbing the attention of a large part of the Austrian army, and it is not too much to expect that the Italians will be left to choose such a form of government as they may prefer. What then will become of the Pope and his temporal power? Italy can no longer contain him, for the recollection of Cardinal Antonelli and his despotic conduct is still fresh in the minds of that people, and there is no other part of Europe where the Pope, as a temporal potentate, would hardly be received, even as an exile. The only alternative for the Papal power is to ally itself with the democracy, and exist as it does in the United States. Then it will have nothing to hope or fear from kings, and it will have to depend on its own merits for support.

The latest correspondence from Europe informs us that the long expected crisis in the Papal affairs is at hand. M Drouyn de l'Huys has, it is said, addressed a dispatch to the Roman government, informing them that the 15th of September was the date irrevocably fixed for the withdrawing of the troops from Rome, and that the Holy See would have to come to an understanding with the Italian Government on financial affairs and on the political situation; and the last foreign dispatches state that the negotiation is now going on.—Jour.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Aug. 16. A Toronto (C. W.) special says 3000 volunteers have been ordered to Fort Erie to watch the movements of the Fenians at the Buffalo picnic. The volunteers manifest a very mutinous spirit, a part of them refusing to obey the order. Inadequate pay and bad treatment are the ostensible causes of their action. Three gunboats have arrived at Toronto and others are expected.

Aug. 23. An Ottawa dispatch says Canadian troops are moving continually, and Gen. Michel, who has temporary charge of affairs during the absence of the Governor General, now en route to Europe, is actively engaged in inspecting the Provincial defenses. A considerable force is at Cornwall, another at Thorold, and there are gunboats on the St. Lawrence.

Aug. 24. Vera Cruz correspondence of the 13th say some 300 French troops sailed for France that day. When Tampico was captured all of Mejia's division, which was sent to reinforce the garrison, turned over to the Liberals in a body on the surrender. A general removal of Mexican officials is going on, and Frenchmen put in their places. The Police Department is also being reorganized. Mazatlan was still fiercely besieged by the Liberals on the 6th of July. The Liberals were very strong in the vicinity of Jalapa. Desultory and indecisive fighting continued throughout the country.

The Herald's Washington correspondent says he has excellent authority for stating that Jeff. Davis will be released on bail or parole soon, holding himself amenable to the process of the Court, which is expected to dispose of his case in October.

One hundred and forty-one cholera cases were reported at St. Louis for the twenty-four hours ending at noon, Friday, forty-seven of which were fatal. The Board of Health have appointed three physicians in each ward, to visit daily every house in their respective districts, furnish medicine to all poor people, and enforce the sanitary measures adopted by the board. Tents will be erected in different parts of the city for the accommodation of cholera patients, and every house, street and alley in the city will be thoroughly disinfected.

Sixty-seven deaths from cholera were reported at Cincinnati Thursday.

The deaths at New Orleans in the twenty-four hours ending on Friday numbered twenty-seven.

One fatal cholera case is reported at Baltimore, the victim being a young man who recently arrived there from Cincinnati, where he contracted the disease.

There were eleven new cases of cholera in New York Thursday, and twelve cases and four deaths in Brooklyn.

The Chicago papers, now that the cholera has fairly made its appearance in that city, assert that the disease has prevailed there ever since the early part of June, but that the physicians, to avoid creating a panic, have called it by a milder name. The condition of the river, which has become a stagnant bayou at that point, is assigned as a principal cause of the virulent outbreak of the pestilence.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 27. The official mortality report from seventeen cemeteries for the week ending Friday give a total of 1156 interments, 916 of which were by cholera. From the cemeteries which failed to report (which includes the City Cemetery) it is estimated that there were actually about 1300 deaths from cholera during the week. No report has been received for Saturday. The Sanitary Commission report that cholera has ceased as an epidemic in the 3d, 4th, and 6th wards, but this is not confirmed by medical authorities.

Napoleon Outflanked.—A letter from Paris says that the omission of any allusion to France in the speech from the Prussian throne is keenly felt there; and further, that while the French papers had said that the maintenance of the territorial integrity of Saxony was due to Napoleon's mediation, the King of Prussia attributed it to the request of the Emperor of Austria, and that the general effect of the recent continental policy has greatly lowered Napoleon in the eyes of constantly increasing opposition, and also in the opinion of his most devoted supporters, who cannot assign any reasons for his mistakes.—Journal.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 580. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

Far from God by wicked deeds,
Wrecked, and helpless and undone,
A gentle voice just then I heard,
That bid me to the Savior come.

With trembling, fear, remorse and shame—
Who art thou, Lord? I cried;
Ah! then I saw it was the Lamb;
'Twas Christ the Crucified.

I saw him hang upon the tree,
And felt that I had nailed him there;
Can mercy linger still for me?
O, can I his free pardon share?

'Twas for such sinners as thou art,
I left my Father's throne;
Then come, now give to me thy heart,
And thou shalt be my son.

When I to him my will did yield,
A full surrender then did make,
What peace and joy my heart did fill,
And then aloud his praise I spake.

My God, to thee my life I owe,
For all thy love to me so great,
And may my actions always show
The ways of sin and death I hate.

Since thou hast saved me from my sins,
And taught my feet the way to go,
I'll seek the perishing to win,
That they thy boundless love may know.

And when Thou shalt in glory come
To take thy weary ones to Thee,
May I with them be gathered home,
To reign with Thee eternally.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER NINE.

Bro. Grant:—I spent the month of July, just past, principally in the Canton of Neuchatel, laboring as the Lord seemed to direct in fields already broken, and visiting some new places. The 13th of July I returned to Chaux de Fonds, having received a telegraphic dispatch from Bro. Maccaud, of that place, informing me of the death of his wife, and requesting me to attend her funeral.

Madame Francoise Isaline Maccaud was sick at the time of my lectures at Chaux de Fonds. Her husband who attended and who embraced heartily the doctrine of Christ's speedy coming, invited me frequently to his house, where I had several interviews with his wife. I conversed freely with her upon the glorious events we expect so soon, which so cheered her heart that death lost its sting, and she bade adieu to earth and fell asleep in the blessed hope of soon waking, in the morning of the resurrection, to immortal life. She conversed much upon the subject of regeneration, through faith in Christ and baptism; but it being impossible for her to be baptized, as it was to the thief on the cross, she believed that the blood of Christ was sufficient for her salvation. She desired me to consecrate her little daughter, three weeks old, to the Savior. Friends were accordingly invited, and after singing and prayer I followed the example of Jesus (Matt. 19: 15).

It was a solemn occasion, the first of the kind in that city; but the ministers of the place consider it a great scandal that the usual ceremony of christening, according to the Catholic usage, was dispensed with; and prophesy that the blessing of God will not attend the child. Some of the ministers have tried to convince the people that it is a crime for them to hear me and receive me into their houses, which seems to make the people generally more anxious to hear. It is, however, in their power to close churches and other large places of public assemblage against me. I could obtain theatres, if able to pay one hundred francs an evening, but that is impossible. The same enemy works here to hinder the dissemination of important truth as in other parts of the world.

It was the dying wish of Sister Maccaud that I should officiate at her funeral, and her husband's wish also. Here in Switzerland it is established by law that a funeral service that takes place at eight o'clock A. M., can only be attended by a Catholic clergyman; at eleven o'clock, any Protestant minister out of the established church may officiate; the hour of one o'clock P. M. belongs exclusively to the National ministers; and in the evening only the Jews may bury their dead. We of course performed the solemn ceremony at eleven A. M., and had services at the house, where we spoke from 1 Cor. 15th chapter, and at the Cemetery from Rev. 14: 13. I spent several days there at that time, preaching every evening, and conversing during the day with many on the great truths pertaining to the kingdom of God.

Sunday, the 22nd July, I attended another general conference near Locle, which was a meeting of interest. Several of the German Baptist brethren, having become much interested in the doctrines pertaining to the coming and kingdom of Christ, and desiring to do all in their power to spread abroad this light, wished me to visit them again and speak to them. Several of our brethren were present from Locle, Chaux de Fonds, and Fleurier, as well as several German ministers. I preached A. M. and P. M., and afterward a committee of nine was appointed for the purpose of appointing meetings for free religious discussion, recording such discussions, and using every means possible for the dissemination of the truths of the gospel of the kingdom. Another conference is appointed for the second Sunday of this month. We returned home from Locle by way of Fleurier and St. Croix, walking over the mountains and conversing on the way, very weary, to spend a few days, and do much necessary writing, and rest a little, preparatory to another tour.

During my last visit to Chaux de Fonds, I was requested one evening to give an exposition of Rev. 17: 8–11, which I did. Thinking that it might interest some of the readers of your paper, I herewith send you a sketch of it.

By the scarlet-colored beast of Rev. 17th, I understand the government of the city of Rome, from its foundation till the end of the world; and by the seven heads, its different forms of government. Rome, founded by Romulus several centuries before the Christian era, was, according to historians, governed first by kings, seven in number, viz; Romulus, Numa Pompilius, Tullus Hostilius, Ancus Martius, Tarquin the Elder, Servius Tullius, and Tarquin the Superb. It was this Tarquin to whom a woman, unknown to him, presented herself with nine large books, that she called the books of the Sybils, and asked him if he would purchase them for a certain sum. Thinking them too costly, he refused. Some time after she presented herself again before him, and asked the same price for six volumes that remained, saying she had burned the three others. The king sent her away the second time. This woman, whom no one in Rome knew, returned the third time, and declared that she had burned three more of those large books; but she demanded the same sum for the three that remained, and her tone was so menacing and terrible that the king dare not refuse her the price demanded. May we press as strongly the present monarchs to buy the eternal truth of God, that they and their people may be saved.

This kingly government I consider the first head of the beast. The second head was Consulate, the government being in the hands of two Consuls, of which the first were Brutus and Collatin. The third was Dictatorial, the power being in the hands of a Dictator, who could only hold his authority six months, though it was absolute while it continued. The fourth was Decemvirate, Rome being governed by ten men called Decemviri. It is true that after its fourth form the government became again Dictatorial, under Sylla, Sertorius, and Julius Cæsar; but we cannot consistently call it, after its fifth change, the fifth government, as it was not a new form of government, but a return to the third or dictatorial form. The fifth head or government was the Triumvirate, composed of Mark Anthony, Lepidus and Octavius, the last of whom, after the famous battle of Actium, became emperor under the name of Cæsar Augustus. Luke 2: 1. Then appeared the sixth head or Imperial Pagan Rome. The Revelation of Jesus Christ was given to John in the isle of Patmos, where he was banished by the Emperor Domitian, A. D. 96 (1st chap. 9th verse).

Five of these governments were then fallen; one, the Imperial, then was; and the seventh, which was to succeed it, was yet to come. We ask, what succeeded the Imperial government in the city of Rome? The answer of history is, the Papacy. When did the Papal government rise to mighty power and subject emperors and kings of the earth? History answers, in 606, when Phocas gave the title of universal Bishop to Boniface III. Then this power had become the seventh head, the monarch of monarchs. Rev. 13: 5 gives its time of continuance 42 months—1260 years. If we add to this 606, we have 1866—the present year; and we see that the temporal power of the Papacy has ended. What comes next? The Revelator says (17th chap., 11th verse), "And the beast that was, and is not (a repetition of verse 8th, by which symbolic language we are taught that from beginning to end there is a continuation of the Roman government under different forms), even he is the eighth, and is of the seven." As we have reached an important period, the completion of the seventh head or the end of the Papal government, let us consider what is the eighth power that must succeed. We take the responsibility of giving it as our opinion that it is the Italian National government, under King Victor Emanuel II. The beast ends as it began, a kingly power. It is the same beast. It is another change, but as we said of the fifth change, it is another but not a new form. Now we will show by history how Victor Emanuel is "of the seven"; that he is of ancient Italian royal and papal blood.

It was about the year A. D. 1000, that in the division of the vast kingdom of Burgundy, a valiant soldier, Otho William, recovered the sovereignty of Savoy, of which he was already governor. This Otho William descended from an illustrious race. His father was Adelbert, king of Italy, Marquis of Ivea, son of Beranger II., king of High Italy, sovereign of Lombardy and Milan, but despoiled by the German Hugo of that part of his sovereignty, and restricted to Piedmont, which Adelbert afterwards lost, also, with the title of royalty. High Italy then fell under the dominion of Germany. The descendants of Beranger and Adelbert never forgot their ancient heritage, never lost sight of it. For nearly nine centuries the feudal Germans overrun the kingdom of Beranger, but his race never ceased to regard their dear city of Milan, which they hoped again to enter. Humbert, son of Otho William, already powerful in France and Switzerland, advanced to the summit of the Alps, from whence he perceived the land of promise; but, as the great Hebrew chief, he was not permitted to enter it. His descendant, Oddon, had this privilege. He married Adelaide of Turin, of the House of Saxony, who brought him Piedmont as dowry, and by that means he returned to that part of his patrimony from whence his successors have ever since watched for the opportunity of seizing the rest.

In 1247, Thomas II., who reigned in Turin, obtained from the emperor Frederick II. the authority of Imperial Vicar for Lombardy; and in 1313, the emperor Henry VII., of Luxemburg, confirmed this title to Amedeus V., of Savoy.• But the German Cæsars had not then for a long time had more than a nominal power in High Italy. Milan, Cremona, Parma, Brescia, all the large cities, had escaped one after another from foreign rule, and become independent communes. Private lords occupied the rest of the country. The ancient, royal house of Italy passed ages warring with some, negotiating with others, to acquire some districts, some parts of provinces, that it was not always able to keep. But at last, in 1447, after a hundred and sixty years of domination over Milan, the family of Visconti became extinct, and the Milanese, thinking themselves free, proclaimed a republic.

Unfortunately they had counted without Francis Sforza, the husband of an illegitimate daughter of the last duke, who demanded his heritage, sword in hand. Milan recollected then the ancient royal dynasty, and comprehended the advantage of a reunion with Lombardy and Piedmont, of becoming the capital of a powerful kingdom, instead of vegetating under obscure and cruel tyrants. The deputies of the city and chiefs of the people proposed to the Duke of Savoy to incorporate Milan into his government.

At that time Duke Louis reigned in Turin, the son of Amedeus VIII., who was elected Pope by the Council of Basel, A. D. 1439, and who died at Ripaille on the borders of Lake Geneva, a simple hermit, on the 28th of Feb., 1452, after having exhausted all the pleasures of the world. This old warrior, who had been so bent on aggrandizing his Italian dominion, occupied the pontifical chair under the name of Felix V., when he received from his son intelligence of the Milanese offer. The Beranger blood boiled in his veins; the ardor of his early years returned. He sent the Duke instructions full of foresight and exhortations and promises of assistance to the end of the siege, if his conduct met the demand of the circumstances. But the son lacked the military spirit, the address and decision of the father; he was not equal to the emergency, but he had a strong party to deal with. Sforza, alone, though master of an excellent army, would not have been dangerous, but behind him were the strong republics of Florence and Venice, the Dukes of Ferrara and the Marquises of Montferrat. The House of Austria also, that even then coveted Milan, pushed Sforza, with whom she hoped to make a better bargain some day than with such a sovereign as Louis, with his dominions augmented by Lombardy.

During many centuries the House of Savoy had been occupied on the side of France, having full sovereignty over the present French Switzerland, Geneva, Vaud Bresse, Bugey, Valence, Die, and other provinces. We pass over the reigns of Louis XI., Charles I., II., Phillippe le Beau, and Charles III. The last four were unfortunate reigns. Three of the monarchs died at the age of twenty years. The unfortunate Charles III. found himself reduced to the single city of Nice for refuge. But the genius of Emanuel Philibert was equal to the necessity of the time. Placed at the head of the Spanish armies, and victor at St. Quentin, he recovered a part of his paternal domains, and obtained the hand of a daughter of France (1559). But seeing that Savoy must finally lose all that remained of French territory, he turned his attention to Italy entirely, and the crown of Lombardy was the only dream of his last days.

His son, Charles Emanuel I., espoused in 1584 the Infanta Catherine, daughter of Philip II. By the disposition of a diploma of the emperor, Charles V., regulating the succession of Milan, dated Sept. 12, 1549, the Infanta found herself, in regard to the House of Austria, its inheritor. Afterward the House of Savoy did not cease to claim its right.

The historian Pompey Litta says, on this subject:—"In the marriage contract it was settled that the first son of this union should inherit Milan, and with that and Piedmont, that he already possessed, should take the title of king of Lombardy. The first son died young, and the Court of Spain, dissatisfied with the promise, pretended that it did not extend to the second son." The Duke of Savoy complained to his father-in-law, who only answered with threats. Catherine, incensed to see herself and husband so duped, demanded, at least, the lieutenancy of the Low Country. Philip replied, that to confide to them these provinces would be like giving a wolf charge of a flock of sheep. Charles Emanuel bit his rein gloomily, when a mysterious communication awakened hopes in his heart.

This was the time when Henry IV. labored silently, with the faithful Sully, at a grand enterprise that cost him his life, and which has not been sufficiently dwelt upon by historians. Had it not been for the providential genius of Henry of Navarre, France already exhausted by civil wars would have fallen into the hands of Philip II. England, who owed her escape from invasion to a tempest, defended herself in her isles against the malcontents of Scotland and Ireland and the soldiers of Spain. Henry IV. designed uniting in one league all the menaced interests, and changing the political base of Europe by a war which should stop for centuries the strife and rivalries from which the people had suffered so much. This league comprehended France, England, Savoy, Sweden, Denmark, and the United Provinces of Holland, and its principal end was to unroot the House of Hapsburg from Germany, and isolate it in its Spanish domains from the rest of the world. But this famous plan, which absorbed the last fifteen years of Henry's life, was frustrated by his assassination, and the Duke of Savoy was not one of the least affected by his cruel death.

The seventeenth century was for the most part sterile for the House of Savoy, but its constancy was unshaken, though tried severely. But the happy reign of Victor Amedeus II. repaired many disasters. He obtained, by the treaties of Utrecht and Rastadt, Montferrat with Casal, the provinces of Alexandria and of Valence, all the territory between the Po and the Tenaco, Lomelline and the valley of Sesia, and the isle of Sicily with the title of king. It was a fine thing to become king; but the son of Beranger wished to be king of Lombardy, and his hereditary ambition was only the more stimulated. Still, Victor Amedeus found himself forced, at last, to change fertile Sicily for uncultivated Sardinia. He finally ceded the throne to his son Charles Emanuel III., who came nearer reaching the goal than his predecessors. He reigned two years over Milan.

The dominations of Spain and Austria had horribly impoverished and depopulated this fertile country. Charles Emanuel did much to repair the injuries that had been done. The Lombards believed they had reached the end of their sufferings. But at the end of the war the King of Sardinia found he had lost the sovereignty of Lombardy. Piedmont, after various fortunes and occupations, was incorporated in the empire of Napoleon I., with the rest of the Sardinian monarchy. Piedmont he gave to his brother-in-law, Borghese. In 1814, after the fall of Napoleon, it was occupied by foreign troops, and the House of Savoy, after an unhappy slumber of twenty years, found itself in the same political situation as at the close of the last century. But the young generation did not cease to labor for the reunion of the provinces, and first of all of Lombardy to Piedmont. The heir of Lombardy, Charles Albert, with the nobles of Lombardy, and the military elit of Piedmont, dreamed of a kingdom of Italy upon the expulsion of Austria. This premature Lombard-Piedmont conspiracy ended only in disaster and suffering; but it revealed the disposition of the country, and showed the route that must be followed in future.

The events that have transpired in Italy since 1848 are fresh in the minds of all. When Victor Emanuel II., son of Charles Albert, came to the throne, the famous law of Siccardi was proclaimed. (See Thrilling Narrative, pp. 214, 215.) By virtue of this law, the Vaudois of Piedmont became for the first time citizens, and religious liberty was granted to all. The temporal power of the Pope is already taken away, and by a late decree all houses and establishments pertaining to ecclesiastical orders are suppressed. The war for Venetia is now being prosecuted, and we look for the time to come very soon when Rome will be taken and become the seat of the eighth head, and Italy a united kingdom under Victor Emanuel, whom we have proved came of royal Italian and Papal blood. But as Jesus is soon to take all earthly kingdoms for the fifth universal monarchy, his reign must be short and end in ruin. In this faith, your brother,

M. D. Czechowski.

For the World's Crisis.

"CONSISTENCY, THOU ART A JEWEL!"

Several weeks since, we were visiting a friend in a town quite a distance from home. On Sabbath we accompanied her to church. The minister took for his text, 1 Pet. 5: 4,—"And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." He spoke well of the office of a shepherd, and of the flock, as applicable to Christ, who says, "I am the good Shepherd," and the church, the saints of God. He spoke of the reward to be given to the faithful shepherds who feed the flock and care for its wants, at the appearing of the Chief Shepherd. His remarks were excellent on this point; but the one to which we wish mainly to draw your attention at this time was this: "I often hope that I may be among the living when Jesus comes, that I may in a moment be transformed into his likeness!" Again, "I often think when I lie down at night, Perhaps Jesus will come to-night at the midnight hour!"

Now these all sounded excellent, and we might truly be justified in believing that when the Chief Shepherd appears, he will receive a crown, as one of those who "love his appearing." Our friend, who by the way loves the "blessed hope," was much pleased with the sermon, and thought her pastor had the right feeling in regard to the coming of Jesus. She said that she had never conversed with him on the subject, and did not know how he stood related to it. This was perhaps hardly as it ought to be, for her pastor had been there a year, and it was a little strange that nothing had been said to him in respect to the glorious hope of soon seeing Jesus.

I told her that on the morrow, when we called on him, I would draw him out, and see just where he was. This might seem uncalled for by some, as they would consider the sermon sufficiently definite to evince his position. But we sometimes find ministers who will preach the judgment as near, and that Christ may come at any time, who at other times will teach the conversion of the world prior to his advent. So we cannot always rely on the declarations made in the desk.

When we called the next afternoon, after conversing on various topics, I referred to Mrs. Palmer, and her labors, and this led to a talk on faith; he not endorsing her views,—first believing, then having; he must know he had salvation before he could believe it. Of course I justified Mrs. P.'s position, because it is Bible: first, believe on the evidence of the sure word, that God pardons, justifies, cleanses, when we place ourselves on accepted ground, when we comply with the terms required, and that the knowledge derived from an actual realization of the grace received, is given by the witness or testimony of the Holy Ghost, after the act of faith. When I know that I have a thing, I do not believe that I have it. Knowledge is beyond faith, and is the result of saving faith in Christ when applied to grace received.

I next spoke of Mrs. P.'s last editorial in the "Guide," "in which," said I, "she shows herself as almost a 'timest.' She has before spoken out very decidedly respecting her belief in Christ's soon coming, but in this article she is more definite, and speaks of this present year as being one that has long been regarded with interest by expositors of prophecy, as being probably the time when the days of the Papacy would be ended. She also mentions other expositors who have regarded 1867 and '68 with interest; and while she discards the idea of knowing the 'day and hour' of Christ's coming, she clearly expresses her own belief that he is near to come, personally, as he went away, and to establish his kingdom."

This drew him out. He exploded at once. Said he,

"We know nothing at all about it! The prophecies are all dark and intricate, and can not be understood. I don't believe Jesus will come for thousands and thousands of years! I believe it is a sin to inquire into these things. The fact that they have been setting the time for Christ to come ever since the apostles' days, shows that we can know nothing at all about it."

"True, the dates and events connected with Jesus' coming were to be closed up and sealed till the 'time of the end,' so that it is not strange if they were not understood in past times."

"That is just what I believe; they were to be sealed up till the end of time, and therefore can not be understood."

"But it reads that the words were to be sealed up until the 'time of the end,' and that during the 'time of the end' many would run to and fro, knowledge increase, and the wise should understand. Christ told his disciples how that, by the fulfillment of certain events and signs, they might know when he was near, even at the door."

"I don't believe anything about it. Those signs have no reference whatever to Christ's coming. There is not an event in that chapter that has a fulfillment this side of the destruction of Jerusalem."

"I can hardly believe, Bro. B., that Jesus Christ came in the clouds of heaven with all his holy angels, and gathered his elect from the four winds, at the destruction of Jerusalem."

"That is because you take the prophecies literally. Talk about the stars falling being a sign of Jesus' coming! Just as though a dozen meteors falling were the stars of heaven falling to the earth!"

We spoke of the improbability of the fixed stars falling as a sign, and referred to the star that guided the wise men. We would liked to have preached him a short sermon from the text—"We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn"; but he probably does not believe in women's preaching!

We thought of the scripture,—"No prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation," and of the holy men of old searching and inquiring diligently respecting the manner of time, which the Holy Ghost through them did signify, when it testified of the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that was to follow; which things even the angels desired to look into. Did they "sin" in thus searching, inquiring, and desiring to look into the time and coming of Jesus Christ? They were not condemned for this spirit of inquiry, but were told that it was not for themselves they were thus inspired to write, but for those who were to live amid the events which they foretold.

One question we forgot to ask the minister. How do you harmonize your remark yesterday, that you often hoped you might be among the living when Jesus comes, so that in a moment you might feel the transforming power of the Holy Spirit, changing you into the likeness of Christ, with your present declaration of faith, that Jesus would not come for thousands and thousands of years? Do you expect to live beyond the age of Methuselah? But the thought came too late, and how he would harmonize the two statements, remains a mystery. Truly, "Consistency, thou art a jewel!"

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?"—Ps. 15: 1.

Wherever we find the expression, "tabernacle," we are reminded of a temporary building, that is calculated to answer only for a time, until something better and more lasting is required; but whenever we read about a hill or mountain, we think of something that is firm, durable, and that will remain. In a tabernacle is but little worth and durability, and in course of time will lose all its worth; but a mountain has its inexhaustible treasures.

The earth, then, in its present state, as a preparatory abode for God's children, is compared to a tabernacle; but the earth renewed, designed to be an everlasting dwelling place for God's children, is compared to a hill or a mountain, as the German has it, that never shall be removed. Thus upon the question, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle?" we would answer, the church militant, in its probationary state on earth; and upon the question, "Who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" (German, mountain), we would answer, the church triumphant on the new earth, which is promised to the saints as their inheritance. To this I will add the following piece of poetry (original) on the fall and redemption.

In Eden's fair bower, in the morning of time,
Enjoying the blessings so pure and divine,
Our parents the first in the image of God,
The sod of fair Eden in pleasure they trod.
So Adam and Eve now received from God's hand
The enjoyment of Eden, that beautiful land,
Were living in glory, so happy and free,
No anguish to feel, and no sorrow to see.

The earth with its riches they then had possessed,
Ere pride had desired, and actions transgressed,
But O! what change when they tasted the food
Of the tree which gave knowledge of evil and good.
The deed was now done, and forever was cast
The lot of mankind, from the first to the last;
The fruit was now taken of which the Most High
Had said, "If thou eatest, thou surely must die."

Thus sin, the dread monster, awoke in its life,
Men now were addicted to envy and strife;
And Satan the tempter, "the father of lies,"
To gain a possession, how swiftly he flies.
Then busy in sowing the tares among wheat,
And teaching his followers to lie and to cheat,
To curse and to swear, to get drunk and to kill,
The one his designs, and the other his will.

At last by the Father of light and of love,
The Savior was sent from the mansions above,
To conquer the devil, deliver from hell,
And now through his blessings all things are made well.

The world now enshrouded in sorrow and wo,
Are saved and restored by the Savior; and so,
In Adam the first the creation deplored,
That which is in Adam the second restored.

TEMPERANCE.

Temperance folks should be temperate, consistently so, be what they profess to be. Friends, let your prize tales alone, your sickly, fascinating, sentimental readings,—the light, the foolish, the frivolous. Let this light bread alone, keep to your business—firmly, resolutely—turn not aside to the right or the left to dabble nonsense. Your work is a good one, great, mighty, noble, Godlike—infinitely important; how can you, how dare you, come down, or lower the standard? Keep to your work; fill up your sheet with plain, pungent, soul-thrilling, good, common-sense articles, spiced richly with the fire and hammer of God's word. Make the Bible your text-book, faith your shield. Take the helmet of salvation, the sword of the spirit; pray always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, watching thereunto with all perseverance.

This linsey woolsey business—mingling up foolish, silly, nonsensical love tales, novels and romances in your temperance papers, is wicked, turning aside from the great work, helping Satan, bowing the knee to a corrupt public taste, while you profess to be doing God's work. The command is "be temperate in all things," and especially is this temperance required of those "striving for the mastery!" You profess temperance—temperance is your motto, and still you are very intemperate; by publishing these light, foolish novel stories and prize tales, to poison the minds of the rising youth.

These light, popular, miscellaneous readings are doing a work of death, destroying the souls and bodies of millions! They are the devil's workshop!—his watchword—his stronghold. And you, friends, professing temperance, push these cars of Satan. These novel tales inserted in your temperance papers, so called, lead to intemperance the most dangerous and soul-ruinous! They dissipate the mind, corrupt the taste, sear the conscience, harden the heart; and then, not unfrequently, resort is had to the wine-cup, the rum, the brandy-bottle, or lager-beer shop!

Beloved, the Lord open your blind eyes, unstop your deaf ears, that you may see and realize your folly and madness; while thus professing to do good, you "scatter fire-brands, arrows and death!" God cannot, will not, smile on your labors while you cross his path, cater to a corrupt public taste. "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things."

"Can a man take fire in his bosom and his clothes not be burned?" Keep to your work, friends—turn not aside to the right or the left. "Look straight on."

"Then bring this horrid traffic to the light,
Let men behold the gory, tragic sight,
Let patriots, moralists, and christians too,
Denounce this source of every crime and woe."

Religion must do it; the religion of the Bible—pure, undefiled. Nothing short of truth and love will remove the great curse of intemperance, rum and tobacco. God, hitherto, has not been duly honored in the struggle against the mighty foe, the hydra of Hydras.

God is a jealous God. Hark! "I am the Lord: that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images." Reforms, to be successful and permanent, must be Bible, dictated by the Holy Spirit! Let the church arise, put on her beautiful robes of praise and salvation; go forth to battle. Let God's faithful servants pour in the liquid flame of holy writ, giving God the glory, and there is hope, glorious hope! All these secret combinations, prize tales, novel stories, funny anecdotes, foolish talkings and jestings, exciting loud laughter—it is vain, foolish, nonsensical, blasphemous! God abhors it! "Jesus I know and Paul I know, but who are ye?" See Acts 17: 13, 15, 16. God will not give his glory to graven images.

Hark! "Not by might, not by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." It is breathing on the dry bones the breath of life. Nothing short of God Almighty's power will root the hellish monster. Look at Ireland, where God in mercy has turned and overturned, by his all-conquering grace, poured out his Spirit gloriously; grog-shops have vanished like the dews of the morning before the scorching rays of the sun: houses of dissipation, degradation, ill-fame and debauchery, have been converted into Bethels, houses of prayer, praise and salvation. Let revivals like this sweep over the land—the work is done; Satan falls as lightning from heaven! God speed the day.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

"THE CHRISTIAN UNDER BONDAGE TO TOBACCO."

My brother, I wish to show you that your habit is at war with religion, name and thing.

1. Religion bids you be cleanly and gentlemanly in demeanor. But tell me, is the common use of tobacco a cleanly and becoming practice? Snuff it, and it makes your nose a mere dust pan; chew it, and it soils your lips and teeth, and makes your mouth a nauseous distillery; smoke it, and it pollutes flesh and breath, earth and air; makes the chest a sort of volcano, and the mouth a crater venting smoke and fire. Is this gentlemanly or decent? When Governor Morris returned from France, a Doctor of Divinity, notorious as a smoker, said to him: "Mr. Morris, do gentlemen smoke in Paris?"—"Gentlemen," said Mr. Morris, "Gentlemen, doctor, smoke nowhere!"

2. Religion bids you crucify fleshly lusts, and exercise self-denial. Is not this a hurtful lust, a vile appetite, an unreasonable self-indulgence, totally at war with purity and self-denial? Says Dr. Harris, "tobacco is a lust of the flesh, an agent of Satan, by which he is now destroying more bodies and souls than by any other agent." Said a good man, "My tobacco is a lust, which is getting the mastery of me; I will drop it, if it takes the flesh from my bones." He did so. Brother, will you do likewise?

3. Religion bids you as a steward of God, to make a proper use of money.—Your habit is expensive, and worse than useless. If you are well, this poison can do you no good; hence every cent you spend for it, is a waste which dishonors God; it is "money for that which is not bread." If you have used it for some time, a child can show you that you have squandered an enormous amount of money,—so much needed to raise drooping hearts, and fill the world with light and love.

4. Religion bids you use time, strength, and life, to the best purpose. The Earl of Stanhope maintains that the victims of this narcotic, spend one twentieth part of their time—two years of forty—in its indulgence. What right have you, my brother, to waste years or months in this manner? Is this redeeming the time? What right have you to enfeeble your body by this emasculating drug, when its energies in full force should be given to God, and the good of our perishing race? What right have you to use a drug whose tendency is completely anti-vital, and which may cut off your life ten years, or twenty?

5. Religion bids you give the world a good example. It has been said that ninety-nine victims in a hundred, acquire this habit from infectious example. Be this as it may, the example of men in your position is unspeakably fearful and pernicious. It has power to sweep multitudes of young men down to death. "Father," said a little boy, "why do you chew tobacco?"—"Because I like it," was the reply. The son chewed it, learned to love it, and thus ruined his health, and embittered his whole life with disease. I saw a little boy, with a cigar, puffing like a steam engine. "Why do you smoke?" I inquired. "Father smokes, and I'll smoke, Sir," was the reply. The cry on every hand is, "cure fathers, cure church-members, cure men of influence; when they drop it, we will follow suit."

6. Religion bids you be a thorough temperance man. Rum and tobacco are twin demons. Tobacco creates an unnatural appetite, which craves alcoholic stimulants, and the gratification of this appetite leads to drunkenness. Smoke-shops and dram-shops, sots on rum and sots on tobacco, have usually been identical; and temperance can never triumph whilst tobacco intoxicates the million. Come, my brother! no longer declaim against alcohol, whilst a slave to tobacco; no longer make yourself the song of the drunkard by intoxication on your quid or pipe.

7. Religion bids you to be pure and Christlike. To use tobacco is defiling, is demoralizing; it is a heathenish abomination, and you cannot respect yourself as its victim. Do you think you please Christ by using it? Do you think Christ would have allowed John to lean on his bosom, had he used it? Are you willing that this should be on your grave stone:—"Here lies a Christian who cut short his life, by the use of tobacco"? Is this epitaph becoming for a christian?

8. Religion bids you to be entirely devoted to God. The use of this pernicious drug forbids this. If you used it early, and have used it long, it has become with you the KING OF APPETITES. You love it better than honey, or milk, or bread, or the choicest fruits. It is usually the last thing which engages your heart at night, and it is among the first things which claim your fond regards in the morning. Birds may fill the air with music, flowers may load it with perfume, the sun may surpass himself in the beauty of his brightness; but you cannot enjoy the one or the other, very much, nor God, their glorious author, until you have appeased a giant appetite, which has dominion over you. "Be not deceived," my brother. Think not that you love God with all your heart, when this idol has such supremacy in your soul. Talk not of aspirations "for holiness," "full assurance," and "sanctification," whilst in bondage to this peculiar lust, or whilst your piety is so much raised or depressed by the narcotic power of this deceptive drug. Break, my brother, from such "bonds of iniquity." "Take hold," christian-like, and help us to wake the church to this great and fearful evil.—Prophetic Watchman.

TWO MEALS A DAY.

The subjects of diet and rest are intimately connected. That of diet properly has three departments; relating to the quality and quantity of food to be taken, and the proper times of taking it. In this as in everything else relating to health, an important consideration is, the due relation between labor and rest. If a man labors too many hours with his hands, his body is weakened; and if he persists in it, he is soon prostrated, worn out, and deprived of power to work at all. If he labors incessantly with his mind, his brain is wearied, and on continuance it becomes diseased; he finally loses the power of thought and reasoning—he becomes insane. If too much labor is placed upon the stomach, it is afflicted with pain, or throws its burden on its ever sympathizing friend, the brain, which causes a headache; if this course is persisted in, it results in dyspepsia, or a disability to digest food, just as the power of the body of mind or any other part of the system is destroyed by over-labor. When the body is wearied by toil it recuperates or is refreshed speedily, if there is no functional or local derangement. With the mind free, the stomach clean, and the circulation good, a speedy recovery of strength and energy is quite a matter of course. But if the stomach becomes wearied or diseased, it throws the affection to all parts of the system, and disqualifies them for aiding in its recovery; therefore the highest regard should be paid to its condition. The stomach is the supply depot—the commissary department of the system, and if this fails, all must fail.

Considering it evident that the stomach should have sufficient rest as well as any and every other part of the body, the inquiry arises, When should it have rest? The answer seems natural: When the other parts rest; that is, in the night, or during sleep, when it need not be diverted from its rest, or even exercised through sympathy by the activity of the other parts. It is certainly doing great injustice to the stomach to put its burden of labor upon it just as the body is prepared to rest; and so give it no time of perfect quiet to recover from the effect of its labors.

It is often said that "experience teaches a dear school;" but in some respects it is worth the cost. All theories must bow before experiment; and in my own case I know that I was not prepared to judge satisfactorily in regard to theories on this subject until I tested the matter by experiment; though I must confess that my habits of eating did not seem to coincide with the best reasoning on the subject. Every one has, beyond doubt, felt a sensation at the stomach in the morning, described by some as an "all-gone feeling," a gnawing, which has almost universally been considered a clamor of the stomach for food. When this feeling comes on the person is weak, longs for breakfast, cannot work before eating. This is taken as an evidence that it is occasioned by a want of food; and so I always thought. But now for the test. Since I have entirely abstained from eating suppers, this feeling has entirely ceased; I have not once felt it. Others, working no harder than myself, complain of this feeling, and long for breakfast, while I could wait another hour without inconvenience. From this I must conclude that this sensation is a call of the stomach for rest, and not for food. Sometimes after hard labor I have felt a similar sensation in the evening, and if I had given way to it could have eaten a hearty supper; but it invariably subsided after resting awhile. From all this I am well satisfied that rest, both of the stomach and of the system generally, is not regarded as it should be; and that none can safely trust their feelings and appetites while in an exhausted or over-worked condition. Now as it takes some hours for the stomach to digest a meal, it is absolutely necessary that the last meal should be a number of hours before the allotted time of rest. What particular hour is best may not be directly agreed upon by all; habit may still have much to do in fixing the choice. But for myself I should choose to eat nothing later in the day than half-past one.

But some find it difficult to practice self-denial and abstain from food in the afternoon, after laboring. The demands of the stomach seem so imperative that they are almost irresistible, and it is hard to convince them that their feelings deceive them. In changing from three to two meals a day, the labor should be lighter in the afternoon, and thus allow for the force of habit. However erroneous or bad the habit, we feel inconvenience at first from the change; and if we labor too hard while undergoing such a change it may prove injurious to health. But to those who think food necessary in such cases as above referred to, I would ask, did you ever work so hard that you could not lie still when you retired, but would toss from side to side in a restless, wakeful state? Or did you ever see a child play so hard that it could not go to sleep? Surely you have. Did you ever think for a moment that because the body would not lie still under such circumstances that therefore it needed more exercise? that you ought to get up and work till you could lie still? Certainly not; but you might just as reasonably have so concluded as to suppose that an over-worked, restless stomach must be quieted with more food. This restless state of the body would for the present be gratified by exercise; but it would prove injurious in the end, as it would only be another draught upon an already overtaxed system. So of the stomach; give it rest enough; be sure you do not overtax it; then, and not till then, think it will call for food.

If you work your horse very hard, and give him all he will eat immediately after his labor, you expect he will be sick. Or if he is taken sick unexpectedly in the night, your first inquiry is about his evening's feed. Why not look to the same cause in yourself under the same circumstances? How often does a child play till he is literally exhausted, and then rush to the table to still the cravings of his tired system, eating perhaps three times as much as he should eat, and when he is taken sick no inquiry is made in regard to his eating, but the doctor is sent for; the symptoms denote fever; a "regular course" is prescribed; and if the child is strong enough to bear the double burden of food-clogging and drug dosing and so recovers, the skill of the doctor is praised, and the "bill" paid without a query. And this will be the course pursued, and nervous prostrations, dyspeptic skeletons, and broken-down constitutions will abound until people stop to think and reason, and learn that sickness must have a cause; that an overworked stomach cannot be healthy; and that an unhealthy stomach cannot build up a healthy system.—Health Reformer.

WAITING.

I am waiting, ever waiting,
For a brighter, better day,
Just beyond the clouds and shadows
That surround my lonely way;
For a day of light and gladness,
Such as earth has never known,
When in equity and justice
Christ shall reign on David's throne.

All the prophets of past ages
Saw its brightness from afar,
And in words sublime have spoken
Of the peace and glory there;
Now they sleep in those green valleys
Which in weariness they trod,
But they'll come with songs of triumph
To the holy mount of God.

Now the world is full of suffering,
Sounds of woe fall on my ears,
Sights of wretchedness and sorrow
Fill my eyes with pitying tears;
'Tis the earth's dark night of weeping,
Wrong and evil triumph now;
I can wait—for just before me
Beams the morning's roseate glow.

Friends I've loved are from me parted,
Soon I hope to greet them all,
Some beneath the turf are sleeping,
Waiting there the Master's call,
Some are bearing still life's burdens,
Struggling on through storm and gloom,
But the same blest hope sustains us
Of that bright, eternal home.

I am waiting, hoping, praying
For Messiah's glorious reign,
For I know he'll rule in justice,
Right and truth will triumph then.
Worldly pleasures cannot win me
While I wait for that bright day;
Worldly splendor cannot charm me
While its light beams on my way.

WHO ARE ISRAEL?

BY H. D. WELLCOME.

"The seed of Abraham according to the flesh," say some.

"They that are Christ's, whether Jew or Gentile," say others.

Now both of these are correct in one sense. It is true that the natural seed of Abraham are frequently denominated Israel. It is also true that all who are in Christ are called Israel. But in our inquiry, "Who are Israel?" we mean who are the Israel to whom the promise is given of an eternal inheritance? Who are the lawful heirs with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob?

That there is a national Israel, and a spiritual Israel, we think is evident from various scriptures, but one especially is direct to the point. "For they are not all Israel which are of Israel; neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed."—Rom. 9: 6-8. This needs no comment; it is very explicit, and so clear, none need mistake its import.

In perfect harmony with the above is Paul's language to the Galatians (3: 7-29). Here the apostle expressly declares that to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. "He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." This clearly shows that all nationalities and distinctions of class, are lost in Christ; the Jew according to the flesh stands on the same platform as the Greek, and all become the children of God, and heirs of the promise, by faith in Christ Jesus.

But the question may be asked, What promise is referred to by the apostle? The eighteenth verse tells us what promise is meant. "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise." The inheritance promised to Abraham is the subject of the promise. It cannot mean, as some teach, that it is the blessings received under the gospel dispensation; for after becoming the recipients of those blessings, the individual is then an heir to the blessings embraced in the promise; and not until justified by faith can he become an heir. The promise, then, is of a future good, and must refer to the everlasting inheritance promised to Abraham and his seed. This fact, however, we can more fully establish by reference to Acts 7: 1-5.

Stephen speaks of Abraham's removal into the land of Canaan, and then says, "And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child." This expressly declares that the land promised Abraham, not for his seed only, but to him, and his seed, for a possession, was not fulfilled, for he never inherited so much as a foot of it; and all he ever owned was the field of Machpelah, for which he paid money to the sons of Heth.

Paul, in his epistle to the Hebrews, confirms the testimony of Stephen. "By faith, Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise." Of him then sprang a multitude, who died in faith, not having received the promises, but confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth, thus declaring plainly that they were seeking another—a better, even an heavenly country. Included in this country are all the children of faith in Christ Jesus, who has become the mediator of the new testament, or will, so that by death he might redeem those who were heirs under the first testament, and secure to all who are called in Isaac, the son of promise, that eternal inheritance. Heb. 9: 15.

"In Isaac shall thy seed be called." He stands as the representative of the new covenant, the son of the free woman; and those who are the children of the free woman are the children of faith, and with Abraham shall be blessed. These are Israelites indeed; the name Israel as properly belongs to them, as to their predecessor who wrestled with the angel until he prevailed and had his name changed from Jacob, which means supplanter, to Israel, i. e., a prince of God; "for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." "The original is a beautiful antithesis,—'Seeing thou hast had power with Alehim, the Almighty Creator, how much more shalt thou overcome anashim, feeble and mortal man.'"

This name truly and rightfully belongs only to the spiritual Israel—those who by faith prevail with God. It was in this matter as it is under the gospel dispensation. All who acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Son of God are denominated christians in a general sense, yet, in a definite and specific sense, none are truly christians in heart, except those who have been justified by faith in Christ, who are renewed by the Holy Spirit. And these, compared with the multitude of nominal christians, are few in number,—a "little flock."

Just so with the Jewish people. In a general sense they are denominated Israelites, for they are destitute of that faith by which an Israelite indeed prevails with God. And the number of those who have this faith are few compared with the many who are Israelites according to the flesh, and are denominated by Paul as "a remnant according to the election of grace." The rest are blinded. The vail is over their heart, and not until they turn to the Lord will this vail be removed.

Isaiah refers to this remnant: "Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved." We all know what a remnant means. It is the last remaining portion of an article; small compared with the rest. It is evident that the national Israel are referred to by the multitude as the sand of the sea, and the remnant gathered out of them are the spiritual Israel, the election in Christ, the Jew who is one inwardly, whose circumcision is not of the flesh, but of the heart; and the rest are blinded because they "look not to the end of that which is abolished," and there see Christ. And this blindness will remain upon the Jewish nation as a whole until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; and then all Israel shall be saved; not all of national Israel (a remnant only of these are saved), but all of spiritual Israel, the children of Abraham by faith, whether Jew or Greek. Not the children of the flesh, these are not accounted for the seed; but those who, as Jacob was, are the children of promise; those who are called in Isaac; the election; the Jew inwardly; these constitute the true Israel who are heirs of the promise, and shall inherit the "eternal inheritance."

The middle wall of partition was thrown down by Christ, and since then the Jew and Gentile have stood upon the same level; one has no advantage above another; all are regarded alike; and all who have been reckoned among them as the heirs of Abraham, or will be in the future, are adopted on precisely the same principle as the Gentile. "If they continue not in unbelief, they shall be grafted in again to their own olive tree."

For the World's Crisis.

THE ROCK PETER.

"And I say also thee, That thou art Peter; and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

The name Peter in the Greek is Petros; which signifies rock; consequently, the phrase "this rock," relates to, or is identical with, the noun Peter, which immediately precedes it. And because of this, the Romish church have adopted the strange heresy that the church is founded on Peter as a man, instead of on the faith which he professed, and which the name was designed to represent, as appears from the account of Matthew. He says that "when Jesus was in the coasts of Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Who do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say, John the Baptist, some Elias, some Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answering said unto him, Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God. And Jesus answered, and said, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."—Matt. 16: 13-19.

Now, it is apparent from this account of Matthew, that the faith confessed by Simon was the reason why Christ addressed him as Peter; so the name is expressive of the faith confessed to. And the confession was in answer to the question, Whom do ye say that I (the Son of man) am? So the answer is equivalent to saying that he, as the Son of man, is the Christ, the Son of the living God. And as this confession of faith made the name Peter, or rock, applicable to Simon, it follows that the name denotes the faith confessed to. Hence when Christ says, in the same connection, "Upon this rock I will build my church," it can only mean upon Peter's confession; which confession is peculiar to every individual member of Christ's church. It was the preaching of this faith that was the key by which Peter admitted three thousand into the church on the day of Pentecost; and thousands among Jews and Gentiles afterward.

Upon this Rock, said Christ, I will build my church; consequently, his church is that which gives prominence to this faith. And there is no half-price tickets, nor no extra-price tickets, which will admit the holders into his everlasting kingdom. Venders of such, therefore, are either impostors, or sellers of bogus tickets under the deception of impostors. The true ticket bears Christ's endorsement, and entitles the holder to an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom, by conquering death and hell at the resurrection of the just; for then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, O death, where is thy sting? O hades, where is thy victory? The gates of hell shall not prevail against it; because, they who believe in the Son of God will conquer hell at last. WM. HOBBS.

PRAYER.

"And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us; and if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask we know that we have the petition that we desire of him."—1 JOHN 5: 14, 15.

To be in a position where we can ask of our Father in heaven and obtain what we desire of him in this our fallen, helpless condition, subject to the enemy so much greater than we in power, and whose agents are so numerous, is truly a blessed position. Who would not desire it, yes, sacrifice for it? Well, this boon is ours on certain conditions. Let us examine the evidence a little.

In John 15: 7, we read, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Here we see the condition is to abide in Christ and to have his words abide in us. Christ in this place compares himself to a vine, his Father as the husbandman, and we as the branches, and says, "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me."

Who would expect to find much fruit upon a branch of his grape vine, if he was in the habit of breaking it almost off as often as it got partly healed? All know that it is the sap coming from the root that causes the fruit to grow. Just so with the child of God. We must not grieve or quench the Spirit of God which flows from the root of the "olive tree," by disobedience to any of his commands, which are exceeding broad, if we would avail ourselves of that power that is higher than we in our trials, for the apostle John says (1 John 2: 6), "He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked." So we see it is implicit obedience that keeps the road open (so to speak) between us and our Father in heaven. Then again we may "ask what we will," and obtain. Let us examine this point of the subject according to the word of God, for we do want to know how to pray and have it do some good, and not have so much form and so little power. And we believe we are not left in darkness about this matter.

We will now turn to Rom. 8: 26 and read: "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." By these texts we understand that when an individual has been through faith thoroughly ingrafted into the true vine, and by obedience keeps there, he partakes in a measure of its nature; and as a matter of course his will and desires are in harmony with the will of God. And the experience of christians goes to prove that when God has some special blessing he wishes to bestow upon his children, they often feel a spirit of supplication for that very thing. This comes by the Spirit of God making supplication for us, because he knows what is the mind of God. Then we get the things we have asked for, and we mount up on wings of faith nearer the bosom of our Father in heaven, feeling where our strength lies. Then and there we add to our faith "knowledge," experimental knowledge; and after we have obtained this implicit confidence in our Father, we ever feel like saying, "Not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done!" knowing that he knows far better than we what is best for us. Our petitions then will always be offered in that way.

But prayer is not only a privilege for our own particular benefit in times of need, but it is also enjoined upon us as a duty for the benefit of others, not even excluding our enemies; and if it does not bring God's blessing upon them, it surely will on us, by keeping our hearts tender and susceptible of the love of God. But the saints are commanded to pray one for another, that they may be healed. Jas. 5: 16. This, it is evident, is not exclusively for the sick, that is, physically so, but for the healing of them spiritually also; for we read (1 John 5: 16), "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it. All unrighteousness is sin, and there is a sin not unto death." It is evident that the apostle does not refer to but one particular sin that is unto death, as the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, spoken of in Mark 3: 28, but to a certain class of sins. For if he referred to only one sin that cannot be forgiven, then he also had reference to only one sin that can be forgiven; for the expression is alike in both cases.

We will now proceed to examine how we may know the sin unto death; and first we will call the reader's attention to the law that was a shadow of good things to come. Here we find the Lord commanded Moses that when any of the children of Israel had erred, and had not observed the commands which the Lord had spoken unto Moses, or if aught had been committed through ignorance, then the priest should offer a young bullock for a sin-offering, and they were forgiven; for with an eye of faith they looked upon that bullock, or goat, and saw that it pointed to Christ who was to come, to take their sins upon him, he being the antetype of that sacrifice, and taking the penalty of the law and letting them go free. But the soul that did aught "presumptuously," whether he was "born in the land, or a stranger, the same reproacheth the Lord"; that "soul was cut off from among his people," because he had "despised the word of the Lord" and had "broken his commandment"; his iniquity was upon himself. Num. 15th.

We will hear Paul's comment upon this subject. Heb. 10: 26 and onward;—"For if we sin wilfully after that we received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more a sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, . . . and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" But, we ask, what is this "knowledge of the truth"? Answer.—Experimental knowledge. And here again let Paul speak (Heb. 6: 8);—"For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame."

O how careful, dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, must we be not to knowingly and deliberately step out of the narrow way. Inasmuch as we prize eternal life in the kingdom of our dear Lord, let us walk in the light, for by so doing it will increase, and we shall not only secure to ourselves eternal salvation, but present salvation, by asking and having God answer. But by the above we do not wish to convey the idea that backsliders can not return to their Father's house. Nay, verily, for the Scriptures are full of invitations to them to return. But it is those that have been far advanced in the christian's course, and that sin against great light and experimental knowledge, and that trample under foot the faithful monitor, the Spirit of God, which is trying to woo them from their wickedness. Such we may not pray for. But we may pray for those who have not sinned unto death, and God will give them life. O, what power there is in the prayers of the righteous. Truly, they avail much.

NAMES WRITTEN IN THE BOOK OF LIFE.

"And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."—REV. 17: 8.

From this passage many infer that the names of some people were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world. In this I agree with them. But, perhaps, we may differ in explaining what those names are. Some seem to think they are names that their parents gave them. But, were this true, then the parents of every child must be infallibly inspired to give it the same name that was recorded in the book of life from the foundation of the world; and, it might be justly added, that the relation and neighbors must also be inspired, for the name of the child often depends upon the notions of some of them. But, as these relations are frequently very wicked and notionate, and often change the name many times, it seems to me there is no divine inspiration in the matter.

What looks clear to my mind is, that the names which were recorded in the book of life were the characters which God would save. And we are left to our own choice, whether we will, or will not, be of that character or name. That the word name does in Scripture frequently signify character, is plain from the following passages: "In Judah is God known; his name is great in Israel."—Psa. 76: 1. And God used the word in this sense when he spoke to David by Nathan, the prophet: "And I was with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and I have cut off thine enemies out of thy sight, and I have made thee a great name."—1 Sam. 7: 9. "Proud and haughty scorner is his name, who dealeth in proud wrath."—Prov. 21: 24. Those wishing to investigate this farther, please see Exodus 33: 18; 34: 5, 6, 7; Phil. 2: 9.

Now, if God has left it to our choice to be of the name, or character, written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, it depends upon us whether we will be saved or not. It is not whether God will save us by having us elected from all eternity, but whether we will be saved. No person is under any fatal necessity to be a reprobate. It is our choice. God forces no man to be saved; but from blood-stained Calvary he offers you full salvation. Though your sins rise up before you like a mountain, they will be all washed away with one drop of Jesus' blood.

So, dear reader, do not be deluded on to ruin by the thoughts that you are doomed to be saved by having your name written in the book of life from all eternity. The blood of Jesus only can save you. Oh! then, sinner, come to Jesus. You are a candidate for eternity. If you but faithfully, perseveringly, serve the Lord, you will be elected for the assembly of the blessed, where you shall forever enjoy the sweet company of the blood-washed saints, and will participate in the sublime pleasures of the new earth. And then with the angels of glory you shall ever be delighted with the sweet presence of Jesus, and perpetually transported with the heart cheering smiles of the Supreme Being.

FEEDING THE FLOCK.

"Feed my lambs" . . . "Feed my sheep." John 21: 16. "Feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Acts 20: 28.

"Hast thou a lamb in all thy flock
I would disdain to feed?
Hast thou a foe before whose face
I'd fear thy cause to plead?"

He does not visit his flock—carry the lambs in his bosom. Here lies the difficulty, the mischief, the sad defect and drawback in his ministrations as a pastor, a watchman, on the walls of Zion. Things go at loose ends, dilapidated. The sheep wander from the fold, the the lambs are sickly, they languish, they perish! "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones. . . . It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish." Matt. 18: 10, 14.

No minister can preach to his people as he ought, unless he knows the state of mind and heart they are in. How is it possible, without this knowledge, to administer reproof, rebuke, comfort and consolation, divide to each, a portion in due season? And how is he to know their state and standing except by pastoral visitation,—unless he goes from house to house, weeping, bearing precious seed, pouring in the oil and the wine? Such a pastor is a pastor, and only such; prepared to "feed" the flock of God, to carry the lambs in his bosom, to reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and doctrine, preach as he ought to preach. Wo be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! Should not the shepherds feed the flock? What should we think of a shepherd set over a flock, that would doze while the sheep and lambs were exposed hourly to ravenous wolves—beasts of prey?

He preaches good sermons,—excellent, eloquent, forcible, practical;—still there is a falling-off; the wheels drag heavily. Pastoral visitation is a part, and, may we not say, the most important part, of the ministerial office. This one omission of frequent, regular, stated visitations, from house to house, retards the whole machinery, renders your ministrations comparatively inefficient.

Pastoral visitations are half the battle. And what is still more to be regretted, when a pastor does visit his flock, he uses partiality, visits those in high life, and passes by the humble poor, those especially needing consolation, the voice of prayer and christian sympathy. Thus he changes the order of things, the gospel order. If any class of persons are to be overlooked or omitted in pastoral visitations, it should be the rich, the aristocracy, and not the lowly, the poor and the afflicted ones, the tempest-tossed, for whom Christ especially sympathised and for whom he shed his precious blood.

Our Savior visited the abodes of the poor, he took lodgings with the meek, the lowly, those in humble life. Is it so now? Do the ministers, bishops and elders at the present day follow the example of our blessed Redeemer in condescending to men of low estate? Do they not rather pass the poor of this world and seek the wealthy, the rich in this world's goods—where they can feast sumptuously, receive the honors of a full and luxurious table? go where they can have their warm Sunday dinners prepared by toiling servants on the Lord's day, deprived of sanctuary privileges? Thus the poor are neglected and grieved. Ministers pampered and flattered by rich and aristocratic church-members are tempted to wink at their sins, their covetousness, pride, fashion, folly and intemperate habits. By thus winking at the sins of the rich, the church becomes corrupt, gradually departs from the purity and simplicity of the gospel, like that of Rome, till the whole head is sick, the whole heart faint. "From the sole of the foot, even unto the head, there is no soundness in it." Is it not so, beloved reader? "We speak the truth in Christ and lie not." "My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons, . . . Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?"

It is lamentable, truly, to witness the neglect of one of the most important and soul-saving duties, viz., pastoral visitation. Expect a church to prosper, thrive, become a light-house, the salt of the earth, without a regular, systematic, faithful, practical oversight of the under shepherd? When was there such a thing? As soon expect the sun to beam forth brilliantly when thick clouds obscure the sky.

Says an excellent writer:—"Running about one's parish, praying and talking with the people, is the best exercise, the best gymnastics, a preacher can have. He needs it after the study of the forenoon. It is one of the best preparations for the Sabbath; it furnishes him with refreshment of body and incitements of mind, and with new illustrations for the pulpit. It secures him good influence over his people. He may at first have repugnances to it, but let him overcome them, and he will find his head, his heart, and body refreshed and invigorated for his work.

"Where," said a plain spoken elder to his pastor,—"where did you get that sermon last Sunday morning? We have not had one with more juice in it for many a day."

"Well," said the pastor, "part of it came from your house, part from neighbor V. B—'s, and part from Widow R—'s; and one of the best hints in it came from your little boy Frank. I picked up that sermon in one day of pastoral visiting."

He was a wise pastor. He had not a very large library, and his family increased faster than his books. But the book of human nature is never exhausted, and so he set out often, and went from house to house, studying his people. And by the firesides of his flock he gathered up the suggestive materials for his richest practical discourses. This is the secret of a long and lasting ministry.

The pastor who studies his Bible and human nature, never wears out, for his materials are inexhaustible. His books may be few, but every day's life of one of his people adds a new page to that endless volume—the book of human experience. How shall a minister of Christ understand that pregnant volume without studying it? And where can he study it better than by the firesides and sick beds of his flock? If our people need our preaching to help them to live, we as certainly need their lives to help us.

We know a beloved pastor, who spends at least one half his time in visiting his people, to know what are their trials, temptations, joys and sorrows, what their progress in the divine life, what their mental and spiritual food. He takes a peep into their libraries, on the center-table; examines the dailies, weeklies and monthlies; marks their tendency on the mind, the heart, the life.

One of the saddest mistakes—and a prevalent one too—is the neglect of pastors to see and know what is read in families—on what kind of moral, mental, and spiritual food, parents and children are feasting—whether good or bad, poisonous or otherwise.

Books and papers are preaching, will continue to preach, either salvation or damnation. Our whole nation is being moulded by the press this very day. And, rest assured, God holds his ministers responsible for the consequences of this "light bread," to the utmost of their office and ability to discern between the precious and the vile.

"Mark! some are sowing the seeds of pain,
And of late remorse in a maddened brain,
And the stars shall fade and the sun shall wane,
Ere they root the weeds from their soil again,
Dark will the harvest be!"

He ascertains whether the little ones are disciplined on the gospel plan, trained in the way they should go, exclusively Godward; whether or not the family altar is kept burning brightly night and morning; whether or not family government is orderly in every department, and every member of the family, old and young, is receiving his portion of life, light, and salvation. The faithful, godly pastor lays the ax at the root, probes the heart, comforts the feeble-minded, supports the weak, reproves the unruly.

He keeps constantly a keen, watchful, prayerful eye over the flock, carries the lambs in his bosom, urges every member to higher and holier attainments, entire consecratedness, sanctification of soul, activity in the divine life. Every one on the church list—male and female, old and young—has a field to cultivate assigned. "To arms! to arms!" is the watchword for the battle-field. On, on, to conquest or death! What the result of this eagle-eye business, this harnessing-up? Every thing moves on swimmingly, prosperously, healthfully, vigorously. There is not a sickly sheep in this whole flock,—not one. The cause of God prospers. The audience of this faithful pastor increases; his labors are blessed in the building-up of Zion, in the conversion of sinners.

Very many of the choicest materials for sermonizing are gathered during his regular, systematical pastoral visitations. From these personal, social, prayerful, domestic interviews, he is duly prepared to meet every case, give each his portion in due season. "The elders which are among you," says Peter, "I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed. Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory, that fadeth not away."

"Sow by all waters and fail not,
Thou who the seeds of truth art sowing!
Lift up thy voice, cry and spare not,
Thou who the trump of truth art blowing!
Great is thy trust, truth to divide."

D. F. NEWTON.

☞ Jerome said, he never went to meals without some part of the Scriptures being read—never to sleep till some about him had read them to him. Luther gave himself with great ardor to the study of the Scriptures. Bishop Ridley says:—"The wall and trees of my orchard, could they speak, would bear witness that there I learned by heart almost all the epistles; of which study, although in time a greater part was lost, yet the sweet savor thereof, I trust, I shall carry with me to heaven."

SCOFFING.—To a young infidel who scoffed at christianity on account of the misconduct of some of its professors, Dr. [illegible] said, "Did you ever know an uproar made because an infidel went astray from the paths of morality?" The infidel admitted he had not. "Then," said the doctor, "you admit christianity is a holy religion, by expecting its professors to be holy; and thus, by your very scoffing, you pay it the highest compliment in your power."

EXPOSITORY PREACHING.

More truth and a greater variety of it can be exhibited by expository preaching than in any other way. Hence it should be more common among us. How rarely do we find ministers in the pulpit taking one of the inspired gospels or epistles and explaining and enforcing it in course? They rather select a single verse, deduce from it some doctrine or proposition, and prove and enforce that. It is otherwise in Scotland. There expository preaching is popular, and in no people does "the word of God dwell more richly" than in the people of Scotland.

"An' sure, why wi' ye no gie us mere meat an' less cake o' Lord's days too?" said a good Scotchwoman to a young minister at the close of an evening lecture in a New England school-house. The same inquiry has doubtless arisen in the minds of many a layman as they have noticed the deeper impression made upon themselves and others by the simple expounding of the Scripture in an evening lecture.

Why does not our minister preach in this way in the pulpit on the Sabbath? In their love of this style of discourse, some have blamed the minister's notes, others his education at College and in the Theological Seminary, and others his vanity and ambition for fine writing, or his lack of plain common sense.

Many experienced believers, who diligently "search the Scriptures," have, doubtless, at times felt and thought much as the honest Scotchwoman did, though they would not venture upon such words. The truth is, many (and probably more than we commonly think) are more effectually benefitted by that mode of preaching which is usually called expository, or expounding of Scripture, than by any other which the minister of Christ can adopt. It has some important advantages, which, without disparagement of other methods of discourse, deserve, in these times, the especial attention of those who are called to "preach the word."

The following may be noticed: Expository preaching is obviously Scriptural. Other modes in accordance with the word of God, may be held in doubt by some, but this is clearly Biblical. No one ever questions this, for the Holy Scriptures are the acknowledged fountain of all sermonizing. Our blessed Lord and the apostles, in the examples given us of their discourses, appear to have made prominent the expounding of Scripture, as in the case of Jesus of Nazareth, (Luke 4,) and of Peter at the Pentecost, (Acts 2,) and of Paul at Antioch, and Thessalonica and other places.

Discourses, consisting chiefly of interpretation of Scripture, come directly without the intervention of argument to the understanding and conscience as the authoritative word of God, so that while doubt of the preacher's reasoning may blunt the edge of truth in other cases, all is, by this method, plain and forcible.

The "thus saith the Lord" precedes or follows so close upon the doctrine announced, or sentiment affirmed, that there is no room for the doubts of reasoning, no place for the darkness of speculation. The word spoken "is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword," because it is so manifestly "the word of God."

Expository preaching is eminently instructive. It affords the preacher distinguished facilities for presenting much truth within narrow limits; for making sharp thrusts upon many sides with many arrows, and scattering many healing balms in many directions, upon many wounded souls.

Its purpose is, to unfold and enforce in brief, several verses or chapters in their proper relations and connections with each other, and other parts so as to elucidate the meaning of the Spirit, and set forth the fundamental idea underlying the passage in hand, together with its kindred truths taught therein, and "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

By consequence, a great amount of gospel truth is usually compressed in such discourse. In fact, it is little less than solid matter, laid before the hearer in its native forms. For this style of preaching, some people have a strong preference. All like it in its measure. The good Scotchwoman thought nothing so acceptable. The finely written sermon of the "Lord's day" was "cake" to her, sweet and rich, but not sufficiently nutritious. It might be full of matter in the eye of the schools, but she did not "see it." She wanted the simple word of God, and "enough of it." The evening lecture gratified her, for it gave her substantial, nutritive food, without the condiments of other kinds of discourse. It was chiefly plain, solid meat, dispensed in a plain, unadorned way.

The pastor had thoroughly studied the Scripture in hand, first in the original tongue, then in King James' English, with all needful critical helps. Every word had been closely scrutinized; every shade of meaning carefully pondered, until grasping firmly the fundamental idea of the sacred writer, he arose to the mastery of the whole passage. He was "full of matter," and his heart burned within him for utterance. Words fell from his lips as if by inspiration, warm and glowing with the vitality of God's truth, and many said they never heard him preach so well.

Thus it is, expository preaching affords special facilities for casting light upon dark texts and elucidating "things hard to be understood," and for scattering much good seed within a brief space of time. It must needs be highly instructive, for its design is not merely to unfold Scripture, but to set forth much Scripture.

Many people justly love this style of preaching for its compactness and solidity of instruction. Let the preachers of our time use it with boldness and [illegible].—Christian Secretary.

THE CHILDREN.

Does your son or daughter enjoy religion? "No, but they are good children; I have them kneel with us and say the Lord's prayer." How often have I asked the question and received this answer. Whilst the thought would come, Is this not teaching children to have a form of godliness, and deny the power thereof? Do those children understand the meaning of the beautiful petitions our Savior taught his disciples?

Now I understand in those days (as with many others at the present), men loved to be seen of others as they prayed, and thought if they "used vain repetitions" they should be heard. Our Savior, it seems, said, "Be ye not like unto them"; but should say, Hallowed (or honored) be the name of "our Father"; to pray that his kingdom might come; to ask for the wants (temporal) of the day. Now how many of those children in our land are taught to ask for daily bread, or to believe if they were really hungry they would receive bread by praying to God for it?

Then the loving, Christ-like spirit of forgiveness next taught; how many who teach young lips to say, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us," would wish to have that petition granted? I believe if more of us understood that true spirit of forgiveness, and it dwelt richly in our hearts (towards all, not a part), and taught our children to pray, "God be merciful to me a sinner," it would be more pleasing in the sight of God.

Said Abraham, "O that Ishmael might live before thee!" My cry to my God, Abraham's God, to-day is, O that my children might live before thee. They are sinners, and need to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ with the whole heart, repent of and forsake sin, love God and keep his commandments.

There were two daughters in a family; the elder a singular, stubborn, self-willed child. She could not see the use in saying the Lord's prayer; whilst the younger was ever punctual to kneel and say her prayers, morning and evening. The mother used often to say, "Anna prays, and is a christian; but Sarah does not pray. By and by the Lord taught them both to cry for mercy. Said Anna, "Ah! I never prayed before; I thought I was a christian from a child."

O Sisters! it is not all our duty to teach our children to mock God with their lips, whilst their hearts are far from him. We need to feel like the mother of Zebedee's children. We go to meeting, say to our neighbors, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand"; when we are at home, what do we say to our children? Which do we love best? our own children, or others? Let us live our religion at home, teach our children to ask God for just what they need, and no more, and to believe they do receive when they ask, and shall have it.

Now, ye praying ones, those who believe God's promises, will you not specially remember my children in your prayers? We none of us are privileged with an opportunity of attending religious worship, only once in a great while; but I desire for me and mine to join in the hallelujahs round the throne.

SPIRIT BAPTISM.

I have read of late the remarks of one in answer to inquiries put forth by another, relative to the subject of baptism.

The author of these remarks holds that water baptism is not obligatory at the present day. His statement runs like this: If water baptism is essential to the new birth (referring to John 3: 5), it always was essential. It was just as much so in the days of the patriarchs and prophets, as to the apostles and other christians. We know that without the new birth a man cannot enter into the kingdom of God. Is then water baptism essential to this new birth? If so, neither Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, nor any of the "holy men of old" can partake of it; for we have no evidence of their using it, and yet we know that our Savior hath said: "Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God."

Let us put the subject in sylogistic form. Except a man be born of water he cannot see the kingdom of God. But Abraham, Isaac and Jacob shall be in the kingdom. Therefore they will have been born again, yet they were not baptized with water. He then goes on to say: The conclusion is to our mind irresistible that water baptism is not what Jesus speaks of in John 3d. What he speaks of is a fact, which was just as real and important in the days of Noah, Abraham, and the holy men of old, as in the days of Nicodemus. Art thou a master in Israel, and knowest no these things? Why blame him for ignorance of an ordinance that had no existence till after Jesus' death and resurrection. Tell us, ye advocates of the essentiality of water baptism, why our Lord blamed Nicodemus for his ignorance of a thing that had no existence, and hence could not be known at the time of his address to him. Ye masters in Israel, explain if you can this mystery. No man can enter the kingdom of God unless he is born of water and of the spirit. But Abraham and others will be there, though never baptized with water. So water baptism is not what our Lord speaks of to Nicodemus.

But he does not tell us what our Lord did mean in this conversation with Nicodemus. This same author says, in a pamphlet he has published upon the subject of baptism (p. 5) "It is the only way any soul of man can be in Christ, viz: a baptism of the Spirit, which is the 'essential baptism,' without which there is no life from the dead." Again on p. 11,—"It is the one baptism which secures the resurrection of the dead."

Let us look at this closely. If Spirit baptism is essential to secure a resurrection from the dead, it always was essential, just as much so in the days of Abraham as now. Without the baptism of the Spirit, no one will be raised from the dead, according to this theory.

Let us put this subject in sylogistical form. Except a man be baptized with the Spirit, he cannot be raised from the dead. But Abraham will be raised from the dead. Therefore the baptism of the Spirit is not essential to secure a resurrection from the dead, for Abraham was never baptized with it.

Was it Spirit baptism that Jesus meant in his conversation with Nicodemus? What he speaks of is a fact which was just as important in the days of Abraham as now; how could he blame him for ignorance of an ordinance that never existed till the day of Pentecost? Tell us, ye advocates of Spirit baptism; explain this if you can. No man can be raised from the dead unless he has been baptized with the Spirit. But Abraham and others will be raised, though they were never thus baptized; so Spirit baptism is not what our Lord speaks of to Nicodemus.—Prophetic Watchman.

CORRESPONDING EDITOR.

Our dear friend, Bro. D. T. Taylor, of Rouse's Point, N. Y., has been appointed corresponding editor of the "World's Crisis." We trust our readers will feel a new interest in perusing "our family paper," and will make still greater efforts to extend its circulation. Jesus is coming. Let us all do what we can to spread the glad tidings, that the people may be prepared to meet him, and receive him with a hearty welcome.

MISSIONARY WORK.

The time has fully come, we think, to make one grand effort to send the gospel of the kingdom to those who have not heard it. While slavery was prosperous, the doors were shut against us in the South; but now they are wide open, and the Macedonian cry comes with an earnest tone from many voices,—Come and help us. We learn that an interest is being felt in the South like the one exhibited at the North in 1842. Some are so greedy after the light on the time of the Lord's coming, that they will sit up up nearly all night to read on the subject. In view of this state of things, and the shortness of time, it was unanimously voted at a meeting of the Executive Board on Missions, held at our office in Boston, Aug. 28th, to send Bro. Wm. Sheldon, of Baraboo, Mich., and Bro. John Hook, of Concord, N. H., as evangelists to travel through the South, wherever the doors may open, to proclaim "the gospel of the kingdom" to all classes, irrespective of color or condition. We esteem these brethren as adapted to this work. They need only to be known to be loved. Should our brethren feel disposed to sustain them in this most important mission, as we have no doubt they will be glad to do, we think a great work will be accomplished.

Those who have friends at the South who would be pleased to see these men of God, and assist them in holding meetings, are requested to write at once and give what information they can on the subject. Let us all unite our efforts to give a faithful warning to the South, before our Savior appears. We hope to hear a hearty and ready response in favor of this glorious work. The time has come for action.

Further reports of missionary work will be given soon. As a people, we have reason to thank the Lord that an open door is before us to send out the glad tidings that our Savior is coming to set up his everlasting kingdom. If we do not improve the opportunity, will Jesus say, "Well done"?

WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.

Our last report extended to the close of Wednesday, August 22nd. Thursday was a rainy day, but our meetings were excellent. There was preaching in eight tents. Some twenty sermons were preached during the day, and much good was done. Backsliders were reclaimed and sinners converted.

Friday was very pleasant, and the weather continued fine till the close of the meeting. At 8½ o'clock, a general prayer meeting was held in front of the preachers' stand. It was a blessed season. The Spirit of the Lord was upon the people, causing deep heart-searching. Many seemed to be very anxious to be wholly consecrated to the Lord. Bro. Boutell preached a good sermon in the morning, and Bro. Hastings provided a rich feast to the saints in the afternoon, on works of faith. Many were exceedingly comforted. Bro. Decker preached in the evening on the time of the Lord's coming. He thinks he will appear next spring.

Twenty-two were baptized. The scene was a heavenly one. Among the candidates were a pair of twin young ladies, who are school teachers. We could not tell one from the other. We have never before seen two who looked so alike as these two interesting young ladies. Their actions were as near alike as their persons. Their religious experience has been just alike. We had the pleasure of leading them in together. Both shouted for joy when raised up out of the water, and the vast crowd on the bank of the river wept for joy at the sight, and praised the Lord. It was a heavenly scene.

Saturday. At 8½ o'clock another most excellent conference meeting was held. A large number requested prayers, and many received rich blessings. Bro. Stewart, from Philadelphia, preached in the morning on the atonement, and Bro. Himes in the afternoon on the punishment of the wicked, showing that the wicked will be destroyed. Bro. Munger preached in the evening. Forty were baptized to-day by Bro. Hastings. It was a heavenly season.

Lord's day was a most lovely one. It seemed as though our dear Savior was making it as beautiful as possible for us. It was like the very gate to paradise.—Nature presented her most pleasing smiles, while the saints rejoiced in the love of God. At 8½ o'clock, we met for our great and glorious love-feast. It was truly a love-feast. There were two hundred and forty testimonies in about an hour and a quarter. One could well afford to go many hundred miles for the sake of enjoying one such meeting.

At an early hour large numbers of teams could be seen winding their way over all roads to the camp-ground. By ten o'clock there was a vast crowd on the ground, estimated from eight to twelve thousand; and yet the very best of order prevailed. We never saw so many people together before for a day who behaved so well. This added greatly to the interest of the meeting. It was a day that will not be forgotten by those who spent it on the campmeeting hill.

Bro. S. G. Mathewson preached in the morning, showing that we are very near the great day of the Lord. A candid audience gave excellent attention. We had preaching in three places in the afternoon, by Brn. Hastings, Flagg, and the writer. There were two baptisms during the day. In the evening we had a most blessed communion season, when seven hundred and thirty-eight sat down to the table of the Lord. Thus closed the best campmeeting we ever attended. This was the decision of all upon the encampment, so far as we heard any expression of feeling. A large number were converted, and seventy were baptized.

We have never before seen such love and harmony exhibited as was daily seen during the campmeeting. None could help saying, See how they love one another. It looks like the preparation of the bride for the marriage of the Lamb. We might fill columns more with interesting items, but we forbear. We hope to receive reports from others who enjoyed the meeting. It was the happiest week in our life. Praise the Lord, O my soul.

"THE WORLD IS GIVING WAY."

Thus spake the Pope's prime minister, Antonelli, when he heard that Austria was obliged to give up Venetia to Napoleon. This Cardinal would not have made such a remark if he had not seen just cause for alarm. The Papacy has been noted for its self-confidence. When it begins to feel that its days are numbered, and to acknowledge it, we may be sure that the time of its overthrow is not far in the future. Praise the Lord for the bright light that is now shining on our pilgrim pathway.

When speaking on this subject, an able writer remarks:—

"The French troops are, by the treaty, to be withdrawn from Rome next month. After that—what? What but the end of things? Can Rome stand? Can the Temporal Power continue to exist? They are the pillars on which it has been supported; and though, in taking them away, provision be made for new props, is there not danger in the change, and doubt as to the strength and durability of the new arrangement?

But will the Emperor withdraw his troops from the support of the Pope? Will he not find some pretext for retaining them, or will be not seek for some substitute, or attempt to secure for his Holiness guarantees which will amount to the same thing as if the French troops were retained in Rome? The Emperor has kept to the terms and conditions of the treaty thus far, and there is no reason to b lieve that he will fail to consummate its provisions at the specified time. Had Italy been so foolish as to quarrel with him in regard to the cession of Venetia, a different face might have been put on things; but as matters now stand, in regard to all points in which the two Powers are jointly interested, and in regard to the general relations of France with Europe, we see no ground for a desire on the Emperor's part of departing in the least from the terms of the treaty, or of delaying a day in carrying out effectually its stipulations. It is possible that in withdrawing the Emperor will attemp to hold Italy to the agreement not to interfere by force of arms in the affairs of the States of the Church, nor to foment any revolutionary movements among the Roman people themselves; but it is not unlikely that in the present state of affairs Italy will be able to make liberal terms even on these points, and not be compelled to forego taking advantage of such contingencies as may arise in the future.

The prostration of Austria is undoubtedly the severest blow the Papacy has yet received—worse than that which enabled Victor Emanuel to remove his throne from Turin to Florence. Austria was really the only first class power in Europe which could be firmly relied on to support the Temporal Power in its critical hour."

We see no chance to avoid the conclusion that the temporal power of Papacy is about ended. Its dominion is taken away; hence we must be very near the coming of Christ.

INTERESTING NEWS.

To the student of prophecy, the following is a very interesting item of news. It is just what has been expected, and if carried into execution, will end the temporal power of the Pope:

"The Paris Temps, without vouching for the truth of the statement, says, on authority of private information from Rome, that the Pope, after announcing his intention to the Catholic world in a solemn encyclical, is to address a letter to the Emperor Napoleon, proposing to deliver over to him as Grand Vicar the States of the Church, comprising the provinces which Italy annexed pursuant to royal decrees, and which annexation the French government originally disavowed. The motives of the Pope for taking that step are the danger menacing the temporal power and his unwillingness, in spite of his weakness, to abandon the "patrimony of St. Peter" to the revolution. And as it cannot defend by itself the possessions secured to it by the two founders of the Carlovingian dynasty, the papacy has no alternative but to leave them in the hands of the successor of Pepin—the sovereign of France. The original giver would thus resume, until better days come, the guardianship of those possessions, and as the Pope claims to be the spiritual Vicar of Christ, so the Emperor Napoleon would become the temporal Vicar of the Pope."

For years, it has been evident that Napoleon has been anxious to bring about the very thing that is said to be now in process of accomplishment. He wishes to be a second Julius Cæsar, and control church and State; or be at the head of the civil and ecclesiastical power. These are eventful times, and we may expect more startling news soon. We are rapidly approaching the great day of the Lord. It is time for those to be ready who expect to be saved when Jesus comes.

"FIRST TIME WITHIN A THOUSAND YEARS."

We think but few are aware of the great and rapid changes that are transpiring in Italy, in relation to the Papacy. The ten divisions of Italy are hating the harlot that they have been supporting for centuries, and are now her worst enemies. Instead of supporting "the woman," they are giving "their kingdom unto the beast," and must soon blot out the Papal power.

The following is from the Boston Journal:

THE NEW ITALIAN NATION.—The cession of Venetia to Italy, and the contemplated withdrawal of the French troops from Rome, will make the unity of Italy complete, and for the first time within a thousand years will it be something else than "a geographical expression," which Prince Metternich once sneeringly called it. Although it will not immediately take its place among the first class powers of Europe, it will have no little influence in the future politics of that continent. It contains a population of from 25 to 26,000,000. Its soldiers have shown an amount of bravery and enterprise which could hardly have been expected of volunteers, called to face the Austrian veterans. It has Prussia, now one of the great powers of Europe, as its ally, yet situated from it at such a distance that no evil influences can result from undue political interference. Its connection with a great Protestant power cannot fail to have a salutary effect, as it will promote freedom of thought and equality, and Catholics and Protestants will learn to mutually respect and tolerate each other. Another advantage will be its emancipation from France. This Empire has, for a long time, exercised a kind of protectorate over Italy, and now there is a prospect of its being free to manage its own internal affairs. In a short time Rome, like the rest of Italy, will be in the hands of the Italians, for it is now affirmed that if no unseen event occurs the French troops will be withdrawn from Civita Vecchia some time next month. The greatest obstacle to the prosperity of this nation is the Clerical party, which will long exert a great influence, though unsupported by the civil power.

The monasteries throughout the whole of Italy are to be suppressed. Such a measure, dictated by the progress of the age, and the powers which now control the peninsula, cannot take place without a great deal of suffering, however beneficial it may be to the country. It will throw out into the cold unfeeling world thousands of men who are courteous and hospitable to the rich and poor, and who are totally unfitted to contend with the rude and jostling world. They dread this state of things, for the world has entirely changed since they left it. But what is a misfortune for them is a blessing to the nation, and in a few years when the great, indolent army of begging monks and friars have been put to some useful employment, or have died off, the country will be all the better for it. In many cases the national guards have already taken possession of their convents, and the holy fathers have been ordered to make an inventory of their property and send it to the authorities!

"THE SHINING LIGHT."

We have just received the above interesting work from the pen of D. F. Newton, editor of "The Golden Rule," author of "Home Thrusts, Home Thoughts; or, Much in Little," etc. It contains 408 octavo pp. Price $1.50. For sale by the author, 169 West 20th St., New York City.

We always expect something rich from Bro. Newton's pen, and in this, his last work, are many gems of thought. The work is in two parts. 1. "The Bible for great folks. 2. The Bible for the little folks and the great folks; or, the Bible in the family circle." It has several engravings. It is a good book for the family circle,—worth more than all the popular monthlies in the country. It is a production coming from a heart warm with the love of Jesus.

SALUTATORY.

To THE READERS OF THE CRISIS:

Brethren:—The sword is mighty, but the pen is mightier still. Its power for mischief, evil, or good, is marvellous indeed, and just as the heart is pure or dark are human words life or death. On him who wields this potent instrument rests a tremendous responsibility. Official capacity but heightens and intensifies it. And happy are the people when the penman uses his power wisely and well. We are here forcibly reminded of the words of Webster, who, when asked what was the greatest thought that ever occupied his mind, solemnly replied, "My responsibility."

By the action of the A. C. A., the writer is placed in a novel relation to the people who wait for "that last advent, long desired," and the important instrumentality alluded to is put into our hands in a new and hitherto untried capacity. At this post we shall endeavor first of all to do the will of God; second, to satisfy the demands of our own enlightened conscience; and third, to benefit and bless, please and instruct, our constituents and readers. We are confident that those dear brethren, who by their hearty and unanimous suffrages have chosen and elevated us to this office, overrate our abilities in this direction. More aware than any other of all our defects and infirmities, over which we often weep, a deep sense of unworthiness rests upon us; hence we have reluctantly accepted the fresh and altogether unexpected duty proffered us. But, relying upon the Master and the prayers of his people, we shall try to do what in us lieth, fearful all the while that the "great expectations" indulged in by our friends will not be realized. Nevertheless, come what will, we shall be true to the noble trust.

With no personal ambition to gratify, with no intent to prove "a thorn in the flesh" to any, we fraternally take our assigned place, a little lower down, beside our beloved veteran and senior editor, whom we shall still constantly recognize as "Editor in Chief." Our aim is to be a helper, to lighten his burdens, to share his toils. And while we may choose to do our own thinking, and neither of us surrender our manhood or honest, sincere opinions to each other in a truckling spirit, yet in a temper sweet and gentle, and fully understanding each other, we have hold of each other's hands, and are looking earnestly and inquiringly into each other's eyes, then out on the whitening fields, and on upward towards the crown. It will be easy to work harmoniously if Christ rules the heart, remembering it is for the sake of the best cause under the sun. More than ever are we ONE to labor in unity for the best interests of the dear church of God, whose humble servants we are. Brethren, please permit us to form our own judgments, to keep our independence, and do our own work. But give us your counsels. And we beseech you to pray for us more than you talk about us.

We enter this field at the eleventh hour. What an infinity of unmixed bliss is in store for a moment of tears, and trials, and toils! The Lord is at hand,—hence there is no time for any thing but work and love. We cannot with others fix our minds with exact definiteness on any stated month or year as the determined epoch of the Bridegroom's arrival. Lawful and proper it is to gather from the grand numbers of Daniel and John every jot and tittle of information which they and profane history may furnish relative to Christ's second coming and the season thereof,—nevertheless, the force of the inspired warning recorded in Mark 13: 33, cannot, must not, be overlooked or set aside. "Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time (kairos) is." Still we are compelled, after twenty years investigation in the line of these themes, to admit that the intervening years between this and 1870 are invested with an interest at once sublime and awful, and that should they go by and fail to bring the consummation, our little stock of knowledge relating to the termination of the prophetic periods will have been for the time exhausted. Then let us spread the glad tidings, —live for the happy day, and when it breaks the pen will be laid aside for the palm and the harp of song, and human responsibility will end in immortal and everlasting rest.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

Notwithstanding the daily papers of this city have been asserting for the last three weeks that "the cholera is on the decrease," it is a fact that it is steadily increasing, as the weekly reports of the Board of Health show conclusively. I have good reason for believing that all cases of cholera are not reported to the Board of Health. On Saturday, Aug. 18th, the Board adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

"Whereas, The weekly reports of deaths from cholera present a higher number than the aggregate of daily reports made to this Board; and whereas this discrepancy must be owing to the fact that there are many physicians who either through neglect or unwillingness do not report their cases; therefore Resolved, That notice be given in the daily papers, that we hold physicians responsible for this discrepancy, etc., etc."

Thus we see the reason of the discrepancy between the daily newspaper reports and the weekly reports of the Board of Health. The following, from their reports, shows the constant increase of the plague. For the week ending July 21st, there were ten deaths. For the week ending July 28th, there were eighteen deaths. For the week ending Aug. 4th, there were forty-seven deaths. For the week ending Aug. 11th, there were fifty-two deaths. For the week ending Aug. 18th, there were fifty-six deaths. Thus, in five weeks, the number of deaths reported to the Board from this cause is one hundred and eighty-three. The number of cases of cholera in the same period cannot be less than eight hundred. Nearly twenty per cent. of those attacked die. I have known cases where they have lived but three or four hours from the commencement of the attack.

The cholera is not confined to any particular portion of our city. There have been quite a number of cases in our missionary field. One entire family of seven persons was attacked, but a timely application of the remedies we supplied them with two weeks ago, saved them all. The families of the poor are reaching out their hands to me in all directions for these medicines, but I have no money to purchase, and shall have to wait until the Lord gives me some. I hope he will send me at least $100 for this purpose.

For diarrhœa, by measure, a mixture of one part laudanum, one part spirits of camphor, and two parts of rhubarb. Dose for an adult, thirty drops.

Mixture for cholera, by measure, one part each of laudanum, tincture of ginger, tincture of capsicum, and tincture of cardamon seeds. Dose for an adult, thirty drops.

We have just received a barrel of clothing from our friends in Newark, N. J.; $1.00 from Sr. G., of Newark; $1.00 from Geo. H. F., of Long Point, Illinois. These friends have our hearty thanks for their gifts. The clothing from Newark was needed exceedingly, and we thank Bro. Shepherd and others for their interest in our behalf. The Lord reward them.

We are about to commence protracted efforts for the good of the perishing around us, and we hope by conducting these meetings in harmony with the teachings of the Word, to be instrumental in leading many souls to Christ. Yours, etc., waiting for Christ,

Philadelphia, Pa. F. H. BERRMAN.

WHO WILL HELP?

An esteemed brother, whose heart God has touched, and whose charities are above complaint, believing that time is very short, and that paper with immutable truth needful for dying men printed on it is of more value than paper faced with governmental stamping and backed in green, and will pay a larger dividend in the day of final account than will money devoted to the mere gaining of human wealth, gives, yes, GIVES $600 worth of tracts to the Advent Christian Publication Society, for world-wide distribution. In the name of the millions whom his gift shall bless, we thank him. And what else but a strange desire to hoard wealth—for what use but to turn to ashes if the end is near?—prevents others in equally as good, or even better circumstances than the above donor, doing the same, or more? In the use of property, is not the Adventual name and faith of hundreds merely nominal? Truth compels us to reply in the affirmative. But it is difficult to convince one of this if his acquisitiveness is large and his benevolence and conscientiousness but moderate. And then some rich men seem to have no adequate conception of their terrible responsibility. When will christian people cultivate themselves rightly and scripturally in this direction, as well as in every other? Giving "as God prospers."—1 Cor. 16: 2.

The Board above named have set themselves to the task of raising $2000 on the Tract Fund for the ensuing year. Starting with two donations which amount to $850, we are truly encouraged. And what should hinder the fifty thousand readers of this paper from making up the remaining $1150 before Jan. 1st, 1867? What but the WILL? For where there is a will there is also a way. Shall we suffer this Board to stintingly set our charities in this direction at just $2000? Shall we not rather raise this sum before the last day of next December, and then by adding $2000 more for 1867 (if it comes) rebuke this narrow measurement of the benevolence of a people whose banners proclaim the King is at the door? Let your charities out, brethren. If you are naturally close-fisted, cultivate the dying grace which is to offset this defect in your christian character, lest it die utterly. Out with the money. Turn it to truthful warnings and sow the earth with it. Spread the awful yet glad tidings from pole to pole. The harvest,—the harvest! Who shall tell the gathered sheaves for eternity? D. T. T.

For the World's Crisis.

SPECIAL EFFORT.—MY PROPOSAL.

DEAR BRETHREN:—For some time past, I have felt it important to make greater efforts to place before the thousands of our land the glorious truths we cherish, that relate to the salvation or redemption of God's people. That the prevailing belief is incorrect, is most evident to any one of us who may listen to the teachings from the pulpit, or perhaps, especially, to the funeral theology of our times. It does not, I think, devolve upon us as a people, to make prominent many of the precepts and doctrines of the Bible which are understood and taught by the church. For instance, it has not become our duty to insist particularly upon that form of church government which seems to us most in harmony with apostolic teaching and example, for our Independent or Congregational brethren will see to this, and we agree with them. Nor is it necessary for us to give instructions continually upon the doctrine of christian baptism, and the proper subjects; our Baptist brethren stand committed to correct all erroneous views on this subject, and we agree with them. Nor need we preach incessantly on the doctrine of free grace, or free salvation; our Methodist brethren always have taken, and do now take special pains to have all this set right before the world, and we agree with them. And repentance and justification by faith is understood and taught by all evangelical christians.

But who will teach the people about the beautiful creation that God made; its forfeiture and loss, with the fall of our whole race in consequence of sin; of God's revealed purpose, notwithstanding, to remove the curse, and recover his own people, and give them the home he designed for them; of setting up his own kingdom on the earth, which shall stand forever; of gathering out of his kingdom all offensive things and iniquitous persons; of raising from the state of death the millions of his saints who have fallen, and bringing them all at once into his glorious kingdom here upon the earth, and bestowing upon them immortality and eternal life? Nobody, unless we do it. And here is a part of our specific work. And how shall it be done? To present this truth by preaching is out of the question. But can we not publish it, and in this way present it to large numbers? So it seems to me, and I inquire what publication is best adapted to this purpose? And not long since I read Bro. Hastings' "Plain Truths," and was delighted with it. I thought it substantially the thing, though not quite perfect, according to my notions. So I set to work and made it just what I wanted; and now I feel grateful that Bro. Hastings most cheerfully consented to the alteration, and I have arranged with him to furnish me immediately, in good type, a large edition, probably fifty or sixty thousand; and the officers of the Publication Society readily agreed to use their facilities for distributing large numbers, and the Western Society, through Bro. Himes, have kindly offered to circulate them judiciously in the West, as far as they can, and Bro. Hastings assures me he can send out some thousands from his office, and designs, I believe, to publish it in The Christian.

And now, brethren and sisters, east and west, your help is much needed, and will you not consider this appeal as to you personally? My desire is to have this tract placed in the hands of church members as far as can be, and every Adventist knows of some who have not shown an ungenerous spirit towards our faith; such will be pleased to read it. In fact, no one can possibly receive prejudice or offence from it, for, as its title indicates, it is only the "Testimony of the Scriptures, and the faith of the church," expressed in their own language, except the introduction, which, by the way, is most ingenious, and certainly cannot be distasteful to any. You have only to order them and distribute; but let it be done judiciously. There should be a little system about it, so that no person should receive more than one tract, and by no means neglect the ministers. Let them have a little plain truth, whether they preach it or not.

I would suggest that only one from each place order them, as that will save extra trouble and expense. Do not let there be a single tract left in either office two months from this time, nor have them lying upon your tables. Read and distribute. I am not over sanguine of the success of truth in these last days, but I am sure that what God has designed and promised is most agreeable to our very natures, whereas the popular view is most repulsive, and many will fall in love with his plan when they understand it. I did. And thousands who may read this tract, will be surprised and delighted. I am confident there is nothing the church need to understand so much as what is here presented. The testimony of Dr. Macknight alone, which will be found in the new issue (a Presbyterian who died sixty-seven years ago, whom Adam Clarke says was a thorough scholar and an honest man), as to when the saints get their reward, is worth sending to the ends of the earth, and so of all.

Some may inquire, If the Lord will undoubtedly come by the fall of '68, why not rather have the evidence of it published far and near? To present the time arguments simply, will produce very little effect, except among our own persuasion, and that is being done with rapidity. As a rule, those in the popular belief will have very little interest in the Lord's soon coming. I am sure, with their views of the future, I should rather hear evidence of most any thing else. But if half a million of these tracts could be circulated, and the people informed as to what is coming, I have no doubt that soon thousands would be interested to know when. My own duty in this matter is most clear.

Yours in faith and hope,
SIDNEY HALL.

KNOWLEDGE EXAMINED AND ILLUSTRATED.

It is said that knowledge is power. And if it be true, he who neglects to provide himself with this element of moral strength, should not complain if he be compelled to eat the fruit of his own imbecility. Almost every variety of learning is scattered broadcast over the land, and it only needs the diligent and observant mind to cull and preserve the choice gems so liberally strewed in our path. How much valuable information might be secured daily from our religious periodicals, if pains were only taken to preserve and arrange their valuable contents.

Knowledge teaches us rather how to think and improve our own minds, than to be led by the thoughts of other men; for we have two ignorant men among us to one who is wise. Therefore every one ought to aim to gain instruction for himself, and show what light he can to instruct others and bring them into a way, if possible, to secure their souls' salvation.

The best use we can make of knowledge—this divine endowment, is to cultivate our minds in the practice of virtue and undefiled religion; and in order to obtain this result, we must search the Scriptures, for they point out the way to salvation—the very essence of our happiness. Hence, let us study the Scriptures and examine our hearts thereby, and see if they have that vital piety within them which will secure our souls' salvation; for this may be the only season we may have to improve.

Time is precious; let it not be lost in vain pursuits. The hour makes haste when the things that now are will soon pass away. Then shall we not prepare ourselves for a coming and better world—a better existence, where we can enjoy the smiles of our blessed Savior when he shall come, as he hath promised, to cleanse the earth and set up his kingdom.

These things I have stated are essential; and shall we not give heed to them? They will insure to us those heavenly joys laid up in heaven for the righteous, to be received in that great and coming day of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. J. ELKINS.

VOL. XXIII.—NO. 25. THE WORLD'S CRISIS, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1866. 0059

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. Pratt.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been helping run Bro. Hastings' big tent for the four weeks past, seven miles from Dansville, and though in the midst of hay and wheat harvest, the work has been glorious. A good attendance every evening, and the tent full on the Sabbath. The Baptists were astonished to learn the true import of baptism; Universalists are losing their foundation; Methodists are desiring to be baptized, and the church is taking measures and threatening to turn them out for obeying a christian ordinance. I find Bro. Stephens well qualified for the responsible position he has taken as tent-master, and a true yoke-fellow in the work of God. Brn. Brown, Cook, Burr, Blain, Mills, and others, took part in this blessed work.

I am still in Western New York, and probably shall be for months; yet I am not confined as before we came to the hospital. My daughter did not have her limb amputated, as was at first expected. The small bone of the ankle was broken, and the large bone dislocated from the joint, and protruded through the stocking into the ground. After the pain of setting and re-setting, together with nine weeks of suffering, the entire end of the bone articulating with the lower or foot bone was found to be dead, and another operation more severe than any previous became necessary; and about one half inch of the large bone was taken off, July 4th, and now, after three months, and being reduced to a mere skeleton, she seems to be on the gain. My daughter writes:—

"My Dear Father:—'God sent you to Rochester,' was my inward exclamation, when I first saw your foot upon the threshold. How often I repeat it now, when I realize how you went down with me into the darkness, prayfully, and with tears, giving me all of earthly support, endeavoring to keep my mind stayed upon the Lord. Oh! in my brighter moments I might have loved earth too well had it not been for father, whose face shining as it did at times with the light of heaven, the eye penetrating only the glories yet to be revealed. Ah! I could not wander. Since I have been at the hospital, I have had no Bible, in fact, have been scarce able to read at all, had there been one here; but though I have not read, I have seen, and whatever else I may have been deprived of, I have still that great treasure which saved me—faith. Miss Susan B. Anthony had no confidence in my experience in the faith of God; yet she would not shake my faith for the world. I told her she need give herself no uneasiness, for that was impossible. EMMA.

"O for a faith that will not shrink,
That will not murmur or complain
Beneath the chastening rod,
But in the hour of grief or pain,
Can lean upon its God."

Though our afflictions have been severe, and our expenses great, yet Father's hand has supported us, and we have found true friends that have rendered us material sympathy in need. H. PRATT.

From Sr. M. F. Athorne.

BRO. GRANT:—In reading Bro. Wilkinson's letter from the Crisis last week, brought to mind our experience; and we can say the promises of God are yea and amen to all his believing children. Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. My companion and self stood alone, as our aged brother now stands; yet not alone, for He who has said, "I will never leave nor forsake you," stood by us, and in God's own time he answered prayer.

There is a little company of us hold prayer and conference meetings twice a week; prayer and preaching most of the time Sundays. One of our number has been called of God into the ministry. To God be all the glory. Bless his name.

I write this for the encouragement of God's dear children scattered in cold, isolated places. I hear some say, I cannot preach. Neither can we; but we can all do something. We have opened our doors, and bid God's servants welcome. Many have come and sowed the seed; others have watered it; we have helped them after a "godly sort," as our means would allow, and the labor has not been in vain in the Lord. And what if we are a reproach to the unbelieving, and poor as to this world's goods? Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him? "Cast not away, therefore, your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward." "For ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God ye might receive the promise."

Here are $2.00 from this little company for Bro. Wilkinson's paper. God bless that careworn pilgrim. In the gospel hope,

Ellis, Me. MARY F. ATHORNE.

From Sr. L. F. Adams.

BRO. GRANT:—I attended Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, yesterday. We had a love-feast all day. We were fed with the "hidden manna," which came from God. It was a blessed day to me and others. There was a full house, and it was good to look in these happy faces, and see so much of the love of God in them, and so much union in their midst. It seemed truly like sitting in "heavenly places." It was good to be there. God was with us in power. Brn. Hook, C. C. Ramsey and Hudson, and Sr. Mussey were with us. Sr. Mussey preached in the evening. God bless them, and may they be true shepherds, feeding the flock of Christ with the bread of life.

God has a people in Boston who love him, and are looking for him, and are getting ready to receive him in peace. Last evening, at the first of the meeting, a man arose requesting prayer. How my heart rejoiced.

Brothers and sisters, let us wake out of our lethargy. Let us arise and work for the Lord in earnest. The first thing in the morning, let us ask the Lord what he has for us to do this day, and he will surely make it known to us as plainly as though we heard his voice audibly speaking. Let us have willing hearts and hands, however crossing or humiliating, and do just what the Lord gives us to do, and we shall be blessed. The poor, the sick, the suffering, we have always with us. If we have not much of this world's goods to give them, we can visit them, and cheer them with the hope of Jesus' soon coming, and comfort the bereaved ones. Time is short, and what we do must be done quickly.

God bless you all. Pray for me, that I may prove faithful and meet you in the kingdom. Your sister waiting and looking for the soon coming [illegible]

From Bro. P. Tandy.

To the dear brothers and sisters scattered abroad:—I feel that "I have given all for Christ,

And my spirit cannot rest,
Unless he's in my breast, reigning there."

There is no true, lasting happiness, but in entire consecration to God and his blessed cause. There are no durable riches, but those which come from God by firm, practical faith in him and his holy word. There is no honor worth having, but that which is obtained through Christ, by humble obedience to him. I can heartily say, with the poet,—

"Jewels to me are gaudy toys,
And gold is sordid dust."

In Christ we possess all things; out of him we are nothing. Dear friends of Jesus, we must have pure hearts and clean hands, in order to inhabit the New Jerusalem, which is coming down from God out of heaven.

"Those holy gates forever bar
Pollution, sin and shame;
None can obtain admittance there
But followers of the Lamb."

Are we in every possible way seeking to know and do the will of our heavenly Father? Are we cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord? The coming of the Lord is emphatically near at hand! Are we ready for the solemn event? May the Lord bless you. P. TANDY.

From Bro. Thomson.

BRO. GRANT:—I am still striving in the strength of my Master, to disseminate the blessed truths connected with our coming King and his kingdom, in this place and the surrounding country. I thank God, dear Bro. Grant, that he sent you to Montreal to hold up the truth as it is in Jesus, and that he led me to see it and embrace it. Glory be to his dear name. I also am much indebted to the labors of Bro. H. L. Hastings, in the same place, and by the laying on of whose hands I was more fully set apart to the work of proclaiming the last message of mercy to a dying world.

And so God in his providence has directed me to the West. Here I have labored the past year, in much weakness and fear. I feel now like giving up all for the work of the Lord. I am assured that what is to be done in the way of calling sinners to repentance, must be quickly done, for the day of the Lord is at hand. Pray for me.

Yours waiting and watching,

Monroe, Wis. GEO. THOMSON.

From Sr. L. F. Hastings.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—By the help of the Lord, I am still alive, and hoping to live in a world where there will be no more death. O how glorious the prospect before us. We know full well that the Red Sea with its dark waves lies between, but a glimpse of the glory on the other side will help us to venture down to the water's edge, and

"Jehovah rules the tide,
And the waters he'll divide;"

and "the ransomed of the Lord will come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy."

The Lord has blessed us here of late, and the truth has taken root; and we hope some fruit will be found ready for the garner in the great gathering day. Yours in hope,

Morenci. L. P. HASTINGS.

BRO. A. MARTIN, Lawrence, Mass., writes: "I have learned to love the Crisis for its mission, which it is, as I believe, most faithfully fulfilling. Although I have not connected myself with the Advent people in church fellowship, yet I love and will encourage the doctrine of Christ's second and speedy advent to earth. I do believe that the prophecies given by Christ himself concerning his second coming are now, for the most part at least, historic records. I read church and state history, and to my mind they are records of verified prophecy.

I believe the hearts of the people are fallow, and will receive seed, good or bad, from some sower. How important that the truth and the whole truth be received by them. For the time is short, and the husbandmen will soon be called together; those who have grown wheat will be garnered with it in God's storehouse, but those who have grown tares shall with their work be burned up.

I have for some time felt that there was a mysterious handwriting beneath fulfilled prophecies. O world! thy probation is almost ended. May God grant to anoint our eyes with the truth as it is in his holy word."

BRO. J. ANDREWS, Essex, Mass., writes: "There was once an Advent church in this place, but there is scarcely one interested in the coming of Jesus. There is only one regular meeting in the town—Congregationalist. I was converted in 1864. I believe by the testimony of God's word, and by the signs of the times, that we are near the end of all things. It is lamentable to view the opposition and indifference there is manifested when Christ's second coming is alluded to. The greater part of the church in this place have turned aside into that terrible delusion, Spiritualism. We have not had a traveling preacher in the town for a long time. The meeting-house is open for Spiritualists, concerts, etc. I hope and pray that some one who loves the Lord and his appearing will feel it a duty to come this way and warn the people of their danger."

Cable Dispatches.

Heart's Content, Sept. 2. The Atlantic Cable of last year was picked up this (Sunday) morning, at 4.40 o'clock in lat. 51.62, long. 36.03. The splice was made and the cable lowered at 7 A. M. The Great Eastern is now 700 miles from here paying out. Every thing was going on well, and they expect to reach here on Saturday next.

Vienna, Sept. 3. The Austrian Government has given orders for the reduction of the army to a peace footing, and the work has already commenced.

Paris, Sept. 3. It is said Count Bismack is endeavoring to form an alliance between Prussia, Austria and Russia.

HEALTH OF THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON III.—For some time past we have had various accounts of the ill health of the Emperor of France, who has been compelled to leave the cares of state for a while and seek rest at Vichy. It is stated that he is suffering from an attack of internal constriction, to which he has been long subject, and which compels him to give up his business which is not of urgent necessity. The court name for the malady is rheumatism. The Emperor is not naturally a bad patient, but there are some circumstances which make his case one of more than ordinary difficulty. His early years of dissipation are well known to have left their effects on his system, and no persuasions or arguments will induce him to diminish his usual indulgences.

Napoleon's death would be one of the most important events in the modern history of Europe. During the last ten or fifteen years he has exercised a greater influence on the destinies of the continental nations than any other man. His plans, inscrutable, could never be fathomed by his rivals; his power of deception and dissimulation have been equalled by none. After a short period of probation after he became Emperor, he not only made himself to be recognized by the crowned heads of Europe as an equal, but in all the mysteries of king craft showed himself to be infinitely their superior. To be deprived of his leadership would lessen the importance of France; and it is said that in order to provide for such a contingency, and to accustom the nation to the influence and direction of the Empress Eugenie during a possible regency, the Emperor has recently been bringing her more prominently before the public in allowing her to participate in the councils of state. Meanwhile he is also bringing the young Prince before the public on every possible occasion, and training him as fast as possible for the duties which are apparently to devolve upon him sooner or later.—Journal.

DOMESTIC.

A CHRISTIAN CONSULATE.—A benevolent gentleman in Toronto, Canada, has devised what he calls a "Christian Consulate;" that is, the public designation of a christian resident in each city and town, who shall be willing to act as a christian consul, to whom christian parents and others may refer in regard to their sons or other friends who may go to the town to live or to engage in business. He hopes this may be extended to every city and town throughout the world, where there are men of responsible character and benevolent hearts, and that an alphabetical list be published and sold at a remunerative price.

New York, Aug. 31. There were no cases of cholera additional to the number reported yesterday from this city and Brooklyn. The disease is considered to have passed its worst stages.

☞ A terrific hailstorm visited Ogle county, Ill., nearly destroying the crops, and causing great damage, to the amount of more than $100,000. Some of the hailstones were four inches long, and cattle and hogs were killed by them.

☞ Diphtheria in a most malignant form now rages to quite an extent in Piermont, Vt. Several have died lately.

☞ Queen Victoria has subscribed £500, to be applied to the relief of the sufferers from cholera.

The European Times states that the Atlantic cable is paying about £2000 per day.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.
To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 579. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

For the World's Crisis.

[illegible]

I'm sitting by the window,
In the moonlight, all alone,
And I'm looking in the distance,
Where gleams a marble stone,
That marks the spot where lieth
My own, my cherished one.

The cold white moon looks calmly
On fields and pastures green,
And bathes the distant hill tops,
And quiet vales between;
While groves of richest verdure
Enhance the lovely scene.

Now all is hushed and quiet
Throughout Night's wide domains,
Save when the lonely night bird
To its distant mate complains.
How sweetly rest the moonbeams
On the village of the plains.

Far, where old foaming ocean
Rolls on the pebbly strand,
Shines the revolving beacon
That guides the sailor band;
Through darkness and through tempest,
Guides safely to the land.

Though all is bright and lovely
As far as eye can roam,
Nought can dispel the sadness,
Or drive away the gloom
That shrouds my soul in darkness,
Like shadows on a tomb.

I'm thinking of the fair head
That lies 'neath yonder mound;
Of blue eyes, bright and tender,
Now closed in sleep profound.
Oh! Savior, must that dear form
Lie long in the cold ground?

Hush! oh, my soul, nor murmur,
Thy God knew what was best,
When he allowed thy loved one
To sink to quiet rest,
Free from earth's every sorrow,
To slumber with the blest.

Grant, oh, my precious Savior,
Whate'er my sufferings be,
That when the morning dawneth,
And I am called by thee,
I then may say, "Here, Lord, am I,
And the children given me."

For the World's Crisis.

REPORT OF PROGRESS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Thursday, June 14th. Took Nahum's chariots, and in due time found ourselves in Boston, at the Crisis office. After pleasant greetings from Brn. Adams, Grant, Herron, and others, we went to pass the night with Bro. Grant, in Chelsea. We enjoyed our visit there, as we always do. We had the pleasure of a good hygienic breakfast, good enough for an epicure; a benefit to sick people, so it can not harm those who are well. We have always found good and not harm resulting from such a near approximation in our food to the pure sweet grains and fruits. We had a refreshing season at the family altar, and an intellectual entertainment for a few hours in the library. Pilgrim preachers, whose "little all" can be packed in a single trunk and carpet bag, enjoy the privilege of access to the books of brethren in the ministry and others. They are like "rivers of water to a thirsty soul."

Friday, 15th, went to Lynn, to our next appointment, where we met my mother, who had been stopping awhile with a good brother's family there. It was sad to think that we must be deprived of the privilege of home and the family circle, leave mother here among strangers, and wife and self be continually "on the wing" as pilgrims on the world's highway; but we felt that it was for the truth, and because duty called, and we could trust in the Lord and go forward, even though trials are in the way. There is something blessed in the pilgrim preacher's life, because he feels that having no abiding place here, and seeking one to come, he can rejoice more fully in the prospect of a home in the kingdom.

Lord's day, 18th. Had a good time preaching in the depot hall, which the brethren occupy instead of the inconvenient one they occupied previously. There is no reason why the brethren may not have a good ingathering from the great harvest field. God grant they may see multitudes converted there, who shall be presented at last before God a glorious church, without spot or wrinkle or any such thing.

Monday, 19th, went to Salem and had a pleasant meeting with Bro. Rufus Wendell. We enjoy the society of God's ministers, and were able to rejoice together while we considered the evidences of the advancement of truth. Felt glad that christian character, and not creeds, is the true test of fellowship. So Bro. Rufus and ourself, and all who love God, can meet and enjoy the sweet fellowship of christian charity.

A short time at Salem, and then away to Lynn again, and the following day to Dye House Village, where we enjoyed a good prayer meeting at Bro. Heath's, and found a pilgrim's welcome, and had a pleasant interview, with the privilege of walking out into the country and enjoying the sight of nature in her regal robes of ambient hue and flowery adorning. Here a placid lake, there a rippling, murmuring brook, there a pretty little cascade, and then a walk into the grand old woods where mosses and lichens and ferns grow in the shade, and the warblers in the branches greet us with a pleasant song. It is pleasant to sit here and notice the beauties nature has still to charm us, while she shows unmistakable evidences of decay. Yonder fallen tree covered with the climbing green lichens and mouldering back to dust, with the deep soil of decayed vegetable matter, tell us what nature has suffered and still suffers from the curse; and here and there a thrifty sapling growing out of some old decaying parent stock reminds us of the new earth and its attraction, made from the ruins of the old; when nature in all her foliage and unrivaled beauties will show no signs of decay. Now you may visit the forests, and you cannot find a perfect leaf there. Some imperfection mars every one; and as you silently sit musing, soothed to a quiet reverie by the swaying branches and low murmuring sounds, you can feel the force of the saying that "decline and change and loss follow decline and change and loss in such rapid succession, that you may almost catch the sound of universal wasting, and hear the work of desolation going on around you." Blessed be God! soon Eden will blush in varied beauties, and God's immortal saints will gather and sing,

In those [illegible] bowers,
Where on every hand bloom fadeless flowers,
And the long, long day is not marked by hours;
They'll gather there and sweetly sing
Their songs of praise to their glorious King.

But we must away from the woods, and off to the city again. Here we take the cars and are in Boston once more at the Crisis office, from whence we leave for an appointment in New Bedford. Over the Old Colony road we [illegible] and in a short time after a near arrive in East Bridgewater, where we find a pleasant resting-place in the vine-clad home of Bro. Allen. It is just the season of roses and jasmine and honeysuckle, and Sr. Allen's skillful hands have taught the vine its way over the trellis, and planted the numerous varieties of roses about the garden walks. We love God's roses that unfold their delicately tinted leaves and shed their fragrance around, but the artificial ones, that are but hypocrites, without fragrance, are used for flashy adornments, and are disagreeable. Flowers were never designed to be planted in the hair of a woman, or to be wreathed about her head. True beauty unadorned is adorned the most, and anything not beautiful is rendered more unseemly by adornments. The only ornament Paul recommends is the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, that enhances beauty as it shines through the eyes, plays in pleasant smiles about the cheek and lip, and makes the tone of every word pleasant as the silvery note of the lute.

We spent a Lord's day in East Bridgewater, and had a pleasant interview with the Congregationalist minister, who came to supply the pulpit of that church for the day. As we had no appointment there, we attended church with him, and by invitation assisted in the service both morning and afternoon. It was refreshing to feel that there are those who can bid a christian minister a cordial welcome, and work with him as a true yoke-fellow, even when opinions are quite marked in their distinctions. This gentleman and brother in Christ said,

"I can fellowship as christians those who love Jesus, even if they do not agree with me as to his Divinity."

We remarked that those who depended on Christ so completely as even to expect their future existence, their immortality through him, could not think lightly of him, and he assented to the truth of the statement. We enjoyed a pleasant and profitable day; heard two sermons, and in the evening after he left were invited by the deacon to assist in the evening meeting. We accepted the invitation, and as the deacon read the parable of the marriage of the king's son, we had a pleasant time explaining it, and the people listened with evident interest. It is pleasant to thus mingle with christians, and forget every other name, and try to understand the real meaning of God's word together.

Tuesday we left E. B., and stopped on our way to New Bedford at Tremont, the place where the campmeetings are held, and preached one evening. Found a little company of faithful souls, and enjoyed the meeting with them. Enjoyed the hospitalities of Bro. Benson, the man who is so generally useful at the campmeeting. He is full of good words, a real lover of the truth.

Thursday, the 28th, we reached New Bedford, and were cordially welcomed by Bro. H. V. Davis, whose house is a home for all the ministers of Jesus, and whose busy head and hands, and warm, earnest heart, are all enlisted in the cause of truth. Bro. Davis conducted us to his home, and introduced us to his family, who spared no pains while we were in the city to make us comfortable and happy. Bro. Davis took us about his works, where he is engaged in the extensive manufacture of Prussian blue, and other chemicals, where the old rags and shoes and leather chips and shavings, otherwise worthless, are made valuable, proving the adage that "there is good in everything."

We remained in New Bedford four weeks, and enjoyed one of the best seasons we have experienced during our pilgrimage. We formed acquaintances here of such a character as we would like to have perpetuated in the coming kingdom. Here Bro. Hook and others held meetings last winter, and the results of their labors is apparent, and we trust have the elements of eternal life. It is good to meet the loved ones in Christ, who are looking for his returning. We had a free time preaching, and trust good was done. We enjoyed a communion season long to be remembered, the first one we have enjoyed for a long time.

Our brethren in many places are remiss in this matter. We seldom find arrangements for this sacrament, but it should be attended to frequently, not simply once a year, as the Jewish passover, but "often," especially those who are looking for the literal, personal return of Jesus to this earth can participate in it understandingly. It looks backward and forward, and commemorates the second advent as really as it does the first. The church in New Bedford attend to this ordinance regularly every month, and are blest in so doing.

We made two appointments at Acushnet while in New Bedford, familiarly known there as the "head of the river." The road to the place from N. B. is through the beautiful Acushnet avenue, a broad level way clean and broad, shaded often with beautiful elms and other shade trees; and here and there a fine residence with its attractive garden of flowers and fruit trees, with walks and hedges of cedar. We found a pleasant little chapel at Acushnet, and a good congregation to hear, although in the season of haying, and the weather was sultry and hot, and the people busily engaged. "The Lord gave the word," and the people had listening ears, which always makes it easy to preach. We enjoyed our visit very much, and our home while there, with Bro. White's family.

Bro. Allen Damman is laboring with the people here. He is a young man, only just commencing to labor. He is a son of Bro. Israel Damman, whom we met there on a visit to his son. Bro. Allen is deeply interested in the work of the Lord, and like all young preachers needs the sympathy and encouragement of the church and older ministers. It is so much of a cross to venture out to preach, that all who are willing to obey the Lord in this matter, whatever the character of their ability, should be encouraged, and the young men should study to show themselves workmen approved of God, rightly dividing the word of truth. One great feature of the church's prayer in these last days should be, Lord, send out laborers into the harvest, and then there should be sympathizing hearts and ready hands and cheering words to help the weak ones, whether male or female, to stand in the counsels of God and "preach the word."

We were pleased with the arrangements of the church in New Bedford, with reference to the meetings. Sabbath a. m. is the time for their social meeting, when the brethren and sisters enter heartily into the exercises of the meeting, and so are blessed and strengthened for the further duties of the day. At half-past one the Sabbath School, under the su[illegible] The school is an interesting one, and likely to be more so. Brethren are interested in it, and tax their brain and exert themselves to make it what it should be. O that there were more interest in the Sabbath Schools generally.

Our three weeks in New Bedford were profitable to us in spiritual things, and the brethren helped us after a godly sort in carnal things. L. O. McKINSTRY.

MAN DIES, AND WHERE IS HE?

"But man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?"—Job 14: 10.

Yea, where is he?—the man, the whole man? I presume Orthodoxy is ready to answer, "In heaven, or hell." But Job continues: "As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens (that are now, 2 Pet. 3: 7) be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." "O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time and remember me."—vers. 11-13. Then comes the question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" and he answers by saying,—"All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come." "Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee."—vers. 14, 15.

Christ says, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth." Job will be among them. Then his change will have come; as Paul says (1 Cor. 15: 51), "Behold, I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed . . . at the last trump." Again (Phil. 3: 21), Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." This seems to have been the hope of David, as expressed in Ps. 17: 15,—"I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." "Thou wilt deliver my soul from the power of the grave."—Ps. 49: 15. David does not seem to express himself through the modern theological notion that his soul, in a disembodied state, would fly away, at death; but expected it would be redeemed from the power of the grave at the "last day," when he should awake with his Master's likeness."

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,"

How little we read in the theology of those holy men of old about "the never-dying soul," or "the wailings of eternal hell!" How silent on the subject of man's being "a compound being," of which we hear so much at the present day. Indeed, the very assertion that man is a "compound being," for ever overthrows the claim for immortality; because "man" is declared to be mortal. Job 4: 17. If man is a "compound being," and a mortal being, then of course the "parts," or "elements," of which he is composed, must be mortal. The soul is either a part of man, or it is no part of him; or, if it is the man, as some claim, then it is mortal, because "the man" is declared to be mortal. If it is a part of man, then it must be mortal, because it is a part of "mortal man"; and if it is no part of him, then it has nothing to do with him; hence when we read that Christ is coming to render unto every man according to his deeds, we are to understand that the soul is left out of the question; it is the man he comes to reward.

Again. If man is a compound being, God is. But few are willing, I presume, to admit that; but in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. Paul says, "Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him."—Heb. 10: 38. One. Isaiah says, "Your new moons, and your appointed feasts my soul hateth."—Isa. 1: 14. Two. David says, "The Lord trieth the righteous; but the wicked and him that loveth violence my soul hateth."—Ps. 11: 5. Three.

Here, then, are three witnesses testifying to the fact that God possesses a soul: but I suspect our immortal-soul-ists would hardly acknowledge him as possessing a "theological" one; such as fly away when people die.

Once more. Job says, "In whose hand is the soul of every living thing."—Job. 12: 10. Here Job testifies to the fact that "every living thing" (from the elephant down to the mouse) possesses a soul; but I presume Orthodoxy would hardly admit that they possess an "immortal," "indivisible" one, which soars away

"To the far-off spirit land,"

when the creature dies.

O, consistency, thou art a jewel! but what consistency is there in the theology of the present day? J. W. TAYLOR.

THE HOLY UNCTION.

Thanks be to our God, there is such a thing as having the holy fire all through soul and body. Every avenue may be lit up by the grace of God, and the whole house set in order, with a lamp burning in every window. The image of Christ may be stamped upon the whole. Into such a temple as this, Jesus has promised to come and take up his abode, and bring his Father with him, and dwell there and reign, the God of love, the Prince of peace.

There is but one way to have this holy unction, and that is, by obeying God in all things, making straight paths for our feet, taking the word of God as our guide, believing what it says, taking the promises as ours, by an act of faith, not only for the forgiveness of our sins, but having the all cleansing blood applied, washing and cleansing both soul and body. We shall then worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. Glory be to God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, for such a salvation as this, in this charnel house of death. There is now and then a green spot where God, by his eternal power, has imparted this mighty unction. As baptism after baptism comes upon the soul, how it tends upward, how fast the world recedes out of sight, how vain all things below, how pure the atmosphere gets, what a halo of light shines all around, what union such a soul has with Christ and his saints whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life, and their lives hid with Christ in God. What courage and strength it gives; how life, love, and hope and immortality, spring up in the soul, where this holy unction abides. To such belong this promise, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that [illegible] tism; with it how quick she would emerge out of that wilderness, and put on her beautiful robes of righteousness. Her members would be crying, life, life, eternal life; and we should hear sinners crying: "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved? and they would fall like dead men all around us; and the tread of the Almighty would be heard on our farms and in the counting-houses, in the streets, and in every place where God's saints set their feet. And the very air would be filled with songs and shouts of the redeemed here on earth. Our lifeless class-meetings, love-feasts, and prayer meetings, would be turned into a halo of living fire, love and power. The cry would go out, "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them. And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me."

While we sing anthems of praise to God the Father, let heavenly breezes waft the notes to the Lamb that was slain, whose blood now cleanses from all sin, and gives the victory.

If preacher and writer would get this heavenly touch, this holy unction in the soul—the propelling power that tends upward, and not to earth, that makes our feet like hinds feet, to leap over every obstacle, to surmount every difficulty; that presses through every storm, that rises triumphant over all—what a glorious jubilee there would be here on earth! What a multitude of fire-brands there would be sent through the land, setting the dry stubble all on fire, kindling a mighty flame that all the hosts of darkness could not quench. We should hear the sound from afar: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up ye everlasting doors, and the king of glory shall come in, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Praise God forever and ever. Amen. —Earnest Christian.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

Dark lower the clouds of sin and woe,
Their contents bursting o'er us,
To feed the streams that here below
Are rushing fast before us.
Pain comes to all; the grave, the gay,
Alike must meet with sorrow,
For Satan rules the earth to-day,
But Christ will come to-morrow.

Those whom we love are from us torn,
And laid within the silent tomb;
Oft are we called upon to mourn
For those cut down in youth's bright bloom.
Within the "narrow house" they lay,
While we are plunged in sorrow,
The grave is yawning wide to-day,
But Christ will come to-morrow.

Let christians then awake, arise,
For his return preparing,
To meet him in the opening skies,
His power, his glory sharing.
No matter what the world may say,
From that no trouble borrow,
The hosts of sin are strong to-day,
He'll come and reign to-morrow.

Arrayed in robes of living light,
The earth shall stand from sin all free,
The saints will walk its surface bright,
Spending a blest eternity.
The Savior in his blessed sway,
Will banish pain and sorrow;
Though all looks dark to us to-day,
He'll surely come to-morrow.

"HERE AM I."

BRO. GRANT:—As old time plies swiftly his mighty oar, and brings us speedily down to the closing scenes of this world's history, we love to look over the blessed chart, which has been the faithful companion and guide of the weary and sad ones of ages past, and there discover our landmarks. As we rapidly approach the "evergreen shore," we clearly understand by its revelations, that the reward of the righteous is not far in the future. Soon we shall sing the coronation song, and

"Crown Him, Lord of all."

This cheers us, and amidst surroundings of evil, and temptations, we can rejoice, for our "redemption draweth near."

Temptations may surround us, and our pathway seem hedged before us, a misty cloud of darkness settle on every side, yet with all these trials, no greater ones can be given us than the Lord saw fit to give faithful Abraham when he said, "Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon the mountains which I will tell thee of." How did he heed the command of his God? As right,—no questioning why he must thus exterminate his own progeny, but with promptness boldly stamped on his countenance, and firmness in his manner, he rose early in the morning, clave the wood, and taking his son started for Moriah.

What could have been the father's feelings as for three days he journeyed, with the prattler by his side? On the third day he lifted up his eyes, and saw the place afar off, when he said to his young men, Abide ye here, and I and the lad will go yonder and worship. Separating himself from all earthly friends, he took the wood of the burnt offering, and laid it upon his son,—like the great antitype bearing his cross up Calvary's rugged sides, the little son carried the wood for the burnt offering on his shoulders, while the father took the fire and knife in his hand. They together went up the mountain. How must the father's heart have sunk within him, as toiling up its steep sides the little one cheerfully accompanied him, and assisted in the labor of preparing for the sacrifice! when perhaps with unwonted earnestness he wonderingly said, Father, here is the fire, and the wood, but where is the lamb? Human nature is the same the world over, and divine assistance must have been given him as he said, "My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering."

When they arrived at the place appointed, Abraham built the altar, laid the wood in order, and told his little son that he was the lamb required of God to be given. Did not little Isaac stand back and say, What! me, father? Would he not plead that his life might be spared? If so, he reasoned with that parent till filial affection for, and obedience to, the commands of his honored parent triumphed, and then as a lamb submissively yielded to the father, who laid him upon the altar, and with paternal kindness gathered back from his brow the curling locks, stretched his hand and took the knife to slay his son; when he heard a voice from heaven, saying, "Abraham! Abraham!" "HERE AM I," was the faithful response. Yes; there he stood, just ready to obey God, even to the slaying of his only child. His faith had been tested; his Maker would show him mercy, and prepared for him another offering, while little [illegible] brace of his father. Happy man! who thus trusts in the Lord.

Let us not shrink from trials; they bring us nearer God; but so live that when he calls us to trials, we can quickly respond—"Here am I." Your sister, L. TAYLOR.

FAULT FINDING.

Except vulgar and profane language, I hear nothing so disgusting or wearisome as fault-finding. The continual picking out of errors in one's actions, and presenting them as faults, without making any allowance for oversight or inexperience, is very unfeeling. We are all liable to err more or less, both in judgment and action, and we are often pained to know that we have committed error, and would gladly recall it; but the burden is made much heavier and less easily borne, when we are told of a fault committed, in such a sneering, contemptible way, that our warmest feelings seem chilled.

Now, brethren, this is not christian. I say brethren, because I intend it for you, and all who may be guilty of this uncharitable feeling. And I am led to do so for no other reason than to urge you to use a little more patience with our editors and ministering brethren. They may never tell you of your neglect, and the reproaches they have to bear on your account; but I will tell you, and also remind you, that it is very unkind, unmanly, and not christian. They may often commit many errors, and no doubt they do, but so do we. They often make apologies for what they may have done, and ask our pardon; now do we? I am afraid we do not always do so well.

I shall hardly be able to present this subject to you as I would like, for the circumstances of life are so varied, and errors are so common and different, that what may be said to one about the fault he may have committed in faulting others, will be applied to him only, and others no less guilty will scarcely feel any reproof. But I do hope that each one who is guilty of finding fault, or of judging another, before they censure the actions of a brother, sister, or any one else, will "first cast the beam out of his own eye, and then he can see clearly to cast the mote out of his brother's eye." It is then time enough to say, "Brother, I think you have done wrong." Do not tell him that he has done the wrong, but say, "I think so; and when you have shown the error, ask him to do so no more, and he will love you.

I think we might in this way bear one another's burdens. But the most common way now is, to let every body else know the fault, before the one who should first know it has learned any thing about it. This is very wrong. "Go," says the Savior, "and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." Oh, how much bad feeling may be prevented each day, if we would but follow this little command of the Savior.

No, brethren, do not fault me for being so plain with you, for I want you to understand what I say. And when it seems to you that our editors and preachers have done wrong, let them hear it in the mildest words you can give. For it may often occur that you are mistaken, and if you do this way, no one can be offended. Brethren, bear with our editors, for not many of us know that theirs is a life of toil and trouble. And, remember that we commit errors, too, though the world may never know them. Forget not to respect your ministers also, for they have much care for you, and often while we are censuring them roughly, they are remembering us at a throne of grace. None but the eyes of our God can see and know the doings of sinful men.—Gospel Visitor.

For the World's Crisis.

CHARITY.

As a christian grace charity is reckoned the crowning one of the apostle Paul, when he says, "And now abideth faith, hope and charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." 1 Cor. 13: 13. This, then, is reckoned by the apostle as the most essential, the most enduring, the most profitable. See 1 Cor. 13: 2; 8: 3.

Have we this grace in us? Are we governed by it? If so, we cheerfully grant our brother the same right to think and speak and enjoy his own opinion that we claim for ourselves. "Think and let think" (Wesley) should be our motto. If we differ in opinion from Bro. A., let each go to the word of God for light, praying for divine aid, and not let an honest difference of opinion become a "bone of contention." No, no, brother. God forbid. "Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died." Rom. 14: 15.

Education and tradition has much influence over us in this world of sin and trial; but let God's word be our guide; let us abide by the "Thus saith the Lord." What saith the word? We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death. . . . But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" 1 John 4: 20. Supreme love to God, and loving our neighbor as ourselves (Luke 10: 27) is what Christ enjoined upon us. Let us heed it, ever remembering the golden rule,—"Therefore all things ye would that men should do unto you, do you even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." Matt. 7: 12.

Let us examine ourselves to see if we are in the gospel faith, living according to Bible rule, having our hearts filled with love to God and man; and when this is our happy lot, we shall rejoice to hear of the prosperity of our brother, be he black or white, and nothing will offend us. S. TENNEY.

FROM EMELINE.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I have been thinking, since I have been on the camp-ground, that a great many of the little children are at home, while their parents are here enjoying the meetings, and the blessed, glorious sunshine with which the Lord has favored us; although with it we have also had a pretty hard rain. And while I have thought of this, I have also thought that perhaps those little ones who are not here would like a letter from some one who was here, giving them an account of the campmeeting.

Now, children, I wish I could give you such a description of it, that you would be so interested that you would be determined, if we should meet here again, that you would come too. I always like to see the little children come to campmeeting, and a good number are here; and Sr. Hastings, whom so many of you have seen, thought it would give the children great pleasure to have a little meeting for them, where she and others could talk to them, and where the children could speak if they wished. So she appointed a meeting in the Boston tent, and every day, just after breakfast, the little children are looked up and gathered into the tent; then Sr. Hastings reads, sings, and prays with them. A great many people are attracted by the sound of the sweet, childish voices, and come in to hear what the children have to say. It is a beautiful and touching sight to see the little boys and girls stand up boldly, but modestly, and say they love Jesus, and mean to serve him.

I am now going to tell you a story, which was told the children by an elderly gentleman (Bro. Chapman.) He said, many years ago two little boys, who had been blessed with a praying father, went into the woods, and they could not find their way out. They found a great rock, near which they sat. They started from it three different times, and every time they came round in a circle right back to the rock. Well, the little fellows were frightened, and knew not what to do. The name of one was Tommie, and the other Sammie. Finally Sammie said, "Let us pray to father's God." So they knelt down and asked God in a simple, child-like manner, to show them the way out of the woods; and then they tried to find their way again, and in a little while succeeded. "And," said the old gentleman, "the best of the story is, I was Sammie; and, dear children, God has directed him ever since."

Now, children, whenever you see a rock, think of this; and while thinking of it, remember these passages found in the 107th Psalm; "Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distress. And he led them forth by the right way. . . . O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

Dear children, it is now morning again. Bro. Grant has just rung the bell for rising, and is singing,—

"Lord, in the morning thou shalt hear
My voice ascending high", and as he sings from the preacher's stand, voices join in from the different tents, making the woods resound with melody.

I think this is as long a letter as Bro. Grant will want to publish, or I would write much more. Now, children, let us all be good, and strive to meet with our Savior in his coming kingdom.

GEORGIA AND THE PRAYER MEETING.

"The two schools are going to meet and have a levee to-night. Wont we have a good time, girls? You'll go, wont you, Sukie?"

"No, Georgia. I shall go to the prayer meeting. Mother would feel very bad if I wished to go to the levee instead of the prayer meeting."

"Does your mother ask you to go to prayer meetings? Why, my mother never asked me to go to one in my life. She is a member of the church, and always goes to them. But I always supposed them to be dull, sleepy, horrid places. Mother wishes me to enjoy myself, and have a good time, whilst you never go to parties. Oh! I'm glad I'm not you!"

"Indeed, we have excellent meetings. I enjoy them very much. Mother says parties of pleasure are sinful, and no place for a christian."

"But your cousin Laura and others go to parties, church members, too. Oh! I'm glad I'm not so religious. Now, Sukie, do go just this once; we shall all enjoy it so much;" and her arms were thrown lovingly around me. Her soft, dark eyes looked pleadingly into mine.

"No, Georgia, I had rather go to the prayer meeting. Wont you come to some of our meetings? How I wish you were a christian, Georgia. Good night!"

"What a fool you are, Sukie. Good night!"

Thoughts of my young friend's unsafe condition saddened my heart that evening as I joined the praying ones. Well, I "went and told Jesus" about her. Think you he heard me?

A year later, my father's sitting-room was well filled with smiling young faces; nearly all my young friends, with others, were present; not lovers of pleasure, but lovers of God now. Ah! I remember, as though it were but yesterday, the words of dear Georgia:

"I have been to many places of amusement, and thought I had good times; but, after getting home, in the quiet of my own room I would remember unpleasant things—a jealous, envious, or unkind word, dropped by some one, that often gave me the heart ache and left a sting.

"After attending the prayer meeting, I feel a sweet joy and peace in my heart—no sting there; all is peace. I love to remember the comforting words spoken there. I wonder how a christian can go to a party! How I love the prayer meeting!"

Several years passed. I had left the home and friends of my early youth. I had become a wife and mother. Business called my husband to the little village of my early home. I said to him:

"Call and see Georgia for me."

He found the beautiful one attenuated, and wasted by disease.

"Do you suffer much pain?" said he.

"Oh! its all pain"; notwithstanding, it was all perfect resignation, joy and peace. She spoke with rapture and perfect faith of Christ, and his love and goodness to her.

Well, after seven long years of suffering, "the tired eyelids closed," the loving heart stilled. They laid her to rest beneath the churchyard turf; but her life was "hid with Christ in God." She will [illegible] "find it again" in the resurrection at the last day. Methinks Georgia will break the bands of death with triumphant shouts of joy, and praise God in his kingdom eternally for the prayer meeting.

Mothers, will your children say of you, She never asked me to go to a prayer meeting? Girls and boys, young men and maidens, will you not go to the prayer meetings, not to laugh and make fun, but to pray? There is to be a prayer meeting by and by. Earth's kings will be there. Great men, mighty men, rich men; finally, all who do not love God will be sure to be there, praying to the mountains and rocks. I warn you all not to be there, and pray God to "gather not my soul with sinners." Who will join me in this prayer?

WHAT PERSEVERANCE WILL DO.

DEAR LITTLE READERS:—I hope you have felt interested in the stories I have told you about those who have advanced from a state of poverty and ignorance to one of knowledge and honor; and now I am going to tell you of several others, who from lowly life have attained to a high position. I like, you see, when I read, to gather up here and there facts like these, that are worth preserving, and to give them sometimes to others, thinking they, too, will feel interested in them.

Well, I will tell you now of an eminent painter, who once was a barber. You know barbers are not much honored, though their business is quite an important one, not quite so much, however, in these days of long beards, as when men thought they must be shaved every other day. This painter's name was Turner. He had such a strong desire to be a painter, that he could not be contented with shaving people, so he gave that up, and hired himself out for sixty cents a night to paint skies in other men's drawings. He performed his work faithfully, and then he advanced a step further by making illustrations for guide-books, or any other books that needed a frontispiece. He was very particular to do it all well, and to improve as fast as possible. Thus by patience, perseverance and faithfulness, he advanced from the lowly station of a barber, to one of honor as the greatest of landscape painters.

Sir Richard Arkwright, the inventor of the spinning-jenney, was also a barber, and his first shop was a cellar, over which he put up the sign, "Come to the subterraneous barber, he shaves for a penny." The other barbers, finding their business failing them in consequence, reduced their price to a penny; and then Arkwright, resolved to gain the trade, put up another sign:—"A clean shave for a half penny." This lowly barber was uneducated, never attended school, and all the education he ever attained was what he picked up himself and that was but little. Yet he advanced from his cellar and half-penny shaves to a position where he governed, by his motions, the entire cotton manufactury of England. The "spinning jenny" did much to elevate England, and give him power among European nations.

You have all heard of Shakespeare, and probably many of you have read his works in part. He was the son of a butcher. Cardinal Wolsey, De foe, Akenside, and Kirk White, were butchers' sons. Bunyan was a tinker. Hugh Miller the geologist, and Allan Cunningham, the writer and sculptor, were masons and bricklayers. Harrison the chronometer-maker, John Hunter, the physiologist, Romney and Opie, the painters, and John Gibson, the sculptor, were carpenters. Gifford, the editor of the "Quarterly Review," Bloomfield, the poet, and William Carey, the missionary, were shoemakers.

I have read a story of a carpenter who was observed one day planing a magistrate's bench, and taking unusual pains with it; and when asked the reason of this, he replied,

"Because I wish to make it easy against the time when I come to sit upon it myself." And he did live to sit upon that very bench as a magistrate.

Now it was by being "faithful in that which was least," that these men, whose names I have recorded, attained unto a position of influence and honor. They persevered amid many difficulties and overcame very many obstacles. Now I do not expect my little readers will live here in this wicked world long enough to become men and women, but I would have you imitate these to whom I have cited your attention, in their faithfulness and perseverance; and not only in respect to your worldly affairs, but especially in regard to religious matters. Be faithful in your relation to others,—as a child, a brother, a sister, and school-mate. Persevere in right doing, whatever may be the obstacles that beset you. If you do this, you will gain far greater honor than man can bestow,—the honor which comes from God, and far surpasses earthly fame. Your name will be inscribed in the book of life, and when Jesus comes you will dwell in his beautiful kingdom, where every thing will be lovely, and no sorrow can ever come.

SIGHS.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

We sigh and pine for the age of love,
For the land where hate shall die;
Where deathless friendship the heart may prove,
And truth shall light each eye.
Where the soul's best hope shall know no blight,
Where its chords shall feel no pain;
And the thought of ill in that world so bright,
Will never return again.

Our home shall be where love's star sets not,
But shines through the long sweet years;
Where the pangs of parting are all forgot,—
All vanished life's bitterest tears.
The night of weeping will soon be past,—
Sin's story ere long be told;
And the worn and earth-weary find rest at last,
With the King in the city of gold.

For it cannot be that our fondest hopes
Must bloom but to fade and die,
As the meteor gleams on the gloomy cloud,
Then bursts on the midnight sky.
The pangs we feel are the throes of birth;—
Toil on till the night is done,
For a morning will break over all the earth,
That will know no setting sun.

Roll back on your hinges, ye jeweled doors,
Till our souls shall your beauty know,
Til heaven bursts through her starry floors,
And strews all her lights below,
Till the glow of a thousand suns comes down,
And the sheen of a silver flood
Shall deck our sad earth with a golden crown,
Till it flames like the hill of God.

BIBLE OR TRADITION.—WHICH SHALL WE BELIEVE?

The following one hundred passages and over plainly declare and prove the righteous and the wicked are not rewarded in death, but at the coming of Christ, the resurrection, and the day of judgment. The word of God is not "Yea and nay," but yea and amen. Bishop Law (who lived one hundred years ago) says, "The Scriptures represent death as sleep, a negation of all life, thought, or action; by rest, resting place, or home, silence, oblivion, darkness, destruction, or corruption."

Sleep—in the case of good men. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers."—Deut. 31 : 16. "So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David."—1 Kings 2 : 10. "And Asa slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father."—1 Kings 15 : 24. "And Solomon slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the city of David his father."—2 Chron. 9 : 31. Tradition says their bodies slept, and their souls are in heaven; but the Bible makes no mention of any such thing, but plainly declares, they slept, and they were buried with their fathers.

Says Job, "For now shall I sleep in the dust; and thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be."—Job 7 : 21. "But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" Surely, either in heaven or hell, says tradition; but the Bible says, "So man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."—Job 14 : 12. Shall we believe this Bible declaration? "If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait (till death come? No) till my change come." It is plainly evident Job looked forward to the resurrection, as he says, "And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Job 19 : 25, 26. "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth;" "whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another."—ver. 27.

Says the Psalmist, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."—Ps. 17 : 15. (Not satisfied in death, or at the time of his death.) "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"—Ps. 6 : 5. "Shall the dust praise thee?"—30 : 9. "Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Shall thy loving-kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" Ps. 88 : 10–12. Tradition says, the righteous dead are praising God in heaven; the Bible says, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."—Ps. 115 : 17. Now which will you believe? God's word, or man's word? "But are not their thoughts beginning to expand and enlarge in death, according to tradition?" What does the Bible declare? "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146 : 4. Have the dead any more knowledge than the living? Says tradition, Yes. But the Bible says, "For the living know that they shall die; BUT THE DEAD KNOW NOT ANY THING." "Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished."—Eccl. 9 : 5, 6, 10. Not increasing, as tradition says, with greater intensity, "but is now perished." "For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast; for all is vanity." "All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."—Eccl. 3 : 19, 20. Tradition says, man certainly has pre-eminence in death above a beast, as the soul, the real man, either goes to heaven or hell; but, says the preacher, "All go to one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

Now what does Hezekiah declare when the Lord in mercy delivered his soul from the pit of corruption? "For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee; . . . the living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day."—Isa. 38 : 18, 19. Tradition says, "Man's soul is immortal, and never dies." But the Bible declares, "He spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence."—Ps. 78 : 20. "All they that go down to the dust shall bow before him, and none can keep alive his own soul."—Ps. 22 : 29. Which will you believe?

Again, "Behold, all souls are mine; . . . the soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. 18 : 4. But says tradition, "The soul can never die." Yet again, the prophet declares, "The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. 18 : 20. Hezekiah declared, when the Lord added unto his days fifteen years, "Behold, for peace I had great bitterness; but thou hast, in love for my soul, delivered it from the pit of corruption." Isa. 38 : 17. The Psalmist also, in a song of deliverance, declares, "For thou hast delivered my soul from death."—Ps. 56 : 13. "O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave. thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit."—Ps. 30 : 3. Tradition says the soul, the real man, would not go down to the pit, or the grave; but the Psalmist further says, "What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise thee? Shall it declare thy truth?"—Ps. 30 : 9. "Let my soul live and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments help me." Ps. 119 : 175. If the Psalmist expected to be in heaven at the time of his death, would he have exclaimed as follows? "Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope."—Ps. 16 : 9. But tradition says, "he has long been in heaven." What does Peter declare in regard to this? "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." "But has not David gone to heaven?" Let Peter answer: "For David is not ascended into the heavens."—Acts 2 : 29, 34. Now which will you believe, tradition, or the Bible?

Says Isaiah, "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart; and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come. He shall enter into peace; they shall rest in their beds."—Isa. 57 : 1, 2. And the Revelator also declares, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."—Rev. 14 : 13. Not that they are living and resting in heaven, but that they "rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." Now if the soul, the real man, lives, and the body only dies, would not Satan's declaration prove true? "And the serpent said unto the woman, "Ye shall not surely die."—Gen. 3 : 4.

Does Paul make any exception in regard to the soul? He says, "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."—Rom. 5 : 12. "And it is appointed unto all men once to die, but after this the judgment."—Heb. 9 : 27. Not that the body alone shall die, but "unto MEN once to die," and "after this the judgment," at the day appointed. And the Lord said to Adam, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust THOU art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. 3 : 19. Of the wicked, Job declares, they are "reserved to the day of destruction; they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." Not that they are now suffering wrath, but "shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." "Yet shall he be brought to the grave, and shall remain in the tomb."—Job 21 : 30, 32. Peter also says, "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished."—2 Pet. 2 : 9. Not that they are now suffering punishment, but are reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished."

As the apostle Paul also declares, "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."—2 Thess. 1 : 7, 8. Not at death, but when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed," or come. Our Savior's parable of the tares and wheat, plainly proves this point. He said, "Let both grow together until the harvest." "So shall it be at the end of the world; the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just."—Matt. 13 : 30, 49. And Paul, in addressing the ungodly, says, "But after thy hardness and impenitent heart, treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God;" not against the day of death, but "against the day of wrath." "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel." Rom. 2 : 5, 16. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."—2 Cor. 5 : 10. Tradition says, we are judged and rewarded at the coming of Christ, and day of judgment. Which shall you believe? Paul also says, "Therefore, judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts."—1 Cor. 4 : 5. Peter's declaration fully confirms these statements. "But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."—2 Pet. 3 : 7.

Our Savior says, "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice [now mark this, he does not say they are in heaven or hell, but 'all that are in their graves shall hear his voice'], and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5 : 28, 29.

Did Christ say in regard to Lazarus that he was in heaven? No. "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep."—John 11 : 11. Not as tradition teaches, that his soul, the real man, was alive, while his body slept; but, as in the announcement, "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead."—ver. 14.

Again, how can it be possible for the righteous, if they are already in heaven, to perish, even if there should be no resurrection? Yet Paul declares, "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." I repeat the question, If the righteous go to heaven at death, according to tradition, then how can they have perished, as Paul says they are, "if the dead rise not?" Now let Paul solve the question. He makes the resurrection and coming of Christ the grand theme and consummation of the Christian's hope. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." As Christ has arisen from the dead, so shall the righteous also be raised,—"But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—1 Cor. 15 : 16–62. Not at death, but at Christ's coming.

For the World's Crisis.

IS MIND THE RESULT OF ORGANIZATION?

If mind cannot exist independent of the physical organism, then of course it is the result of organization. If it can be proved that it can exist independent of the physical organism, then we are ready to admit that it is not the result of organization. But how is one going to work to prove that it can, or cannot?

An eminent defender of the doctrine of natural immortality, in a recent article, remarks: "We are personally acquainted with a number of individuals, now living, who testify to the fact of having been dead, and were conscious of the fact of dying, and being dead, who recognized their own persons as in spirit, and saw and recognized their own bodies as dead; saw what was done with those bodies, met with angelic guides, who took them to paradise, showed them persons and places there, conversed with persons there who were dead, etc."

This the writer presents to his readers as evidence that men are conscious after they die; hence mind can exist independent of the physical organism. Mark, he says, "they are now alive, and are conscious of being once dead." Now one of two things is true; and that is, they have either had a resurrection, or they were not dead. Which is true? If they were not dead, then it does not prove "consciousness in death;" and before he can make a very strong point of it, he must prove that they were truly dead. I don't think he will undertake such a task, and he seems to be aware of the dilemma he is in; for before he closes his article, he modifies the term "death," in their case, to "suspended animation." And again, their testimony is fatal to the popular theory concerning "heaven," "hell," "purgatory," etc.; for he adds, "From there (paradise) they were taken to hell, saw those whom they knew, saw their torments and sufferings," etc. Now if these were really dead, and their souls were really carried by angels to "paradise," how comes it that they got over that "unpassable gulf," into the dark regions of despair? The angels who conveyed Lazarus to paradise, could not conduct him to hades, even for the purpose of cooling the tongue of a poor sufferer there; but these individuals could visit the place just out of curiosity, without having any errand of mercy whatever. Surely, "times and seasons" have changed in the "invisible world," as well as in the visible.

But let us look in another direction for evidence whether mind can exist independently of the physical organism or not. Instances are not unfrequent where individuals, falling from a building, or being in other ways hurt, have had their skulls fractured, and have been taken up for dead, and for hours, yea perhaps for days, have lain in a state of total unconsciousness. To this they themselves attest, on recovering their senses again. They were not dead during this period of time, to be sure; but "animation was suspended," as in the cases mentioned by the writer of the above mentioned article. But I ask if mind could exist independently of the physical organism, why should not such individuals retain their thinking faculties during this period of time, instead of becoming utterly unconscious? If a certain blow on the head will cause to cease "all thought," and "all knowledge," by what rule of logic can it be proved that a harder one, which would entirely dismember the brain, would set the thinking machine to running more powerfully than ever? Indeed, I am inclined to believe that, as the living sometimes know "not any thing," the dead are surely no better off; but, as David says, "In that very day (the day of his death) his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146 : 4.

People sometimes are in a "trance," and are carried away mentally to one place and another; and this probably was the case with the individuals from which our brother gets his evidence, which he thinks sustains the idea of dead men being alive. But I think a better way to sustain a theory is to come right to the word of God, and if after trying it there, it is found that evidence is lacking, let the theory go, and cling to the word any way. Sometimes it so happens that an individual gets a theory instilled into his mind, and can not, or will not, easily get rid of it. Yes, they cherish it until it becomes dear to them, and they will exert every energy to sustain it, rather than yield to the convictions of truth.

An eminent Spiritualist lecturer, when opposing the mortality of man, as taught in the Bible, declared "he saw one man's soul leave the body!" The above brother does not claim to have seen any such a thing as this; he only conversed with them after they got back.

THE GIFTS OF GOD.

God in his goodness and unerring wisdom has given unto his children many and various gifts. Some, like his providences, are general; others are special. And while one is bestowed upon us unasked, it is received as the result or regard of a kind and generous Father, "who maketh the sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and unjust."

"The gifts and calling of God are without repentance"; but special gifts are not without prayer. We are led to understand from the teaching of Scripture that some things will never be granted without an effort upon our part. Hence we have these words: "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name. Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." And one thing is sure, that whatever God withholds, no earthly arm can give; whatever he is pleased to bestow, no earthly power can prevent. They may censure and imply that all is not right, but God seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." Therefore, let no one impute the work of God to man or the devil, for that would be blasphemy.

It is very true that the gifts of God can be perverted; they can be abused, and prove a curse instead of a blessing. Wo to him who holds the fearful prize with any other view than to do the will of God and glorify his name. We have no reason to exalt ourselves because of the condescension of a prayer-hearing God, and think that it is merit or worth, genius or sagacity, or even that we stand upon higher ground than others; for the proud he knoweth afar off; they are also an abomination to him. "Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly."

In view of these things, I am led to adopt the prayer of Agar: "Remove far from me vanities and lies; give me neither poverty or riches; feed me with food convenient for me."

For the World's Crisis.

THE CHERUBIM.

Having read the book of the Hon. George Smith, London, on the subject of the Cherubim, I propose to notice the book, and its most important theme, very briefly.

Three theories have been put forth in solution of these mystic figures—the cherubim. First, that they symbolise "the three persons of the Holy Trinity." Second, that they refer to "angelic nature and ministrations." Third, that "they were typical of the true church—true believers in every dispensation of grace." pp. 4–6.

Then, after having compared and contrasted and criticized each text of Scripture, and each of the thrice named theories, the author says, "As I wish to avoid every approach to a fanciful exposition of Scripture, I have carefully abstained from giving any opinion as to the importance of the various appearances manifested in the cherubim. Not knowing the design of the several animal forms which are here introduced, I will not speculate upon it." p. 146. "What truth does it teach?" (the cherubim, Ezek. 1 : 1–9).

"I do not," he says, "pretend to answer a question which I regard as both interesting and important; but suggest two thoughts respecting it for the consideration of the reader." p. 147. The two thoughts are, first, the "four great divisions, or dispensations (in the scheme of redemption),—the patriarchal, the Levitical, the prophetical, the christian; all these ministered the gospel in different forms."

The second is like unto the first in its character, but far less likely to be the truth set forth by the cherubim. It is given thus:—"In gospel times we see the church divided into sections, separated from each other by distinctions of an earthly character, as were the cherubic figures. . . . In both aspects (four dispensations and church divisions) the symbol, I think, very strikingly accords with the past. But I leave these thoughts merely as suggestions for the consideration of the reader. Whether the first or the second view gives the true exposition of the scriptural symbol, or whether it had reference to either, I shall not presume to decide." This is the pith and sum of the whole book. To all which I respectfully reply, that I am glad to have had the reading of the book, and to have had my thoughts directed to its subject. To my apprehension, it has been the occasion to me of an advance in scriptural knowledge. The subject, however, as a whole, lies in my mind thus:—

"Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. 10 : 17. Of course, the doctrine of the cherubim must be found in the words which the Holy Ghost useth to set it forth to our faith. "How readest thou?" is the question. Answer. We can not read that they represent God, nor his chosen people, nor his honored priesthood; because God and Moses and Aaron and Israel his chosen were there present along with the cherubim. They, having been there themselves, needed no representatives; and hence, we must read further to understand the subject, as set forth in the holy Scriptures. No present person or class needs a representative. The "dominion" given to Adam and Eve over the earth was forfeited by transgressing the law, in Eden. At their expulsion, we find there cherubim.—Gen. 1 : 26, 27; 3 : 22–24.

Again, at the partial reorganization of the first dominion of God over this world, we read that "Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David his father." 1 Chron. 29 : 23; Ezek. 21 : 25–27; Micah 4 : 1–8; Luke 1 : 30–33; Acts 1 : 3, 6; 28 : 31; Rev. 11 : 15–18; Ps. 72 : 1–20; 102 : 13–21; 103 : 19–22. The camp of Israel, at the incipient organization of this kingdom, was arranged thus: Judah and two other tribes were placed on the east, to lead the whole; and his ensign was "the Lion." Reuben and two tribes, south, and his ensign "the Man." Ephraim and two tribes, west, and his ensign "the Ox." Dan and two tribes, north, and his ensign "the flying Eagle." Num. 2, and Jewish history. The priesthood of Israel was divided into twenty-four courses, each and all with their elders. The tabernacle stood in the midst, with its mercy seat surmounted by the cherubim, which formed the throne of Jehovah, as the con-central object—the controlling sovereign of the whole scene. This was "the shadow" of the kingdom to come.

Harmoniously with this organization of the typical kingdom—this "shadow of good things to come" (and yet to come; because Paul, like us, belonged to this passing gospel age)—we read of the orders of being in "the restitution" (Acts 3 : 21; Isa. 11 : 1–9) like to those that obtained at "the first dominion." Gen. 1 : 20–27.

Transcendentalism to the winds. Philosophy and speculation are out of place on such a theme as this. It belongs altogether to Revelation; and as such it is addressed to our faith, not at all to imagination. We may take in all parts of the word, that bear on the subject, and there stop—"with reverence and godly fear."

With the four-sided, four-ensigned camp of Israel; with "the four and twenty elders" (or heads) of the priesthood, and the throne of the Lord in the centre, over the cherubim, on the mercy seat; we find the basis of the imagery in Rev. 4. Here we find the throne of the Most High, with its living, everlasting scenery, the four living ones, and the four and twenty elders. Then, other visions give us the expanded view of the saints that sing the anthem of redemption. The angels join in the chorus, and all in heaven, earth and sea swell the universal praise that finds its crowning consummation in the reverent "Amen" of the four living ones, and the worship of the four and twenty elders.—Rev. 5 : 9–14. This "throne of the Lord" appears often, as in Rev. 11 : 15–18; 20 : 4–7. Now locate it. In Ps. 72, it is "the judgment" throne to "the oppressor"; and the radiant centre of the all-abounding blessing and glory which shall "fill the whole earth." Amen. Thus we find the type met by the antitype. We find "the end" declared "from the beginning." Isa. 46 : 8–11. Thus we can "have faith in God" as to the cherubim.

But the author of this book, after reviewing the whole subject, only attempts a two-fold suggestion, on neither of which will he presume to stand. p. 147. His reference to "four dispensations," as a solution of the doctrine of the cherubim, ignores the three primary dispensations, from Adam in Eden to Abraham; and also "the dispensation of the fulness of times"—the millennial age, yet to come. Hence this reference can not be entertained as truth for a moment.

His second reference to the sects of Christendom—the scandal and sin of the gospel age, is still more at fault. Because God could not so symbolize the "one body—the church," as his symbol of the professing church is seen in Rev. 17; 2 Thess. 2 : 1–8; Dan. 7 : 7, 8. "The judgment" impends on this "Babylon." The author having no knowledge of "the design of those animal forms,"—after all his investigation,—has but a slight hold, with his hesitating, two-fold suggestion, on the mind of the reader, to whom he so feebly appeals.

My apprehension of the cherubim may be inquired for, and hence I add that a few facts seem essential to the understanding of this subject, as it is set forth in Holy Scriptures.

1st. The principalities and powers in the heavenly places are to know or learn the manifold wisdom of God—not as (or because) they are the church; but BY the church. Eph. 3 : 10. This distinguishes between the church and the cherubim.

2d. Into which things (the prophecies of salvation) the angels desire to look.—1 Pet. 1 : 11–12; Daniel 8 : 13–14; Daniel 9 : 21. These angels are not the christians here addressed.

3d. These glorious orders of being, above men, are ever seen in attendance on the Lord Almighty in every dispensation. Ps. 103 : 19–22; Rev. 15 : 1.

4th. The parties to the old covenant—the Redeemer of Israel, and Israel his chosen people and priesthood, with all the then living heirs of promise (Heb. 11 : 24–35) were themselves then present. Hence they needed no cherubim representatives. The Redeemer and the then redeemed were there. The antitype must of course correspond to the type in these particulars, for all was made "according to the pattern." Heb. 8 : 5–7. So much seems certain from the above named points of fact: namely, the Redeemer of Israel, and Israel his redeemed, with all the honored priests, prophets, and things of that dispensation, were not symbolized by the cherubim. By consequence, the analogous facts will obtain in the antitype; and the conclusion is that "the cherubim" who were present and acting their part in the economy of redemption (Gen. 3 : 22), before the first fallen man had been redeemed,—who were represented by proper forms over the mercy seat, at the redemption of his ancient people Israel,—did represent a then absent class of God's intelligent universe, who yet are interested in the great plan of redemption. This seems certain.

Harmonious with these facts, we have the antitype in Rev. 4th and 5th. The SAINTS sing the song of redemption.—Chap. 5 : 8–9. The angels swell the chorus; and then we read of every creature in heaven, earth and sea, who join in the universal anthem; while the four living ones pronounce the solemn "Amen," and the four and twenty elders worship and close and crown the consummated praise.

This seems conclusive, that the saints are not there in such scenes in symbol, and yet also in person; not there officially as priests, on behalf of themselves, and yet themselves there in another character. But such confusion in idea and in all the plain terms employed, results from not distinguishing between the saints and the four living ones, with the four and twenty elders. We can only attain to the measure of truth given to us on all such subjects of revelation. All attempts to surmount the bounds of truth revealed on this subject, will only re-act on their authors; "as it is written, add thou not to his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." Rev. 22 : 17–18; Prov. 30 : 6. I let the cherubim just fill the place assigned to them in holy Scripture, where they appear and act an exalted part, long generations before the first man died, or could have been redeemed in any way. Much of detail remains unwritten; but so much is humbly submitted for the truth's sake.

WOLVES.

The truth cuts very close, and the faithful workman will lay "judgment . . . to the line, and righteousness to the plummet"; yet there is a vast difference between this faithful dealing, and the tearing and devouring of wolves. It is the aim of the enemy to kill and destroy; and no one would mistake the skillful, experienced surgeon, who was doing his best to repair the mischief, for an enemy. No. The surgeon is a faithful friend, and if he cuts close, he will save you if possible. False teachers are compared to thieves and wolves. "The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy." They sometimes approach you very gently, and profess much love, but they are only wolves in sheep's clothing.

Let me exhort my dear brethren to pray much for this one thing, that they may be kept from the power of wolves. The Good Shepherd says that his sheep know his voice, and they follow him; but a stranger they will not follow, for they know not the voice of strangers. Then how is it that some are led away by false doctrines? Does that prove that they were not really members of Christ, sheep of his flock? Did they go out from us, because they were not of us? It must be so in many cases, for where the heart is not right, there is a readiness to embrace false views; and when the false teacher comes, it seems that some are drawn away from the flock, that it might be made manifest that they had no part nor lot with the saints. Jesus will protect his own, yet the wolf may annoy you if he cannot destroy.

One way in which the enemy annoys the people of God is to try to persuade them that they are mistaken in regard to their own standing. He brings to view your infirmities, and besetments, or thorns in the flesh, and says, "You are not a christian." But don't believe him. Cling close to Jesus, and do not follow strangers. Your Savior knows you, and I trust you know him, and will soon see him as he is.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Any association of persons acting in concert under an oath of secrecy is a "Secret Society." This oath is the real bond of union. Its abrogation would annihilate every such society in less than twelve months. They would burst like bubbles all over the land. The leaders know this; hence the tremendous guards thrown around this oath. To break it is high treason. Compared with this all other crimes sink into insignificance.

Here, too, is to be found their power. In every institution the point of power is contained in the bond of union. That which severs the latter will destroy the former. This is true of the christian church, and equally so of every aggregate body. And, whatever of influence there is in a name is found in this oath, for it gives designation to the society. To a certain class of minds, the whole charm is found in the fact of secrecy, and they are led and held by an insatiable something within themselves that is fed only from the stygian flood of mystery. And all the conscience there is enlisted is bound at this point also. An oath is brought in to constrain the conscience, and hamper its future action. They do not depend for success upon the purity of their principles—if they did, they would not need an oath to give them effect. They do not depend upon the virtue of their adherents; if they did, they would not deem it essential to bind them with an oath. Neither do they depend upon wealth; for then, too, the oath were unnecessary: but they appeal to the masses through the self-same methods of approach, and by identical arguments, with the superstitions of every age. In the fact of secrecy is their power. [illegible] by a flood of light, and they are gone.

Make the best of them we can, and they are but the relics of ancient superstition. They have a numerous and noted ancestry. They hail from the hot beds of Paganism; they never could breathe where the living God reigneth. The power of the old heathen religions, so notoriously cruel and blood-thirsty, was concentrated in the mysteries. The voluptuous East, transferring them from the religious to the social world, swarmed with them, wherein unbelief, drunkenness and prostitution held high carnival for ages. Thence, they were carried to Greece, and finally to "the mistress of a subjugated world"—Rome, where they were so many corrupt sores of a degenerate and rotting empire. Even the polished historian—Livy, declares that as early as his day, these societies were filled with "gladiators, scoundrels, rakes and bawds." Since then, in every civilized nation of earth, as corruptions have increased, so have secret societies. The purer the state of society, the fewer of them have there been; and a bad looking feature of the case is that among others, the most corrupt of the people are always found in them. And, now, if there is a designing sycophant, a tricky demagogue, or an unblushing self-seeker in the United States that does not hail from some one or all of these sinks of pollution, I should like to see him. He is a prodigy.

I thought I would write something of their moral character; but in searching I find nothing of that kind connected with them. It is urged, they are benevolent institutions; they aid each other when in want; they are the friends of the widow and the fatherless, etc. It is not plain that they are any more benevolent in their practical workings than any insurance company in the land; but yet, acknowledging that all is true that is claimed for them by their most ardent defenders, what estimate are we to place upon that benevolence which requires a rigid, unqualified oath to call it into action? To my certain knowledge, in three secret societies, to every money transaction there is a regular debt and credit side, and the acknowledgement, "for value received," might well accompany every beneficence.

They generally have what they call religious services at every meeting. For this purpose they elect a chaplain to serve a certain period of time. In some societies—in all which I have known—he is elected without regard to moral character. It is not uncommon to see the bloated drunkard, the braggart swearer, the caviling skeptic, or the bold atheist, conducting the worship of Almighty God; while Doctors of Divinity sit by and smilingly listen to the reading of the most eloquent language of devotion by lips unused to speak the name of God but in blasphemy.

In reference to their membership, the questions asked at initiation would seem to involve the idea that none could enter but those who possess good moral character, and are believers in the existence of God and the authenticity of his word. But this is a vast mistake. Many men answer every question in the affirmative, putting their own construction upon them, who neither believe in God or the Bible. Besides, there is in many of the questions, what a man might easily suspect was purposed ambiguity. These questions, too, are not the real test. That is found in personal likes and dislikes. I never knew but a very few rejected, and the reason of that, in each case, was because they were so scandalously debased that members thought they should be disgraced in the eyes of the world if they received them, and their cause injured.

Neither does moral character give a title to the benefits promised. Have you the password? Can you give the sign? These are the important questions. Character is crowded out of the question; right and wrong are questions not to be discussed. Here enters a dreadful antagonism. Law, with all its sanctions, has been set aside, human rights trampled under foot, and terrible crimes aided and abetted and disguised. Justice has been stopped in its course by a sign to the jurymen; traitors have gone free, and taken arms against the government, from a movement of the hand, unseen by all but God who keeps a book of remembrance. In short, there is no department of industry in the land, at this time, but what is more or less controlled by the influence of Secret Societies. But a few days since I was requested to give a church certificate to one of our most reliable and worthy brethren. In a short time afterwards the brother returned me the certificate, and related the circumstances which led him to make the demand. He is a laboring man, with a family dependent on him for support, and he was placed in a position where his situation depended upon his joining a secret society. If he united himself with it, his place was secure; if he did not, it was lost. He concluded to do so, and drew his letter from the church as a preparatory step. But God graciously interposed, and with tears and rejoicings at his signal deliverance, he returned to the embrace of the church.

It is the duty of the church to raise a warning cry against the invasions of such a foe; for, viewing these societies from the standpoint of christianity, nothing but a dark and terrible picture can be seen. "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" If the church accepts them as an ally, she cannot fulfill her mission. She does not hail them as co-laborers. "Out of Zion the perfection of beauty God hath shined. Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." God recognizes no helper to Zion; only through her he shines, only by her he thunders his law. She can delegate no part of her work to another; the whole field is before her, and God has said, "Occupy till I come."—Earnest Christian.

SIGHS.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

We sigh and pine for the age of love,
For the land where hate shall die,
Where deathless friendship the heart may prove,
And truth shall light each eye.
Where the soul's best hope shall know no blight,
Where its chords shall feel no pain;
And the thought of ill in that world so bright,
Will never return again.

Our home shall be where love's star sets not,
But shines through the long sweet years,
Where the pangs of parting are all forgot,—
All vanished life's bitterest tears.
The night of weeping will soon be past,—
Sin a story ere long be told;
And the worn and earth-weary find rest at last,
With the King in the city of gold.

For it cannot be that our fondest hopes
Must bloom but to fade and die,
As the meteor gleams on the gloomy cloud,
Then bursts on the midnight sky.
The pangs we feel are the throes of birth,—
Toil on till the night is done,
For a morning will break over all the earth,
That will know no setting sun.

Roll back on your hinges, ye jeweled doors,
Till our souls shall your beauty know,
Til heaven bursts through her starry floors,
And strews all her lights below,
Till the glow of a thousand suns comes down,
And the sheen of a silver flood
Shall deck our sad earth with a golden crown,
Till it flames like the hill of God.

BIBLE OR TRADITION.—WHICH SHALL WE BELIEVE?

The following one hundred passages and over plainly declare and prove the righteous and the wicked are not rewarded in death, but at the coming of Christ, the resurrection, and the day of judgment. The word of God is not "Yea and nay," but yea and amen. Bishop Law (who lived one hundred years ago) says, "The Scriptures represent death as sleep, a negation of all life, thought, or action; by rest, resting place, or home, silence, oblivion, darkness, destruction, or corruption."

Sleep—in the case of good men. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers."—Deut. 31 : 16. "So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David."—1 Kings 2 : 10. "And Asa slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father."—1 Kings 15 : 24. "And Solomon slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the city of David his father."—2 Chron. 9 : 31. Tradition says their bodies slept, and their souls are in heaven; but the Bible makes no mention of any such thing, but plainly declares, they slept, and they were buried with their fathers.

Says Job, "For now shall I sleep in the dust; and thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be."—Job 7 : 21. "But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" Surely, either in heaven or hell, says tradition; but the Bible says, "So man lieth down, and riseth not, till the heavens be no more they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."—Job 14 : 12. Shall we believe this Bible declaration? "If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait (till death come? No) till my change come." It is plainly evident Job looked forward to the resurrection, as he says, "And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Job 19 : 25, 26. "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth;" "whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another."—ver. 27.

Says the Psalmist, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."—Ps. 17 : 15. (Not satisfied in death, or at the time of his death.) "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"—Ps. 6 : 5. "Shall the dust praise thee?"—30 : 9. "Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Shall thy loving-kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" Ps. 88 : 10-12. Tradition says, the righteous dead are praising God in heaven; the Bible says, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."—Ps. 115 : 17. Now which will you believe? God's word, or man's word? "But are not their thoughts beginning to expand and enlarge in death, according to tradition?" What does the Bible declare? "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146 : 4. Have the dead any more knowledge than the living? Says tradition, Yes. But the Bible says, "For the living know that they shall die; BUT THE DEAD KNOW NOT ANY THING." "Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished."—Eccl. 9 : 5, 6, 10. Not increasing, as tradition says, with greater intensity, "but is now perished." "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast; for all is vanity." "All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."—Eccl. 3 : 19, 20. Tradition says, man certainly has pre-eminence in death above a beast, as the soul, the real man, either goes to heaven or hell; but, says the preacher, "All go to one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

Now what does Hezekiah declare when the Lord in mercy delivered his soul from the pit of corruption? "For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee; . . . the living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day."—Isa. 38 : 18, 19. Tradition says, "Man's soul is immortal, and never dies." But the Bible declares, "He spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence."—Ps. 78 : 20. "All they that go down to the dust shall bow before him, and none can keep alive his own soul."—Ps. 22 : 29. Which will you believe?

Again, "Behold, all souls are mine; . . . the soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. 18 : 4. But says tradition, "The soul can never die." Yet again, the prophet declares, "The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. 18 : 20. Hezekiah declared, when the Lord added unto his days fifteen years, "Behold, for peace I had great bitterness; but thou hast, in love for my soul, delivered it from the pit of corruption." Isa. 38 : 17. The Psalmist also, in a song of deliverance, declares, "For thou hast delivered my soul from death."—Ps. 56 : 13. "O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave: thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit."—Ps. 30 : 3. Tradition says the soul, the real man, would not go down to the pit, or the grave; but the Psalmist further says, "What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise thee? Shall it declare thy truth?"—Ps. 30 : 9. "Let my soul live and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments help me." Ps. 119 : 175. If the Psalmist expected to be in heaven at the time of his death, would he have exclaimed as follows? "Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope."—Ps. 16 : 9. But tradition says, "he has long been in heaven." What does Peter declare in regard to this? "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." "But has not David gone to heaven?" Let Peter answer: "For David is not ascended into the heavens."—Acts 2 : 29, 34. Now which will you believe, tradition, or the Bible?

Says Isaiah, "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart; and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come. He shall enter into peace, they shall rest in their beds."—Isa. 57 : 1, 2. And the Revelator also declares, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."—Rev. 14 : 13. Not that they are living and resting in heaven, but that they "rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." Now if the soul, the real man, lives, and the body only dies, would not Satan's declaration prove true? "And the serpent said unto the woman, "Ye shall not surely die."—Gen. 3 : 4.

Does Paul make any exception in regard to the soul? He says, "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."—Rom. 5 : 12. "And it is appointed unto all men once to die, but after this the judgment."—Heb. 9 : 27. Not that the body alone shall die, but "unto MEN once to die," and "after this the judgment," at the day appointed. And the Lord said to Adam, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust THOU art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. 3 : 19. Of the wicked, Job declares, they are "reserved to the day of destruction; they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." Not that they are now suffering wrath, but "shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." "Yet shall he be brought to the grave, and shall remain in the tomb."—Job 21 : 30, 32. Peter also says, "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished."—2 Pet. 2 : 9. Not that they are now suffering punishment, but are reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished."

As the apostle Paul also declares, "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."—2 Thess. 1 : 7, 8. Not at death, but when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed," or come. Our Savior's parable of the tares and wheat, plainly proves this point. He said, "Let both grow together until the harvest." "So shall it be at the end of the world; the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just."—Matt. 13 : 30, 49. And Paul, in addressing the ungodly, says, "But after thy hardness and impenitent heart, treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God;" not against the day of death, but "against the day of wrath." "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel." Rom. 2 : 5, 16. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."—2 Cor. 5 : 10. Tradition says, we are judged and rewarded at the coming of Christ, and day of judgment. Which shall you believe? Paul also says, "Therefore, judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts."—1 Cor. 4 : 5. Peter's declaration fully confirms these statements. "But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."—2 Pet. 3 : 7.

Our Savior says, "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice [now mark this, he does not say they are in heaven or hell, but 'all that are in their graves shall hear his voice'], and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5 : 28, 29.

Did Christ say in regard to Lazarus that he was in heaven? No. "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep."—John 11 : 11. Not as tradition teaches, that his soul, the real man, was alive, while his body slept; but, as in the announcement, "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead."—ver. 14.

Again, how can it be possible for the righteous, if they are already in heaven, to perish, even if there should be no resurrection? Yet Paul declares, "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." I repeat the question, If the righteous go to heaven at death, according to tradition, then how can they have perished, as Paul says they are, "if the dead rise not?" Now let Paul solve the question. He makes the resurrection and coming of Christ the grand theme and consummation of the Christian's hope. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." As Christ has arisen from the dead, so shall the righteous also be raised,—"But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—1 Cor. 15 : 16-62. Not at death, but at Christ's coming.

IS MIND THE RESULT OF ORGANIZATION?

If mind cannot exist independent of the physical organism, then of course it is the result of organization. If it can be proved that it can exist independent of the physical organism, then we are ready to admit that it is not the result of organization. But how is one going to work to prove that it can, or cannot?

An eminent defender of the doctrine of natural immortality, in a recent article, remarks: "We are personally acquainted with a number of individuals, now living, who testify to the fact of having been dead, and were conscious of the fact of dying, and being dead, who recognized their own persons as in spirit, and saw and recognized their own bodies as dead; saw what was done with those bodies, met with angelic guides, who took them to paradise, showed them persons and places there, conversed with persons there who were dead, etc."

This the writer presents to his readers as evidence that men are conscious after they die; hence mind can exist independent of the physical organism. Mark, he says, "they are now alive, and are conscious of being once dead." Now one of two things is true; and that is, they have either had a resurrection, or they were not dead. Which is true? If they were not dead, then it does not prove "consciousness in death;" and before he can make a very strong point of it, he must prove that they were truly dead. I don't think he will undertake such a task, and he seems to be aware of the dilemma he is in; for before he closes his article, he modifies the term "death," in their case, to "suspended animation." And again, their testimony is fatal to the popular theory concerning "heaven," "hell," "purgatory," etc.; for he adds, "From there (paradise) they were taken to hell, saw those whom they knew, saw their torments and sufferings," etc. Now if these were really dead, and their souls were really carried by angels to "paradise," how comes it that they got over that "unpassable gulf," into the dark regions of despair? The angels who conveyed Lazarus to paradise, could not conduct him to hades, even for the purpose of cooling the tongue of a poor sufferer there; but these individuals could visit the place just out of curiosity, without having any errand of mercy whatever. Surely, "times and seasons" have changed in the "invisible world," as well as in the visible.

But let us look in another direction for evidence whether mind can exist independently of the physical organism or not. Instances are not unfrequent where individuals, falling from a building, or being in other ways hurt, have had their skulls fractured, and have been taken up for dead, and for hours, yea perhaps for days, have lain in a state of total unconsciousness. To this they themselves attest, on recovering their senses again. They were not dead during this period of time, to be sure; but "animation was suspended," as in the cases mentioned by the writer of the above mentioned article. But I ask if mind could exist independently of the physical organism, why should not such individuals retain their thinking faculties during this period of time, instead of becoming utterly unconscious? If a certain blow on the head will cause to cease "all thought," and "all knowledge," by what rule of logic can it be proved that a harder one, which would entirely dismember the brain, would set the thinking machine to running more powerfully than ever? Indeed, I am inclined to believe that, as the living sometimes know "not any thing," the dead are surely no better off; but, as David says, "In that very day (the day of his death) his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146 : 4.

People sometimes are in a "trance," and are carried away mentally to one place and another; and this probably was the case with the individuals from which our brother gets his evidence, which he thinks sustains the idea of dead men being alive. But I think a better way to sustain a theory is to come right to the word of God, and if after trying it there, it is found that evidence is lacking, let the theory go, and cling to the word any way. Sometimes it so happens that an individual gets a theory instilled into his mind, and can not, or will not, easily get rid of it. Yea, they cherish it until it becomes dear to them, and they will exert every energy to sustain it, rather than yield to the convictions of truth.

An eminent Spiritualist lecturer, when opposing the mortality of man, as taught in the Bible, declared "he saw one man's soul leave the body!" The above brother does not claim to have seen any such a thing as this; he only conversed with them after they got back.

THE GIFTS OF GOD.

God in his goodness and unerring wisdom has given unto his children many and various gifts. Some, like his providences, are general; others are special. And while one is bestowed upon us unasked, it is received as the result or regard of a kind and generous Father, "who maketh the sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and unjust."

"The gifts and calling of God are without repentance"; but special gifts are not without prayer. We are led to understand from the teaching of Scripture that some things will never be granted without an effort upon our part. Hence we have these words: "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name. Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." And one thing is sure, that whatever God withholds, no earthly arm can give; whatever he is pleased to bestow, no earthly power can prevent. They may censure and imply that all is not right, but God seeth not as man seeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." Therefore, let no one impute the work of God to man or the devil, for that would be blasphemy.

It is very true that the gifts of God can be perverted; they can be abused, and prove a curse instead of a blessing. Wo to him who holds the fearful prize with any other view than to do the will of God and glorify his name. We have no reason to exalt ourselves because of the condescension of a prayer-hearing God, and think that it is merit or worth, genius or sagacity, or even that we stand upon higher ground than others; for the proud he knoweth afar off; they are also an abomination to him. "Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly."

In view of these things, I am led to adopt the prayer of Agar: "Remove far from me vanities and lies; give me neither poverty or riches; feed me with food convenient for me."

For the World's Crisis.

THE CHERUBIM.

Having read the book of the Hon. George Smith, London, on the subject of the Cherubim, I propose to notice the book, and its most important theme, very briefly.

Three theories have been put forth in solution of these mystic figures—the cherubim. First, that they symbolize "the three persons of the Holy Trinity." Second, that they refer to "angelic nature and ministrations." Third, that "they were typical of the true church—true believers in every dispensation of grace." pp. 4-6.

Then, after having compared and contrasted and criticized each text of Scripture, and each of the thrice named theories, the author says, "As I wish to avoid every approach to a fanciful exposition of Scripture, I have carefully abstained from giving any opinion as to the importance of the various appearances manifested in the cherubim. Not knowing the design of the several animal forms which are here introduced, I will not speculate upon it." p. 146. "What truth does it teach?" (the cherubim, Ezek. 1 : 1-9).

"I do not," he says, "pretend to answer a question which I regard as both interesting and important; but suggest two thoughts respecting it for the consideration of the reader." p. 147. The two thoughts are, first, the "four great divisions, or dispensations (in the scheme of redemption),—the patriarchal, the Levitical, the prophetical, the christian; all these ministered the gospel in different forms."

The second is like unto the first in its character, but far less likely to be the truth set forth by the cherubim. It is given thus:—"In gospel times we see the church divided into sections, separated from each other by distinctions of an earthly character, as were the cherubic figures. . . . In both aspects (four dispensations and church divisions) the symbol, I think, very strikingly accords with the past. But I leave these thoughts merely as suggestions for the consideration of the reader. Whether the first or the second view gives the true exposition of the scriptural symbol, or whether it had reference to either, I shall not presume to decide." This is the pith and sum of the whole book. To all which I respectfully reply, that I am glad to have had the reading of the book, and to have had my thoughts directed to its subject. To my apprehension, it has been the occasion to me of an advance in scriptural knowledge. The subject, however, as a whole, lies in my mind thus:—

"Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. 10 : 17. Of course, the doctrine of the cherubim must be found in the words which the Holy Ghost useth to set it forth to our faith. "How readest thou?" is the question. Answer. We can not read that they represent God, nor his chosen people, nor his honored priesthood; because God and Moses and Aaron and Israel his chosen were there present along with the cherubim. They, having been there themselves, needed no representatives; and hence, we must read further to understand the subject, as set forth in the holy Scriptures. No present person or class needs a representative. The "dominion" given to Adam and Eve over the earth was forfeited by transgressing the law, in Eden. At their expulsion, we find there cherubim.—Gen. 1 : 26, 27; 3 : 22-24.

Again, at the partial reorganization of the first dominion of God over this world, we read that "Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David his father." 1 Chron. 29 : 23; Ezek. 21 : 25-27; Micah 4 : 1-8; Luke 1 : 30-33; Acts 1 : 3, 6; 28 : 31; Rev. 11 : 15-18; Ps. 72 : 1-20; 102 : 13-21; 103 : 19-22. The camp of Israel, at the incipient organization of this kingdom, was arranged thus: Judah and two other tribes were placed on the east, to lead the whole; and his ensign was "the Lion." Reuben and two tribes, south, and his ensign "the Man." Ephraim and two tribes, west, and his ensign "the Ox." Dan and two tribes, north, and his ensign "the flying Eagle." Num. 2, and Jewish history. The priesthood of Israel was divided into twenty-four courses, each and all with their elders. The tabernacle stood in the midst, with its mercy seat surmounted by the cherubim, which formed the throne of Jehovah, as the con-central object—the controlling sovereign of the whole scene. This was "the shadow" of the kingdom to come.

Harmoniously with this organization of the typical kingdom—this "shadow of good things to come" (and yet to come; because Paul, like us, belonged to this passing gospel age)—we read of the orders of being in "the restitution" (Acts 3 : 21; Isa. 11 : 1-9) like to those that obtained at "the first dominion." Gen. 1 : 20-27.

Transcendentalism to the winds. Philosophy and speculation are out of place on such a theme as this. It belongs altogether to Revelation; and as such it is addressed to our faith, not at all to imagination. We may take in all parts of the word, that bear on the subject, and there stop—"with reverence and godly fear."

With the four-sided, four-ensigned camp of Israel; with "the four and twenty elders" (or heads) of the priesthood, and the throne of the Lord in the centre, over the cherubim, on the mercy seat; we find the basis of the imagery in Rev. 4. Here we find the throne of the Most High, with its living, everlasting scenery, the four living ones, and the four and twenty elders. Then, other visions give us the expanded view of the saints that sing the anthem of redemption. The angels join in the chorus, and all in heaven, earth and sea swell the universal praise that finds its crowning consummation in the reverent "Amen" of the four living ones, and the worship of the four and twenty elders.—Rev. 5 : 9-14. This "throne of the Lord" appears often, as in Rev. 11 : 15-18; 20 : 4-7. Now locate it. In Ps. 72, it is "the judgment" throne to "the oppressor"; and the radiant centre of the all-abounding blessing and glory which shall "fill the whole earth." Amen. Thus we find the type met by the antitype. We find "the end" declared "from the beginning." Isa. 46 : 8-11. Thus we can "have faith in God" as to the cherubim.

But the author of this book, after reviewing the whole subject, only attempts a two-fold suggestion, on neither of which will he presume to stand. p. 147. His reference to "four dispensations," as a solution of the doctrine of the cherubim, ignores the three primary dispensations, from Adam in Eden to Abraham; and also "the dispensation of the fulness of times"—the millennial age, yet to come. Hence this reference can not be entertained as truth for a moment.

His second reference to the sects of Christendom—the scandal and sin of the gospel age, is still more at fault. Because God could not so symbolize the "one body—the church," as his symbol of the professing church is seen in Rev. 17; 2 Thess. 2 : 1-8; Dan. 7 : 7, 8. "The judgment" impends on this "Babylon." The author having no knowledge of "the design of those animal forms,"—after all his investigation,—has but a slight hold, with his hesitating, two-fold suggestion, on the mind of the reader, to whom he so feebly appeals.

My apprehension of the cherubim may be inquired for, and hence I add that a few facts seem essential to the understanding of this subject, as it is set forth in Holy Scriptures.

1st. The principalities and powers in the heavenly places are to know or learn the manifold wisdom of God—not as (or because) they are the church; but BY the church. Eph. 3 : 10. This distinguishes between the church and the cherubim.

2d. Into which things (the prophecies of salvation) the angels desire to look.—1 Pet. 1 : 11-12; Daniel 8 : 13-14; Daniel 9 : 21. These angels are not the christians here addressed.

3d. These glorious orders of being, above men, are ever seen in attendance on the Lord Almighty in every dispensation: Ps. 103 : 19-22; Rev. 15 : 1.

4th. The parties to the old covenant—the Redeemer of Israel, and Israel his chosen people and priesthood, with all the then living heirs of promise (Heb. 11 : 24-35) were themselves then present. Hence they needed no cherubim representatives. The Redeemer and the then redeemed were there. The antitype must of course correspond to the type in these particulars, for all was made "according to the pattern." Heb. 8 : 5-7. So much seems certain from the above named points of fact: namely, the Redeemer of Israel, and Israel his redeemed, with all the honored priests, prophets, and things of that dispensation, were not symbolized by the cherubim: By consequence, the analogous facts will obtain in the antitype; and the conclusion is, that "the cherubim" who were present and acting their part in the economy of redemption (Gen. 3 : 22), before the first fallen man had been redeemed,—who were represented by proper forms over the mercy seat, at the redemption of his ancient people Israel,—did represent a then absent class of God's intelligent universe, who yet are interested in the great plan of redemption. This seems certain.

Harmonious with these facts, we have the antitype in Rev. 4th and 5th. The SAINTS sing the song of redemption.—Chap. 5 : 8-9. The angels swell the chorus; and then we read of every creature in heaven, earth and sea, who join in the universal anthem; while the four living ones pronounce the solemn "Amen," and the four and twenty elders worship and close and crown the consummated praise.

This seems conclusive, that the saints are not there in such scenes in symbol, and yet also in person; not there officially as priests, on behalf of themselves, and yet themselves there in another character. But such confusion in idea and in all the plain terms employed, results from not distinguishing between the saints and the four living ones, with the four and twenty elders. We can only attain to the measure of truth given to us on all such subjects of revelation. All attempts to surmount the bounds of truth revealed on this subject, will only re-act on their authors; "as it is written, add thou not to his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." Rev. 22 : 17-18; Prov. 30 : 6. I let the cherubim just fill the place assigned to them in holy Scripture, where they appear and act an exalted part, long generations before the first man died, or could have been redeemed in any way. Much of detail remains unwritten; but so much is humbly submitted for the truth's sake.

WOLVES.

The truth cuts very close, and the faithful workman will lay "judgment . . . to the line, and righteousness to the plummet"; yet there is a vast difference between this faithful dealing, and the tearing and devouring of wolves. It is the aim of the enemy to kill and destroy; and no one would mistake the skillful, experienced surgeon, who was doing his best to repair the mischief, for an enemy. No. The surgeon is a faithful friend, and if he cuts close, he will save you if possible. False teachers are compared to thieves and wolves. "The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy." They sometimes approach you very gently, and profess much love, but they are only wolves in sheep's clothing.

Let me exhort my dear brethren to pray much for this one thing, that they may be kept from the power of wolves. The Good Shepherd says that his sheep know his voice, and they follow him; but a stranger they will not follow, for they know not the voice of strangers. Then how is it that some are led away by false doctrines? Does that prove that they were not really members of Christ, sheep of his flock? Did they go out from us, because they were not of us? It must be so in many cases, for where the heart is not right, there is a readiness to embrace false views; and when the false teacher comes, it seems that some are drawn away from the flock, that it might be made manifest that they had no part nor lot with the saints. Jesus will protect his own, yet the wolf may annoy you if he cannot destroy.

One way in which the enemy annoys the people of God is to try to persuade them that they are mistaken in regard to their own standing. He brings to view your infirmities, and besetments, or thorns in the flesh, and says, "You are not a christian." But don't believe him. Cling close to Jesus, and do not follow strangers. Your Savior knows you, and I trust you know him, and will soon see him as he is.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Any association of persons acting in concert under an oath of secrecy is a "Secret Society." This oath is the real bond of union. Its abrogation would annihilate every such society in less than twelve months. They would burst like bubbles all over the land. The leaders know this; hence the tremendous guards thrown around this oath. To break it is high treason. Compared with this all other crimes sink into insignificance.

Here, too, is to be found their power. In every institution the point of power is contained in the bond of union. That which severs the latter will destroy the former. This is true of the christian church, and equally so of every aggregate body. And, whatever of influence there is in a name is found in this oath, for it gives designation to the society. To a certain class of minds, the whole charm is found in the fact of secrecy, and they are led and held by an insatiable something within themselves that is fed only from the stygian flood of mystery. And all the conscience there is enlisted is bound at this point also. An oath is brought in to constrain the conscience, and hamper its future action. They do not depend for success upon the purity of their principles—if they did, they would not need an oath to give them effect. They do not depend upon the virtue of their adherents; if they did, they would not deem it essential to bind them with an oath. Neither do they depend upon wealth; for then, too, the oath were unnecessary: but they appeal to the masses through the self-same methods of approach, and by identical arguments, with the superstitions of every age. In the fact of secrecy is their power. Banish that by a flood of light, and they are gone.

Make the best of them we can, and they are but the relics of ancient superstition. They have a numerous and noted ancestry. They hail from the hot beds of Paganism; they never could breathe where the living God reigneth. The power of the old heathen religions, so notoriously cruel and blood-thirsty, was concentrated in the mysteries. The voluptuous East, transferring them from the religious to the social world, swarmed with them, wherein unbelief, drunkenness and prostitution held high carnival for ages. Thence, they were carried to Greece, and finally to "the mistress of a subjugated world"—Rome, where they were so many corrupt stews of a degenerate and rotting empire. Even the polished historian—Livy, declares that as early as his day, these societies were filled with "gladiators, scoundrels, rakes and bawds." Since then, in every civilized nation of earth, as corruptions have increased, so have secret societies. The purer the state of society, the fewer of them have there been; and a bad looking feature of the case is that among others, the most corrupt of the people are always found in them. And, now, if there is a designing sycophant, a tricky demagogue, or an unblushing self-seeker in the United States that does not hail from some one or all of these sinks of pollution, I should like to see him. He is a prodigy.

I thought I would write something of their moral character; but in searching I find nothing of that kind connected with them. It is urged, they are benevolent institutions; they aid each other when in want; they are the friends of the widow and the fatherless, etc. It is not plain that they are any more benevolent in their practical workings than any insurance company in the land; but yet, acknowledging that all is true that is claimed for them by their most ardent defenders, what estimate are we to place upon that benevolence which requires a rigid, unqualified oath to call it into action? To my certain knowledge, in three secret societies, to every money transaction there is a regular debt and credit side, and the acknowledgement, "for value received," might well accompany every beneficence.

They generally have what they call religious services at every meeting. For this purpose they elect a chaplain to serve a certain period of time. In some societies—in all which I have known—he is elected without regard to moral character. It is not uncommon to see the bloated drunkard, the braggart swearer, the caviling skeptic, or the bold atheist, conducting the worship of Almighty God; while Doctors of Divinity sit by and smilingly listen to the reading of the most eloquent language of devotion by lips unused to speak the name of God but in blasphemy.

In reference to their membership, the questions asked at initiation would seem to involve the idea that none could enter but those who possess good moral character, and are believers in the existence of God and the authenticity of his word. But this is a vast mistake. Many men answer every question in the affirmative, putting their own construction upon them, who neither believe in God or the Bible. Besides, there is in many of the questions, what a man might easily suspect was purposed ambiguity. These questions, too, are not the real test. That is found in personal likes and dislikes. I never knew but a very few rejected, and the reason of that, in each case, was because they were so scandalously debased that members thought they should be disgraced in the eyes of the world if they received them, and their cause injured.

Neither does moral character give a title to the benefits promised. Have you the pass-word? Can you give the sign? These are the important questions. Character is crowded out of the question; right and wrong are questions not to be discussed. Here enters a dreadful antagonism. Law, with all its sanctions, has been set aside, human rights trampled under foot, and terrible crimes aided and abetted and disguised. Justice has been stopped in its course by a sign to the jurymen; traitors have gone free, and taken arms against the government, from a movement of the hand, unseen by all but God who keeps a book of remembrance. In short, there is no department of industry in the land, at this time, but what is more or less controlled by the influence of Secret Societies. But a few days since I was requested to give a church certificate to one of our most reliable and worthy brethren. In a short time afterwards the brother returned me the certificate, and related the circumstances which led him to make the demand. He is a laboring man, with a family dependent on him for support, and he was placed in a position where his situation depended upon his joining a secret society. If he united himself with it, his place was secure; if he did not, it was lost. He concluded to do so, and drew his letter from the church as a preparatory step. But God graciously interposed, and with tears and rejoicings at his signal deliverance, he returned to the embrace of the church.

It is the duty of the church to raise a warning cry against the invasions of such a foe; for, viewing these societies from the standpoint of christianity, nothing but a dark and terrible picture can be seen. "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" If the church accepts them as an ally, she cannot fulfill her mission. She dare not hail them as co-laborers. "Out of Zion the perfection of beauty God hath shined. Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." God recognizes no helper to Zion; only through her he shines, only by her he thunders his law. She can delegate no part of her work to another; the whole field is before her, and God has said, "Occupy till I come."—Earnest Christian.

☞ Little faults become great, and even monstrous in our eyes, in proportion as the pure light of God increases in us; just as the sun in rising, reveals the true dimensions of objects which were dimly and confusedly discovered during the night.

REPORT OF R. I. AND E. CONN. QUAR. CONFERENCE.

HELD AT RIVER POINT, R. I., JULY 4TH TO 8TH.

The Conference commenced Wednesday, 2 P. M., with preaching by Bro. A. Damman. Text, Paul's charge to Timothy, 2 Tim. 1: 1-4. A lively conference meeting followed the sermon. All felt that a good beginning had been made.

Wednesday evening, V. P. Simmons preached from,—"Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand."—Gal. 6: 11.

Thursday, July 5th, at 9 A. M., after a short prayer meeting, conference met for business. Bro. F. Durfee in the chair. The Clerk being absent, V. P. Simmons was chosen Clerk pro tem. Brn. Green and Crandell were appointed a committee to act with the chair in arranging preaching for the conference; after which delegates reported their various churches. Next came the report of preaching brethren. We have scarcely attended a conference where both preachers and delegates brought so good reports of their labors, and of churches of their connection. Some had seen souls converted and baptized since the April conference. From all parts a great increase of interest in Sabbath schools was reported. The church and ministry are becoming convicted in regard to their duty in this nursery of religion. Bro. J. J. Northrup, in his report of the church at Caroline Mills, told of a girl learning and reciting over 1600 verses of the Bible last year. The learning of portions of God's work had engaged her heart as well as mind. She had become a Christian, and her delight in the divine book amounts to an ecstasy of pleasure.

Bro. Corey, in his report of the East Killingly church, was not sure that there was any church in that place, taking the New Testament definition of a church. Voted, that Brn. Corey and Simmons be appointed a committee to ascertain whether there is a church at East Killingly or not. The latter declined the appointment, and the matter was reconsidered, and laid on the table.

At this point of the meeting, a "Crisis" was brought in, containing the report of the last conference. The report was read and accepted. Moved that Bro. Bellows be appointed a committee to procure a campmeeting tent for the churches of this conference. In harmony with this action, Bro. Bellows had a tent made from new, heavy canvas cloth, which was the best tent at the Wilbraham campmeeting, and one of the largest. The cost of the same was about $150. Bro. B. is lacking $25 to pay for the tent. We trust that some who have not yet paid any thing for the tent, will feel like doing so when they read this.

V. P. Simmons was appointed a committee to get the campmeeting fare reduced on the P. & W. R. R., also N. & W. R. R. For the reduction of fare on the former, the thanks of the conference are due to Bro. I. C. Humes, of Providence; for the latter, to Eld H. F. Carpenter, of Danielsonville.

The Freedmen's Mission was taken up, but no appropriations were made. Eight dollars more were pledged.

In the afternoon, Eld. Wood, of Exeter, R. I., preached from,—"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them."—Rom. 16: 17. Were it proper, as clerk of the conference, I would like to say many things in praise of this discourse.

In the evening, Bro. Phetteplace preached well from Rom. 8. This was the last sermon we heard. The meetings continued three days after we left. Brn. J. J. Northrup, Knight, Thomas, and Srs. Crumb and Lucy Phetteplace preached. We are not able to give their texts or subjects.

Next Conference to be held at Rocky Brook, first Wednesday in October. Preaching brethren present,—Durfee, E. Bellows, Northrup, Wood, Hopkins, Damman, Roberts, Knight, Phetteplace, Corey, Thomas, Card; Srs. Mary Otis, Crumb, L. Phetteplace.

V. P. SIMMONS, Acting Clerk.

HELP THE WEAK.

There are many channels open for us to work for the advancement of Christ's cause. The above is one of them. A few faithful brethren in Biddeford, Me., have actively devoted themselves and their substance to the cause of our soon coming Lord, and he has blessed their efforts in the conversion of sinners and in gathering good congregations under the gospel of the kingdom. It is a city of spindles, with an open door for usefulness. They have hired halls at great expense, and occupied as long as they could have them. The time came when they must abandon public labor or build an house for the Lord.

They commenced building, believing the Lord would give them aid; and now they have a neat, unfinished chapel, as the result of much prayer, toil, and sacrifice, in which they worship. Having expended their means, they need $500 to finish it, and pay its debt, so as to occupy in winter. I believe the Lord will furnish it. They need a large part of it this month—September. Who among those waiting for the Lord have $50, $25, $10, $5, or $1, they would like to invest in this house where the gospel of the kingdom may be preached, and sinners be gathered into the fold of Christ? There is money enough that will soon perish. Is it not best to let it preach while it can? I would be glad if I were able to build a thousand houses to sound out the last message to perishing multitudes.

We ask our brethren, who have means they would like to use in this manner, to aid the work in this important work, to send in their donations to Bro. John C. Libby, Biddeford, Me., or to the Crisis office, or to me, and all shall be duly acknowledged in the Crisis, so that you may know it is received.

I. C. WELLCOME.

☞ One hour to-day is worth two to-morrow.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Sept. 12, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.00 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $2.50 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

CLOSE OF THE VOLUME.

This number completes the present volume. Now is the time to pay in advance for the next volume ($1.25,) or for the next year $2.50.) It is much better, for all who can, to pay in advance. It is better for our subscribers, and better for us.

We hope to make our paper more interesting and profitable to our readers the coming year than ever before. Valuable aid will be afforded by Bro. D. T. Taylor, which, together with the many able contributors, and the stirring news that may be expected soon from both continents, showing that the end of this dispensation is at hand, will serve to make "our family paper" one that every lover of Jesus and his coming ought to have in his family. Let us all make new efforts to spread everywhere this messenger with its "glad tidings." This good news of Jesus' coming should be sent to everybody. Who will help do it? It is a good time to send the paper to your friends. Many are doing this, and the most happy results are following. Those who were opposed to this "blessed hope" when the first came are now rejoicing in it, and thanking the Lord that they ever received the paper. Shall not this good work receive fresh aid the coming year? Let us make an effort somewhat proportioned to the importance of the work. If we do, great good will be the result. "Remember Lot's wife." Do not look back now. It is too late.

We hope none will refuse our weekly visits the coming year. Do not leave us just as we are about to step into the land of glory.

ALTON BAY CAMPMEETING.

It was our privilege to enjoy a portion of the heavenly feast at the Alton Bay campmeeting. It commenced Aug. 26th, and continued eight days. We did not arrive on the ground till Wednesday noon, when we found a large gathering of the friends of Jesus, who were listening with much interest to some very practical remarks from Bro. Himes. We learned that the meetings had been profitable and pleasant. About one hundred tents were up.

The Alton Bay meeting has a romantic location on the banks of the Winnepiscogee lake at the termination of the Cocheeco R. R. from Dover, and at the landing of the steamers on the lake. A large number of board tents have been erected, which afford convenient homes for those who occupy them. The meeting was well conducted by an efficient committee, and good order prevailed. In size and interest, this meeting stands next to Wilbraham. The people in the neighborhood speak well of the meeting, and consider it a blessing to the community. The meeting this year has been much larger than ever before. Every year the interest increases at Alton Bay as well as Wilbraham.

Wednesday afternoon, at the close of the meeting, six were baptized in the beautiful lake that bathes the base of the camp-ground. It was an interesting scene witnessed by a large audience. In the evening Bro. Pyle preached on the time of the Lord's coming, giving evidence that he will come next year.

Thursday, Aug. 30th. At 9 A. M., we had an excellent prayer and conference meeting in front of the preacher's stand. A large number came forward for prayers and were blessed. We found many here, as in other places, who are anxious to become more like Jesus, in order to be ready to go to the marriage of the Lamb.

Preaching in the A. M. by the writer. In the afternoon Bro. Hastings preached a profitable sermon on bearing the cross of Christ. In the evening Bro. Thurber, from Canada East, preached a stirring discourse, well calculated to arouse the slumbering. Good prayer meetings followed, and sinners sought after the Savior.

Friday, Aug. 31st. Another good conference meeting was held at the preacher's stand. Many interesting testimonies were heard from the friends of Jesus. Bro. R. Williams preached in the morning, giving evidence that the Savior will come next year. At noon thirteen were baptized, and were richly blessed. Preaching in the afternoon by the writer, and in the evening by Bro. Munger. The prayer meetings were excellent, and the general tone of feeling on the whole encampment very good. Harmony prevailed, and peace filled the hearts of the saints. All appeared to be enjoying the meeting.

Saturday, Sept 1st. was one of interest and profit to those at the meeting. Several excellent prayer meetings were held, besides the general one at the stand. Several requested prayers and were blessed.

Bro. Decker preached in the morning on the time of the Lord's coming. In the afternoon we heard a very interesting and profitable sermon from Bro. J. Couch, showing what we are to learn from Jesus, as our teacher. The discourse was timely. In the evening Bro. C. Goodrich favored us with a profitable discourse on practical christianity. Ten were baptized in the afternoon, making twenty-nine in all.

Lord's day, Sept. 2nd. This was the closing day of the good meeting at Alton Bay. On account of rain in the morning, we were deprived of the love-feast appointed to be held at 8½ o'clock; but good prayer meetings were enjoyed in various tents. In the morning we listened to an excellent discourse from Bro. Hastings, on the personal coming of Christ, and in the afternoon to another from Bro. Couch, on the signs of the immediate appearing of our Savior.

We think the minds of our Brn. and Srs. were never more firmly settled in the belief that Jesus will soon come, than they are at the present time. While some believe he will come next year, others in 1868, nearly all are satisfied that his advent is just at hand, and that the time has come for all to watch and be ready. It is heart-cheering to know we are almost through with earth's long night of weeping, and that the morning of eternal glory is about to dawn upon the friends of Jesus, who have waited long for him to return and set up his everlasting kingdom.

Lord's day evening, about three hundred and seventy gathered around the table to commemorate the death and sufferings of Jesus. It was a heavenly season, and caused us to look forward more ardently for the coming of the Son of man, when the saints will enjoy the antitype, at "the marriage of the Lamb." After the communion, excellent prayer meetings were enjoyed in several tents, and much good accomplished.

During the campmeeting forty-six were baptized in the lake. The baptisms were scenes of special interest and profit. We all left the ground feeling satisfied that the meeting had accomplished much good.

"A WAIL OF AGONY."

The following is from "Carlton," the special correspondent of the Boston Journal, who is now traveling in Europe. Under the head of "THE POPE," he says:—

"But it is not only in Germany that the result of the contest at Sadowa is to be felt: there is to be also a united Italy. The thunder of Prussia's cannon has been heard also in the Vatican. Austria has been the protector of the Pope, Italy the foe of His Holiness. The Pope's organ at Rome heretofore has spoken of the Cabinet of Victor Emmanuel as a set of "brigands," but since Sadowa it has spoken respectfully of the "Italian Government." The Pope is learning to respect the King, who has given toleration in religion to the people of Italy.

But there comes from the Vatican a wail of agony.

His Holiness, seeing that sooner or later the rule of Victor Emmanuel is to include the holy city, has written a letter in which he appeals to all the Catholic world for assistance. He declares his intentions to remain at Rome. "I am resolved to die," says the old man, "at the foot of St. Peter's chair, in which Providence has placed me, were it even the will of heaven that I should be without fold, without authority, and almost in the hands of Victor Emmanuel."

Let the friends of freedom, of Christ and religious liberty rejoice at the events of the past few weeks; for not only in Germany has the Holy Alliance been tumbled into the dust, but the dawn of a new era is at hand in Rome. The temporal power of the Pope is drawing to a close. Before 1867 shall come in we shall undoubtedly see a united Italy from the Alps to the Adriatic; an Italy where the Bible may be read without hindrance from priestly rule. It will be the beginning of a new civilization and a new christianity in that sunny land, now waking from the sleep of centuries."

That "wail of agony" indicates approaching "death." Says the Revelator, when speaking of "the woman" that represents the church power at Rome, on the "seven hills, "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."—Rev. 18: 8. All things indicate that the full accomplishment of this scripture is not far in the future. What a solemn hour is the one in which we are living.

WHAT THEN?

It is conceded by all human authorities that the end of the temporal and civil power of the Papacy is at hand, and undoubtedly will immediately occur—probably this year. Granting this, what then? What will next occur? What is to follow in the prophetic calendar? We reply,

1. As the wicked or lawless one, the man of sin or Popery is to be destroyed by the second advent of Christ, and only by or in that advent, and hence must in some form exist until that advent; for if it had been destroyed previously, or had properly ceased to be as the man of sin for any length of time prior to the advent, it would not be true (as it must) that it is to be destroyed "with the brightness of his coming" (2 Thess. 2: 8); consequently, all signs and evidences that point to the speedy ruin of this power are so many harbingers of the instant coming of the Lord, whose personal coming alone will cause its utter and eternal destruction.

2. In Daniel's seventh chapter, the session of the Ancient of Days for judgment, and consignment of the fourth beast to the burning flame, are predicted to occur when the horn power—the Pope as a civil ruler—goes down. In vers. 21 and 26, the divine verdict in favor of the saints, as also their reception of the kingdom, is made concomitant with this session. And the kingdom comes into their possession at the advent.—Matt. 25: 31-34. "Until" this session and kingdom, this horn power, by reason of its kingly rule, wars with and prevails against the saints,—v. 21. The Septuagint of verse 26 has it, "And the judgment has sat (Alex. shall sit), and they shall remove his dominion to abolish it, and to destroy it utterly." This agrees with Paul. And this destruction appears to occur at the final ending of the "time, times and a half," in verse 25. And as Paul's later revelation must harmonize with, as well as qualify and explain any former revelation, the utter ending of the secular power of the Roman Popes, and the coming of our Lord, must be synchronal, or nearly so.

3. In Rev. 17th, the eighth head, which we are inclined to think is France under Louis Napoleon, is to "go into perdition"; and meanwhile, protecting the woman under a yoke of tyranny, bears her on to judgment and destruction. This woman is the symbol, not of the Romish church or people everywhere, but of the Papal Hierarchy, or body of rulers located at Rome. The Bonaparte family are elected by God to unhorse the harlot hag, and harshly or gently to bring her to grief and ruin. In this work the peoples of Italy are strangely moved to lend a helping hand. From Rev. 18th, we gather that the appointed doom of the great city Babylon, viz., the Papal hierarchy, is not to be driven out of Rome to Jerusalem, America, or elsewhere, but, together with its seat or capital city, to be submerged in flame. And European tradition for a thousand years declares that when Rome falls, the world will fall. And be it remembered that the event which follows the final fall of Rome is "the marriage of the Lamb."—Rev. 19th. And this marriage of the Lamb is when "the Bridegroom came."—Matt. 25th. And as Rome's ruin is imminent, so must the coming of the heavenly Bridegroom be near.

4. Mr. Ebenezer Elliott, one of the profoundest prophetical writers in England, whose conclusions are approved by Dr. Cumming, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and other high dignitaries, suggests as a primary beginning of the 1260 years usually allotted to the Papal civil power, A. D. 529-533, and as a secondary and complete beginning, A. D. 604-608, the difference between the two, like the difference between Daniel's 1260 and 1335, being 75 years. This would bring the final ending within the circle of three years, the first year of which we have now entered upon. In my list of American writers on prophecy, I find thirty-five authors (but few if any of them Adventists so-called) who agree that 1866-68 will end the 1260 years.

From this it is seen that that which is to occur next after, or accompany the loss of the temporal power of the Roman Popes, is the advent and judgment. We earnestly invite attention to these things. Acknowledging the fallibility of all human calculation, still we cannot help thinking that Rome is neither for the Pope or his Cardinals, nor for Victor Emmanuel, but by the fiat of God is reserved for fiery and sudden ruin. And that the present Pope's peril is the peril of the whole world. And that Gian Maria Mastia Ferretti Salazzi, at the present time Pius Ninth, is the last of the Roman Popes. And that greater events are at hand than are prognosticated by the secular press. And that Christendom is well nigh blind touching the nature and issue of that solemn change which is just upon us, viz., the world's crisis. D. T. T.

WAIT.

How tardy and tedious are waiting hours, when love and longing rules the heart. How impatient is the bride to wear her snowy robes. How with outstretched neck and eyes intent do those who long for His appearing

"Chide the tardy seals that yet detain
Thy Lion Judah from his destined reign."

How cold seems the unpitying world. How heartless its spirit and tone. How dreary is time's night. How cruel is death. How sullen is the grave. How wearisome is disease. How hateful is sin. How desirable the immortal state. How longed for is earth's better day. How jubilant the feet which press towards the golden bars that one day shall drop low to let them in. O weary, broken heart, it is coming. It will surely come at last. All the angels would stand appalled if God but made the sacred promises to the ear and then broke them to the heart. Rest thou in glad assurance. And wait. To wait is to stay or tarry in calm, joyful expectation. Do friends forsake? Wait. Is the grief of soul very bitter? Hope and wait. Is the parting pang severe? Wait a little while. Does disease waste and wither? Be good and wait. Do the wicked scoff? Let them have their day—wait for yours. Is sin a burden? Fight it and wait. Do sorrow and sighing weave for you a crown of thorns? Still wait. There is many a crushed spirit that will never be mended till Jesus comes. Are you poor and dispirited? Only wait and you will one day be a king. Do friends mistake you and so thrust the iron into your soul? Keep silence and wait. Are you disappointed in your fondest earthly hopes? Just look "over the river" and wait. Is your naturally gentle spirit fretted to despair? Seek his peace and wait. Does guilt come down upon you? Lie down under the cover of Christ's perfect righteousness and wait. Do you yearn for the Bridegroom's arrival? Wait and remember that the trump that calls you to the endless festival will usher thousands into the outer darkness and the black despair. You can afford to wait, and to work while you wait. "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ."

It is an awful thought that these are the last waning years of mercy. And if the period of eternal rest does not come soon enough to suit your ardent wishes, remember it will come too soon for perishing sinners, for whom is in store the eternal death. As you wait, carry to glory with you all the souls you can. "Be patient, brethren." God's great clock may seem to move slowly, but nevertheless it moves. The hands are passing on to the hour. The wheels are rolling round to the final stroke. Home and heaven cannot be far. The angel is putting the "trump of wondrous melody" to his lips. Wait. "Be ye also ready" for the summons. Wait.

FOR THE "THRILLING NARRATIVE," $1.00 EACH.—Julia A. Russell, J. Bigwood, M. M. Bassett, P. Hitchcock, Mrs. H. Eaton, J. Megquier, C. L. Aldrich, Anon.

WHO WILL HELP?

It is proposed to embody in one tract of thirty or forty pages a condensed view of the combined scripture and church testimony concerning the doctrine of the Advent, and last things, and to scatter them by thousands wherever the English language is spoken and read. Noble effort. Worthy of a firmly cherished, practical faith in what a hundred thousand people in America profess to be looking for; viz., the speedy coming of Christ. And the deviser of this enterprise says, "I'll put $1000 into this tract." Then it stands:—just one thousand dollars of treasure lent to the Lord or laid up in heaven, to be returned again with just such compound interest as the great God only can give in the day of final account and reward. This sum will print doubtless 30,000 tracts or a million of pages. One tract in a family will thus furnish this blessed light to nearly two hundred thousand souls. Let mighty consecrating prayer rest over this christian effort that thousands may by its instrumentality be led to see their way clearly to "that blessed hope."

And now what I am after is the next man to "go and do likewise." Who and where is he? I could name out loud here a score who are worth two, three, and even twenty times as much of this world's goods as is the generous donor already referred to. O rich "Adventist," whose very denominational name suggests your professed faith in a coming day of wrath on a guilty world, and who bearing this name and cherishing this faith calmly endure this doomed world's scorn; suffer me to ask, are your gifts made to spread the great light in which you walk consistent with your name and faith? Not in my name or for my sake do we ask your thousands to print these solemn, joyful tidings that are already mightily stirring the great heart of the people; but in the name and for the sake of the Lord, and of perishing millions that still sit in darkness. Enjoying your ten, twenty, fifty, one hundred and two hundred thousand dollars, and every year adding to your capital that surplus of your immense income which you find it impossible to spend upon your family, will you suffer our brother to stand alone in his gift? Will you bear such shame? There is only one "safe" that will stand the fire soon to be kindled. Better put your money in it and give Jesus the keys. Its locks are unpickable. Its walls are fire-proof. God is the maker thereof. And some day the Judge will cry in your ears louder than I do now, "Give an account of thy stewardship." D. T. T.

ARTICLES FOUND ON ALTON BAY CAMP-GROUND.—Two umbrellas; one Bible, marked Moses Clark; one towel, marked A M Hayes; one black lace veil; one short night-dress; one little boy's sack; one reticule, with glasses; one jack-knife; one pair of glasses; one pair of black cotton gloves, and several odd ones. J. G. SMITH.

BRO. H. E. AUSTIN, Austinsville, Penn., writes:—"I can't get along without the Crisis. It is all the preaching that I have. O how I wish some of the brothers would come here and preach the word. We are poor, but if some brother would come here, he would find a pilgrim home. I have not heard an Advent preacher but once in five years."

For the World's Crisis.

CAMPMEETINGS.

BRO. GRANT:—The great campmeetings at Wilbraham and Alton Bay are in the past. I attended them both; and I wish to say that I think them, on the whole, the two best meetings we have had for twenty years.

I went on to the camp-ground at Wilbraham Wednesday morning, and found a hearty shaking of hands and good fellowship from all the gathered multitude. The friendly greetings of the dear children of God from the East, West, North and South, were blessed, glorious, cheering enough to make one forget all the sorrow, reproach and stigma he may have passed through, and to feel he was with a company of whom the world was not worthy.

The committee, with an even and liberal hand, did their duty, so as to administer to the wants and comfort, both temporarily and spiritually, of all.

The society meetings went on harmoniously, and if all were not fully suited, love constrained them to yield, so that all passed off with perfect peace.

The preaching was timely. Our specific work was not left. The peculiar doctrine that identifies us as a people, was kept prominent. Our "strong doctrines," and strong points of gospel faith, were not lost sight of by the defenders of the truth, and the word of life shone in its native simplicity, as given by inspiration, and was the power of God to the salvation of a goodly number who came to Mt. Wilbraham.

The prayer meetings in the tents were excellent. The Spirit of the Lord prevailed so extensively, that if you did not run in the channel you could not run at all. So all went on joyfully. It was blessed, yea, a foretaste of the union, love, and eternal glory we shall soon possess. With lingering looks I left the loved ones Friday evening. But the pleasurable sight of that thickly-settled, tented grove, where you would lose yourself, and be lost, and find yourself among the dearest of earth, —a place almost as dear as Peter's, when he wanted to build tabernacles—this scenery will never be erased from my memory till lost in the glory revealed.

O it was blessed. How many will look with joy unspeakable to the memorable campmeeting on the hill-top—Mt. Wilbraham. And I doubt not its influence will be salutary among our brethren all over New England. There is evidently a growing love of Jesus' soon coming, among us. This is as it should be. Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

The same good spirit prevailed at Alton Bay, while I was there. The preachers and people seem to be in love and good fellowship with each other. Alton Bay is the model place for a campmeeting. I have never seen any ground so well adapted to seat a large congregation to preach to. The ground rises one seat above the other, so that all can see you, and you can see them. This meeting, under God, has been a great success, especially this year. The weather was as good as could be desired, the order admirable, and many will eternally thank the Lord for the campmeeting at Alton Bay in 1866. The saints were quickened, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners converted. Praise ye the Lord, and give him glory.

And now they are over, and in memory, let us who preach "this gospel," with the whole church, be ready, in the name of the Lord of hosts, for an aggressive movement. Now is the time for conferences, protracted meetings, and meetings in new places. Let us take hold of the work anew. Ye soldiers of the cross, let our weapons in the future be pointed at the enemy, and not at one another; building ourselves up on our "most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost," doubling our diligence, so as to lay hold on eternal life.

Perhaps the most joyful feature of these meetings was, that many came that were sinners in the sight of God, but were converted to Christ and the truth, and found joy and peace in believing, and were baptized (some of them), and went on their way rejoicing. Glory be to God. The Lord is with us, and is soon coming. A little while, and the good will have an introduction into the paradise of glory. I want to be there. Amen, in love,

Salem, Mass., Sept. 6th. L. BOUTELL.

For the World's Crisis.

THIEVES! THIEVES!

When coming from Camp Wilbraham to Alton Bay Camp, I "fell among thieves," and was robbed of what money I had reserved to get through another meeting, and get myself and family home,—Some $12, with $500 in notes. I give this notice of it, as a warning to all our brethren who travel to look out for the "Cain family."

While stepping into a car-door, in the "Boston and Maine depot," I was met by two men, who hastily demanded to pass out. I attempted to step back, but was as suddenly pressed by two men in the rear, urgently demanding to pass in. In an instant each party became vehement to pass me, quarreling with each other over my shoulders, at the same time pressing me on all sides as closely as I could bear. This struggle lasted, perhaps, one minute, completely absorbing my attention, while some one of them took my wallet from my pantaloons pocket, when they broke the jam and suddenly dispersed among the throng on the floor of the depot.

This is a very scientific way to steal, and it is being much practised, I learn. Therefore be on your guard. Always put your money where they cannot get it, or avoid all opportunities of being crowded, or if suddenly caught in a crowd, put your hands in your pockets and cry "Pickpockets," aloud, and they will let you pass. We have great reasons to thank God that he is so soon to give us a world cleansed from all sin and sinners.

I was greatly obliged by the friends who furnished me a ticket free to Alton Bay, though I know not who they were, and for tokens of charity from other brethren. May the Lord reward them. They have my thanks.

Sept. 7th, 1866, I. C. WELLCOME.

INFORMATION.—Bro. Grant: I wish to say through your paper, that when I got home from the Wilbraham campmeeting, I found a new sheet with my things, put in through mistake. If the owner will write to me, I shall be happy to send it to him. I stayed in Bro. Hastings' tent.

PHEBE DAVENPORT, Holliston, Mass.

DUNTON. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Philipston, Mass., March 5th, 1866, Sarah E. Dunton, aged thirty-four years.

Our sister found in Jesus a peace that made her tranquil in her weary hours of wasting pain, until at length she died in hope of a resurrection to life, and rests with other loved ones of the family, leaving an aged, widowed mother, an invalid sister, and a brother to sorrow, yet not without hope.

"We shall greet them at home, we shall greet them,
Though now they are hid from our sight;
We think of the time we shall meet them,
And it oft fills our hearts with delight.
We have laid them away in deep sadness,
Yet not without hope in our breast,
For again they will join us with gladness,
And enter the heavenly rest.

We shall greet them at home, we shall greet them,
When the sorrows of life shall be o'er,
Our loved ones, we hope soon to meet them,
On Eden's fair, beautiful shore,
The glorious thought, how consoling,
To know that the time is so nigh,
When Jesus, the world, shall, controlling,
Permit us to join them on high.

We shall greet them at home, we shall greet them,
Where nothing can ever divide,
Where sickness, or death, cannot harm them,
Nor tear them again from our side;
There we'll range beside life's cooling river,
'Neath the tree of life's shade we shall roam,
With the glory of God shining ever,
We'll greet them, we'll greet them at home."

BERRY. Died in Rye, N. H., Aug. 24th, 1866, of consumption, Mary Abby Berry, aged twenty four years.

Sleep sweetly, dear sister in Jesus. Thou wast loving and beloved. Thy sisters and brother, thy father and mother will miss thee much in the family circle. Thy chair is vacant at the table. Thou art gone, and we are lonely. Our tears may fall upon thy silent grave among thy kindred, but thou wilt see them not. Our sighs mingle with the summer winds, but thou wilt not hear them. We shall miss thee in the social gathering, where oft thy voice told the sweet story of the cross, and wonders of redeeming love. But Jesus will not miss thee when his bright jewels are gathered; and O may we not be missed by thee in that soon coming morning, when the days of our mourning shall be ended. Rest, then, dear one, peacefully rest. Thy work is done—well done. Jesus loved thee, and thou didst love him; and "so he giveth his beloved sleep," till his own sweet voice awakes thee to life forevermore. J. N. BERRY.

WOODWARD. Died at Maplewood, Mass., Aug 22, 1866, Lottie Augusta, only child of Edward F. and Mary M. Woodward, aged one year and nine months.

Even at this tender age, she loved Jesus, and spent many hours singing,—

"My days are gliding swiftly by,"

"I love thee, I love thee," and

"There is no cross that I can bear,"

and almost the last words she spoke, after she had prayed the Lord to "make Lottie well," were these "The Lord will take care of Lottie;" her eyes beaming, meanwhile, with love and confidence.

Farewell, Lottie, till the Resurrection Morn The Lord will take care of thee.

"Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," is the prayer of HER PARENTS.

IS IT WELL?

Affectionately, to Bro. and Sr. Brooks, of Cheshire, Ct.

"Is it well with the child?"—2 Kings 4.

Sleep thee sweetly, little Walter,
Tho' with grief our bosoms swell,
Tho' in agony we falter,
Faith can answer, "It is well."

Oh, we made thy grave in sorrow,
Broken-hearted left thee there,
Almost dreading each to-morrow,
We do miss thee everywhere.

But for grace we'll still keep pleading,
And from tears our eyes refrain,
For a promise we've been reading,
"Thy loved ones shall live again."

Yes! when Jesus, our life-giver,
Shall death and his power destroy,
Saints immortal, saved forever,
We may meet our darling boy.

M. L. DURANT.

STONE. Died in New York, Aug. 28th, 1866, Falith May, daughter of William and Julia A. Stone, and grand-daughter of Joseph K. and Elzada Bellows.

The struggle is over. Death has triumphed, and our lovely May sweetly rests in Greenwood, with her little brother; but in the fulness of our souls we praise God for the assurance that he will soon bring them again from the land of the enemy. My husband, after an absence of fifteen weeks, arrived in time to be with us a few hours before her burial.

ELZADA BELLOWS.

BROOKS. Died in Cheshire, Ct., Aug. 12th, 1866, Walter A. Brooks, only son of Bro. Asahel and Sr. Brooks, aged twenty months.

He was loved by all who knew him.

We laid thee away in thy lone coffin bed,
While with sorrow our heartstrings were breaking;
Yet we know when the trumpet shall waken the dead,
Thou wilt share in the first glad awaking.

HINDS. Died in Wilmington, N. Y., July 14th, of consumption, Ellen Hinds, daughter of John S. and A. M. Hinds, aged eighteen years, ten months, and two days.

She was sustained by the grace of God during her sickness, and sleeps in Jesus. J. S. HINDS.

DUREN. Died in Carlisle, Aug. 27th, 1866, of disease of the brain, Isaac Frankie, only child of Sarah M. and Asa Duren, Jr., aged six years and seven days.

Frankie was a good, affectionate boy, and I think it truly can be said, never told a lie. S. M. D.

HAYES. Died in Methuen, Mass, Sept. 29th, 1865, Frank E., only son of Charles P. and Fanny E. Hayes, aged two years, six months, and sixteen days.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

By steamer. Liverpool Aug. 25th, Queenstown 26th.

The treaty of peace between Austria and Prussia was finally signed Aug. 23. Bohemia was to be completely evacuated in three weeks after the exchange of ratifications.

At the request of Italy, Austria, before the signing of the treaty of peace at Prague, gave her unconditional assent to the union of Lombardy and Venetia with Italy. The French Government concurred in the arrangement, admitting that it only acquired Venetia to hand it over to Italy.

Vienna, Sept. 3. Affairs in Saxony reassume a warlike aspect. The Saxon troops have been withdrawn from the Hungarian frontier, and the army is being provisioned.

The treaty of peace with Prussia binds Austria not to interfere.

The South German journals charge Austria with breach of treaty with Bavaria in making a separate peace with Prussia.

New York, Sept. 4. The following dispatch was received to-day and is believed to be the first instance in which any message has been sent from mid ocean to Europe and thence to America on the same day:

"On Board Steamship Great Eastern,
Atlantic Ocean, Sept. 4, 1866.

To D. H. Craig, General Agent of the Associated Press, New York:

We have just received telegrams from London saying there is a serious outbreak in Canada. Please advise me accurately by cable, via Heart's Content and Valentia, in regard to the same.

We expect to arrive at Heart's Content on Saturday next. All going on well.

CYRUS W. FIELD."

London, Sept. 4. The troops sent to Canada will be armed with breech-loaders.

Berlin, Sept. 4. Sixty thousand Prussian troops are ordered to the Rhine. Prussia is treating for the purchase of the iron-clad Dunderberg.

Cable Dispatches.

Steamship Great Eastern,
North Atlantic Ocean, Sept. 6.

All goes well. We continue to pay out the cable and shall be at Heart's Content about Saturday.

Florence, Sept. 6. The cholera is making sad ravages in Italy.

Paris, Sept. 6. A rumor prevails that the Emperor Napoleon intends to issue a manifesto announcing his views upon the state of Europe.

Another Atlantic Cable. Landing of the Cable of 1865.

Heart's Content, Sept. 8. Since Sunday morning uninterrupted success has followed the Great Eastern, and she laid the shore end of the cable of 1865 on Saturday evening at 4 o'clock, under a salute from the ships of war in the harbor and tremendous cheers from a large crowd of spectators, who had assembled from all parts to witness this second triumph of ocean telegraphy, even greater than that of July 27. The electrical condition of this cable is most perfect, and messages are now being sent and received over it.

When the shore end of the cable was brought to the telegraph office immense enthusiasm was manifested by the people. Messrs. Canning, Clifford and Field were severally seized by the crews from the men-of-war, aided by civilians, hoisted over the heads of the people and cheered vociferously.

Berlin, Sept. 7. The Prussian Chamber of Deputies has passed the bill for the annexation of Hanover, Hesse, Nassau and the city of Frankfort. A bill for the annexation of Schleswig and Holstein has been sent in by Count Bismark.

The German Gazette and the Berlin Press are hostile to these movements, and fears for the future are entertained.

DOMESTIC.

New York. The Herald's Havana correspondence says information has been received from St. Domingo that the project of annexation to the United States is regarded as consummated.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.—A foreign paper states that the Jews are suffering severe trials in the Danubian Principalities, and all the power of the authorities barely suffices to save their lives from the infuriated populace. A letter from Bucharest says that the whole Jewish community have been kept in a state of alarm by the threats of a general massacre. On the 30th of June their barely finished beautiful temple, which cost about 23,000 ducats, was destroyed, the walls and roof alone standing. All the interior furniture of a small synagogue was also destroyed, and the scrolls of the law trampled under foot and torn. But for the interference of the National Guards, matters would have proceeded to greater extremities. At Jassy, too, the Jews suffer severely. The cholera prevails there intensely, and they lose ten to one of the other population by it. They are in danger of pillage and massacre by the rest of the inhabitants, and are preserved only by the energetic efforts of the government.

☞ The famine in India is increasing, and starving wretches have begun to flock from the country to the cities. "Hundreds of men," says a Bengal circular, "are daily coming down to Calcutta from the famine-stricken districts. Many pass their days eating skins of mangoes picked up in the streets; many sell their children for an anna or two, or devote themselves to pocket-picking and murder.

☞ The plague of locusts which has broken out in Algeria causes great uneasiness to the French government, and now the troops are called out to destroy this new species of enemy. The amount killed is immense, not less than 3000 cwt. the average result of a day's work.

☞ The Mahomedan inhabitants of Mazanderan, in Persia, massacred a great number of Jews in that town during the festival of the Moharrem, and have compelled the rest to adopt Mahomedanism.

☞ The first steam vessel that ever crossed the Atlantic was the Savannah, in the month of June, 1810, from Charlestown to Liverpool.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 571. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents, if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

OUR EDEN HOME.

Though I wander alone through earth's dreary waste,
Weary and care-worn, with sorrows oppressed;
I think of the Eden prepared for the saints,
Where God's faithful children will surely find rest.

Though sad is my heart, and bitter the tears
That fall from my eyes as I journey along,
I think of the home where the weary ones rest,
And where I shall join in the conqueror's song.

I think of the loved who are laid in their graves,
To sleep till the morn when the trumpet shall sound;
But, thank God! it wont be long till the voice of our Lord
Shall bid them come forth from the cold, dusty ground.

Though faltering your footsteps, and though sad is your heart,
Though you shrink in dismay from the cold world's frown,
Remember that Jesus will bring you safe through,
And reward you in Eden with a conqueror's crown.

Then, dear ones, cheer up, for the land heaves in view,
Old Time is fast sinking, and will soon be no more;
We can see even now the fair fields of Eden,
And the glories that wait you on that blessed shore.

REPORT OF PROGRESS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

(Concluded.)

Lord's day, July 22nd, we spent in Fairhaven, just across the river from New Bedford. Bro. Joseph Thomas is pastor of this church,—quite a young brother, yet an earnest, faithful laborer, and highly esteemed by the church with whom he labors, and in all the region about. The Fairhaven church is a live, active church, united, spiritual, prosperous,—a peculiar people, zealous of good works. The brethren and sisters are of the class who are really looking for the Lord, and living in expectation of being made like him. There are old, tried soldiers of the cross here, who have been through many a battle, stood for the truth in 1843 and '54, and when foolish virgins let their lamps go out, kept them burning. And here are young converts, deeply interested in the coming of Christ. It was good to be with the dear ones there. The Lord's day was pleasantly spent, and we were reminded that real christians will minister to the minister while he ministers to them, according to Paul's rule. God bless the church in Fairhaven. Amen and amen.

Tuesday, 24th, we went to the Tremont campmeeting, where we remained two or three days. We enjoyed the services much. It is a real privilege to hear the brethren in the ministry preach. We hear so little except our own poor sort, that the opportunity of hearing others is golden, and we enjoy it. The weather was quite rainy, and on Wednesday P. M. particularly so. Then we experienced a shower, when the lightning-flash and thunder-peal were awfully sublime. An appointed prayer-meeting at the stand at one o'clock was adjourned to the tent, and such was its character that, although preaching was appointed at two, it seemed to be God's order to continue the social meeting, and five o'clock came before we found a place to close. It was one of those meetings in the direction of which man has but little to do. All were led by the Lord. The importance of being free in Christ was a very prominent point in the exhortations and remarks. The power of God was there, and while we were gathered about in the tent, some on the seats, some on trunks, and some sitting in the straw on the ground, the rain pouring in torrents upon our tent (which seemed like a great umbrella, under which we had all gathered for shelter), the lightning flashing, and its bolts striking near us, and the thunder bursting in grandeur and rolling but just over our heads, and near about us,—for we seemed to be amidst the lightning and thunder,—yet we could say,

"This awful God is ours,
Our Father and our love."

There were heart searchings, earnest prayers, and joyful shoutings, and a diversity of experience was brought out. The gifts were used in God's order, so that we felt the truth of Paul's language,—"Diversity of gifts, but the same spirit."

That meeting will never be forgotten. Those who are known as Congregationalists and Methodists, ministers and members, were there enjoying the occasion. Bro. Hook was there, with his truly christian sympathies alive with interest in the evidence of the good work; and Bro. Batchelor, who arrived just in season to get a glimpse of the glory; and Bro. Israel Damman was there, shouting and leaping and praising God, his joyful theme of "free in Christ" ringing out in his exhortations; and others were there to enjoy the occasion. Tears of joy and sorrow, songs of praise to Him who rules the storm, and words of earnest hope of soon seeing Jesus in his beauty rending the vail of blue that covers the holy place from the congregation below, and coming to bless and redeem his saints, made the place solemnly glorious. The lightning bolt struck a tree near the tent, and the R. R. Depot, only half a mile away; but we heard God's voice in the storm; as Bro. Piper expressed it, "Father talking to his children." We were glad and joyous. O what a meeting that will be when, amidst tempest and earthquake and fire, Jesus will redeem his saints, and they shall meet and shout and sing, safe in the chamber of which the seraphic prophet Isaiah spake, rejoicing and waiting till the indignation be overpast. "What a meeting that will be."

Thursday A. M., we tried to preach, and had a free time. It is good to speak when so many of God's ministers and faithful children are there to pray. It makes a man preach even beyond himself. He forgets himself, and launches out into the deep things of God. We heard Bro. Grant in an interesting discourse in the P. M., and in the evening left for New Bedford.

Friday, July 27th, we took Nahum's chariots for Providence. How forcible is the prophet's description of these vehicles: "The chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir-trees shall be terribly shaken. The chariots shall rage in the streets; they shall justle one against another in the broad ways; they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings" (Nahum 2: 3, 4). No vehicles ever made before the cars have answered this description, and these, says the prophets, shall be "in the day of his preparation." Daniel's "time of the end", and the angels "hour of his judgment." How they rush along in their fury. Earth trembles beneath their iron tread, and now, as they sweep through the forests, see the fir-trees bow. Coupled together, how they "justle one against another." Stand near the track, just in advance of the train in the evening, and as you hear it in the distance, panting like a huge monster, making the [illegible] and valleys ring, you see it a meteor or a fiery furnace, and the dense volumes of smoke rolling out and circling above it; and you will realize the truth of the prophet's declaration, "They shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings."

We seated ourselves in these vehicles, so much like comfortable parlors, and were borne along to Providence, where we arrived in due season, and where we spent the following Lord's day, July 29th, and preached at New Market Hall.

The brethren received our message in the Lord, and we were happy in the privilege of being with them and speaking from the Scriptures of truth. Called, while here, on some relatives we had never seen before. Found one in the enjoyment of religion, though in ill health. Had an interesting conversation with her, and a Congregationalist lady, as to the truths found in the word. Found them free to listen to the truth, and ready to investigate the word, Berean like, to see whether these things were so. They were dissatisfied with the interpretation of the word as they had heard it; and yet not satisfied that the doctrine of immortality through Christ alone could be true. We gave them expositions of some passages, and on calling again found them deeply interested. Said our friend, I shall study my Bible as I have never studied it before. A Methodist lady called here yesterday, and I mentioned the subject to her. She had never heard the views advocated, but was much pleased with them, and we decided to study the Bible as we never studied it before. Yes, that is the effect of the truth, of a simple interpretation of the word. It gives it a new interest. It is a pity that the beauties of truth have become so enshrouded in the mist of a spiritual interpretation, and covered with the rust of a bad theology; but the light is breaking, truth is shining, and many are beginning to feel its blessed, saving influence, and rest their long-distracted hearts on a "thus saith the Lord." We are living on this account in a grand, a glorious hour.

Tuesday, July 31st, and Wednesday, Aug. 1st, we were at Natick, R. I., and had some good meetings. Found a company here who enter heartily into the work, and such are always fed by the preacher of the word, even though it be in a simple manner. We have been in no place where the people, comparatively speaking, helped us more liberally on our journey than here. We met Bro. Roberts, a colored preacher, here, full of faith, and with his whole being aroused and interested in the glorious coming of our blessed Lord.

Thursday and Friday evenings, we spent in Coventry, R. I., where we found a home with Bro. Peckham's family. Bro P. has furnished and lighted a hall of his own for the brethren, and lighted it at his own expense; and no people are better provided with a hall to worship in than those at Coventry. There are but few active brethren here,—only two or three families, but we enjoyed our visit with them very much.

Saturday, Aug. 4th, we were on our way again, and arrived at Danielsonville, Ct., where we preached on the Sabbath following. This is the home of Bro. H. F. Carpenter. We met him on our way to Danielsonville, and journeyed together the remainder of the way. The Lord provided us a good pilgrim's rest at Bro. Noah Shumway's, where we were well entertained. Bro. S.'s wife being away, his daughters made us comfortable, and gave us food convenient for us. We preached here three times on the Sabbath, and then attended the Methodist social meeting at 7½ o'clock. Bro. W. H. Stetson is the pastor here, a Bro. with whom we have labored in the past, when we were with the Methodist people. We were both stationed on Martha's Vineyard, and labored together in a protracted meeting on his charge. At the close of the meeting he came to us, and grasped our hand in an earnest, brotherly manner, and asked, "Is this Bro. McKinstry?" We gave him an affirmative answer. Our external appearance had somewhat changed, and he did not remember us distinctly; but said, "I knew you were in the place, and if I had known you were here, should have had you to assist me in the meeting." This was refreshing. He knew our mission there, and yet, free from all sectarianism, could still cherish us as a christian brother. He is one of those who still love the life and power of religion, and cannot sympathise with the worldly degeneracy and conformity that characterize many who profess to be the Lord's, and followers of Wesley.

The following evening, we were present at a young people's meeting, a very interesting one, held under his charge; and, by his urgent entreaties, we took a seat with him, and assisted in the exercises as we were able. The following day, self and wife called at his home, and passed several hours in pleasant conversation, interspersed with reminiscences and themes of interest to the cause of Christ. God's true people are all one in Christ Jesus, and wherever we meet his real servants, we are received for Christ's sake. God bless Bro. Stetson, and make him abundantly useful. Amen.

Thursday Eve, we preached at South Killingly, in the neighborhood of Bro. E. Bellows. We found Bro. B. actively engaged in getting the new conference tent ready, before the Wilbraham campmeeting. Had a pleasant time. L. C. McKINSTRY.

"ARMAGEDDON."

This word has been considered by writers generally, as a "mystery." Mede says, "Armageddon is one of the secrets of God, not to be defined by us until the events shall make it known." It is well known that until the Crimean war, in 1854, the true meaning of this word was a mystery; but that war drew forth criticism on it, both in this country and in Europe. In a pamphlet published in Philadelphia, in 1855, under the title—"Is Sebastopol Armageddon?" the writer has collected together a number of criticisms on this word. The editor, on the 14th page, sums up in these words: "And he gathered them together into a place called, in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon."

It is remarked that Sebastopol signifies "the city of Augustus." True, but this does not prevent it from signifying, also, the "August City." Even if the word be translated "the city of Augustus," it must be borne in mind that Augustus was not properly the name of the celebrated Roman emperor, from whom it has descended, but a title bestowed upon him, after solemn debate, by the Roman Senate—the object being to dignify that illustrious personage by the most appropriate term that body could employ. But, in truth, the [illegible] is equivalent to the meaning, either "the [illegible]

"The Christian Annotator," of Dec. 23, 1854, remarks,—"The compound Greek word Sebastopol, is a close equivalent to the compound Hebrew word Armageddon; both mean 'The August City': Sebastos (Greek), venerable, or august, Polis, a city. Hebrew, Ar, a city, magad, or maged, august."

The Rev. Daniel Nihill, a clergyman of the Church of England, says: "St. John wrote in Greek, and if he had not, in this passage, forsaken the Greek for the Hebrew, the passage would have run thus: 'And he gathered them together into a place called, in the Greek tongue, Sebastopol.' But this would have been too plain for prophecy."

This quotation is sufficient to show that if St. John had not forsaken the Greek, the passage, when translated into the English tongue, would have run thus: "And he gathered them together into a place called, in the English tongue, the 'City of Augustus.'" "But this would have been too plain for prophecy." . . .

"And he gathered them together into a place called, in the English tongue (as we have shown), the city of Augustus." Who gathered them? The false prophet—the mouth-piece of the dragon and the beast. The Pope has sent forth his Bull to the representatives of the whole Catholic world, to appear at Rome—the "city of Augustus"—on the 29th of next June, for the purpose of having a great Belshazzar feast, and to take a parting look at his children before the grand consummating event shall take place. He has uttered a prophecy of his doom. He says, "The year 1866 is to be full of the horrors of the abomination of desolation, in which he will leave Rome in sorrow and despondency. In 1867, the fierce struggle will still continue between the Church and its enemies, but in 1868, the Church will triumph, and he will enter Rome in the plenitude of power. After living to see the mighty cause of truth prevail, he will be taken to sit beside St. Peter." . . .

"Straws show which way the wind blows." Says a correspondent of the Daily News,—"Many travelers are hastening toward Rome, in order to see the Holy City before the great changes which must immediately occur after the withdrawal of the French troops." . . .

Bishop Newton, who wrote about one hundred years since, remarks,—"'And he gathered them together.' The true construction is—'And they gathered them together;' the evil spirits, or agencies, before mentioned, will gather all the popish princes together into a place called, in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon, that is, the mountain of destruction.'" Bishop Newton had got his eyes opened to what we now see.

Again. "About," a French writer in 1859, says,—"When the Pope sees his temporal power about being taken away, he will call on the whole Catholic world to come to Rome."—Herald of the Bridegroom.

NUMBER TWENTY-NINE.

ELIJAH AT HOREB.

The overthrow of the prophets of Baal caused a profound sensation at the court of Ahab. The proud queen was not long in making known to the zealous Elijah that his life would soon be as one of those whom he had slain on the sanguinary banks of Kishon. Once more the prophet fled from the power of his inveterate enemy to the desert places of Israel. Leaving his servant at Beersheba, he travelled a day's journey into the wilderness; and as the shades of night began to gather over the scene, he cast himself down beneath the kindly branches of a juniper tree, wearied in body and lonely in spirit. In the solemn loneliness of that desert scene, he began to despair of the future, and prayed that he might die, the burdens of life were so heavy upon him. Nature was overpowered at last, and he slept. The breeze of the desert fanned his wearied brow, and lulled him to repose, as it stole through the branches of juniper above his head.

But the Lord had not forgotten his faithful servant. As he slumbered, an angel came and awoke him; food was there for his refreshment, of which he partook with deepest gratitude. After a few hours' repose, he was aroused again by the same kind guardian, and requested to eat and drink, for the journey was long before him. In the strength of that angel-prepared food, he journeyed forty days to the south, till he stood on Horeb, the mount of God. It was a long and weary journey for Elijah. Barren wastes were around him on the lonely march; and wild granite hills were the only sentinels that guarded his pathway to the holy mount. The silence of the desert reigned over his lonely course; he had lived before in exile, but the sweet murmur of Cherith had been music to his ears, and the ravens had cheered each morn and even with their presence, as bearers of life-sustaining food. But here he was utterly alone in exile, uncheered even by his former companions. The journey of forty days was ended, and as the last rays of the setting sun lingered on the granite brow of Horeb, he sought repose in a solitary cave, and fell asleep in the embrace of its solemn shadows. When morn broke upon the scene, and the light of the new day pierced the darkness of the cave chamber of the weary prophet, he heard the voice of the Lord calling to him,—What dost thou here, Elijah?" "And he said, I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenants, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only am left; and they seek my life to take it away."

Then, at the command of the Lord, he went forth and stood upon the bold summit of Horeb. Strange was the scene that burst upon the vision of the prophet. Below, far down the craggy steeps, nestled the valley where Israel of old encamped to receive the law of God; and across the valley arose the sharp cliffs of Sinai, where the Lord once thundered from his pavilion of clouds, and shook the hills with his voice. While the prophet stood gazing in wonder upon the scene, made sacred by the presence of Jehovah in ages agone, a startling sound suddenly broke the solemn silence of Horeb. The blast of a hurricane swept by, tearing the rocks from their foundations, and hurling them like toys into the depths below. The morning air was darkened by the fury of the blast; the mountain cliffs were swept clean, while they trembled before the power of the breath of God. At length the tumult ceased, and all was silent as the tomb. "But the Lord was not in the wind." Anon, all Horeb began to tremble, an earthquake was on the march, the everlasting moun-[illegible]tine rocks were rent asunder, and yawning fissures opened; the firm-seated hills were rocked as a cradle. Elijah stood aghast with terror. "But the Lord was not in the earthquake." The throes of the earthquake ceased, and nature was calm again. While the awe-struck prophet wondered what terrible exhibition might be presented next, the roar of a fiery element attracted his attention. The brow of Horeb seemed in a blaze. Streaming tongues of flame arose on high, and rushed and roared as if they would melt the adamant of the mountain crags. "But the Lord was not in the fire." It was but the lightning of his eye. The flames subsided, and nature smiled again in peace. Then, in the serenity of that calm hour, after the stormy blast, the rocking of the earthquake, and the roar of the fire had ceased, there arose on the breeze of the morning, "a still small voice." Elijah recognized Jehovah in that, and wrapped his face in his mantle, and stood at the mouth of his cave. In that voice there came to his ear the same question,—"What doest thou here, Elijah?" To which the prophet made the same reply as before.

Elijah's exile was ended. He was directed to return once more to the scenes of other days. He yet had much to do as the servant of the Most High, and he soon left the scene of so much solemnity to perform his mission to the rebellious house of Israel, while the mount of God was again left solitary in its wild and awful grandeur.

Thus Horeb was consecrated anew by the presence of Jehovah, and another spot of earth made doubly sacred, to which the footsteps of man might turn in after ages in admiring pilgrimage. ORRIN P. ALLEN.

LIVING HOURS WITH THE PILGRIMS.—No. 2.

"God is with us." This was the expression of my heart as I looked around "Camp Wilbraham." Though I was unable to get there till nearly the close of the meeting, I could not help feeling and seeing the divine presence of God. He was everywhere present in his mighty power, to bless and to save; and it seemed to me nothing but his love could cement all hearts together as they were then.

While beholding that united band of pilgrims, gathered there with one accord, my mind wandered off to the scenes on the new earth; and I thought, O what a true type of the band that shall shortly gather around the Savior in the New Jerusalem. It seemed as though I could now behold the rays of divine joy that will shine on all faces then. Indeed, I could now behold the same love that will fill all hearts there. It was all love to Jesus, the Lamb that was slain. Here, on all sides, praise and thanksgiving ascended up to him; it will be so there.

O how my heart goes out in praise to Jesus as I contemplate our great gathering around the throne of Jesus, who will be clothed with raiment too glorious to behold. There we shall see him as he is; and we shall forever bask in the sunlight of heavenly rest. Here in our pilgrimage, we are sorely oppressed. Our path lies through a lone wilderness, filled with thorns and briars. And Satan hovers close around our path to drag us down the broad and slippery way of destruction, if we will let him get hold of us. But Jesus has set a crown of glory at the end of our journey. Sometimes our feet are sore, and the cross heavy, and in the gloom that overshadows us we should lose our way; but Jesus stoops, and, with his divine presence, points us to the crown laid up for us. We catch a glimpse of it, new courage fills our breast, and Jesus takes us by the hand to help us on. O, beloved pilgrims, what though the way does sometimes look dark and dreary, and the load seem heavy; look up and behold your crown—the crown of the conqueror. He only who overcomes is worthy of the crown. If you are blind reach out and take the extended hand of Jesus. He will lead you safely through. Though we wander amid briars and thickets here, our blessed home of rest is just ahead. The foaming waves of affliction may roll fiercely around you, but the haven of peace is in sight. The devil may howl upon your heels; but keep your eyes fixed upon the crown, and cling closely to Jesus, and all will be well.

O my beloved home, my place of rest, I see it looming up before me. Its golden gates are ready to welcome us in. Jesus will soon gather his children in his bosom, as the good shepherd gathers his sheep within his fold. He will bind up the broken heart, and wipe away the bitter tears. He will place upon our heads an immortal crown of glory, and bid us roam over his fields of green pastures, and to lie down beside still waters. There, within his fold, we shall be safe. No wolves will enter there, or howl in rage upon our pathway. There all will be united, and nothing sound on our ears but the praise and thanksgiving of the pilgrims, gathered in heaven, as they were at Wilbraham.

WM. H. SPENCER.

THE FIRST STEP.

Reader, I believe there are many persons who have real desires for salvation, but know not what step to take, or where to begin. Their consciences are awakened. Their feelings are excited. Their understandings are enlightened. They would like to alter and become true christians. But they do not know what should be their first step.

Reader, if this be the state of your soul, let me offer you some advice. I will show you where to begin. I will tell you what step you ought to take, and may take this very day.

In every journey there must be a first step. There must be a change from sitting still to moving forward. The journeyings of Israel from Egypt to Canaan were long and wearisome. Forty years passed away before they crossed Jordan. Yet there was some one who moved first when they marched from Rameses to Succoth. When does a man really take his first step in coming out from sin and the world? He does it in the day when he first prays with his heart.

In every building the first stone must be laid, and the first blow must be struck. The ark was one hundred and twenty years in building. Yet there was a day when Noah laid his axe to the first tree he cut down to form it. The temple of Solomon was a glorious building. But there was a day when the first huge stone was laid at the foot of Mount Moriah. When does the building of the Spirit really appear in a man's heart? It begins, so far as we can judge, when he first pours out his heart to God in prayer.

Reader, if you desire salvation, and want [illegible] very day to the Lord Jesus Christ, in the first private place you can find, and entreat him in prayer to save your soul.

Tell him that you have heard that he receives sinners, and has said, "Him that cometh unto me I will in nowise cast out." Tell him that you are a poor, vile sinner, and you come to him on the faith of his own invitation. Tell him you put yourself wholly and entirely in his hands,—that you feel vile and helpless, and hopeless in yourself,—and that except he saves you, you have no hope to be saved at all. Beseech him to deliver you from the guilt, the power, and the consequences of sin. Beseech him to pardon you and wash you in his blood. Beseech him to give you a new heart, and plant the Holy Spirit in your soul. Beseech him to give you grace, and faith, and will, and power to be his disciple and servant from this day for ever. O, reader, go this very day, and tell these things to the Lord Jesus Christ, if you really are in earnest about your soul.

Tell him in your own way, and your own words. If a doctor came to see you when sick, you could tell him where you felt pain. If your soul feels its disease indeed, you can surely find something to tell Christ.

Doubt not his willingness to save you, because you are a sinner. It is Christ's office to save sinners. He says himself, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."—Luke 5: 32.

Wait not because you feel unworthy. Wait for nothing. Wait for nobody. Waiting comes from the devil. Just as you are, go to Christ. The worse you are, the more need you have to apply to him. You will never mend yourself by staying away.

Fear not, because your prayer is stammering,—your words feeble, and your language poor. Jesus can understand you. Just as a mother understands the first babblings of her infant, so does the blessed Savior understand sinners. He can read a sigh, and see a meaning in a groan.

Despair not, because you do not get an answer immediately. While you are speaking, Jesus is listening. If he delays an answer, it is only for wise reasons, and to try if you are in earnest. Pray on, and the answer will surely come. Though it tarry, wait for it. It will surely come at last.

O, reader, if you have any desire to be saved, remember the advice I have given you this day. Act upon it honestly and heartily, and you shall be saved.

Do not say you know not how to pray. Prayer is the simplest act in all religion. It is simply speaking to God. It needs neither learning, nor wisdom, nor book-knowledge to begin it. It needs nothing but heart and will. The weakest infant can cry when he is hungry. The poorest beggar can hold out his hand for an alms, and does not wait to find fine words. The most ignorant man will find something to say to God, if he has only a mind.

Do not say you have no convenient place to pray in. Any man can find a place private enough, if he is disposed. Our Lord prayed on a mountain; Peter on the house-top; Isaac in the field; Nathaniel under the fig-tree; Jonah in the whale's belly. Any place may become a closet, an oratory, and a Bethel, and be to us the presence of God. Do not say you have no time. There is plenty of time, if men will only employ it. Time may be short, but time is always long enough for prayer. Daniel had all the affairs of a kingdom on his hands, and yet he prayed three times a day. David was ruler over a mighty nation, and yet he says, "Evening and morning and at noon will I pray."—Ps. 55: 17. When time is really wanted, time can always be found.

Reader, salvation is very near you. Do not lose heaven for want of asking. Go this day and take the first step. J. C. RYLE.

OUR DUTY AS CHRISTIANS.

Dear christian reader, when we look about the world, or even in our own vicinity or neighborhood, how many do we see who are living unmindful of God, and think less of their present and future destiny. Can we, who profess to be the followers of Christ, be at ease and see so many going the downward road to perdition, without giving them a friendly admonition to retrace their steps, and secure to themselves their soul's salvation? At the present day, when there is so much excitement, turning and overturning, so much excess everywhere prevailing, it behooves every professor of christianity to carefully examine himself, and see if he is well grounded in the faith that pertaineth to his well being and future happiness. We must have this faith—this light within ourselves—in order to impart it to others. And if we have this light, it is our duty to enlighten all those who stand in need of it. Surely in our darkest hours, if we are christians, we can see the sins and cruelties and sorrows of the past and the present, and it is our duty to avoid them, and shun them as we would a pestilence, and admonish others to do the same.

Yea, further, it is our duty as agents of God to do all that lies in our power to break down pride, superstition and false religion. When this shall be accomplished, the wicked will cease from troubling, and the weary be at rest. This work of reform (through the grace of God) is appropriately ours. Therefore it is our duty to speak in the power of truth, and to teach men to trust their immortal interests in the hands of God, and become calm, peaceful, and religiously happy. It is peculiarly our province to show the harmony of christianity by the lessons of reason, nature, and revelation.

Now I would notice here, and rejoice that our denomination is becoming more and more sensible of their duty in this respect; and that we are hailing the skeptic as none others hail him, as a friend, who is going astray, and pointing him to the beauties of the gospel, securing in its favor the warmest aspiration of his heart for its truth. And I can but aver when this is done, many, very many rescued from the darkness of infidelity, will rise up and call us blessed, when the name of our persecutors shall be lost and forgotten.

I cannot resist the conviction that our position is one of vast responsibility, and one of immense importance; for superstition and error are on every hand, and there must be something done to demolish it, or the tide of error will carry thousands and thousands down to the gulf of ruin. We must pray for the grace of God to assist us in bringing out more fully the great principles of overcoming evil with good. By this we may subdue the [illegible] the world. This is the mission which God has sent us into the world to accomplish. Therefore I am anxious that we, as the followers of Christ, should take a high stand, and bring out more clearly and fully the principles that are laid down in the gospel of Christ. This will prove to us a rock of defence, in which we shall be strong, and from which no power can move us.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us be faithful in this work—the work of salvation—for Jesus Christ, the great head of the church, demands our obedience in this respect. Here let it be understood, although we have been called forth as agents in carrying on this great work of salvation, it will not be fully accomplished until Christ the King of kings shall descend from heaven to judge and cleanse the earth, and set up his kingdom here. Then the rod of the oppressor will be broken, and the swords which have drank the blood of millions be beaten into plowshares; and the spears of assassination into pruning-hooks.

Dear reader, shall we not look well to these things, be constant in duty, that we may secure to ourselves the bliss and joys of heaven, which Christ hath promised to his obedient children. J. ELKINS.

ASPIRATIONS.

A visit from Susan B. Anthony, the renowned lecturer on moral reform, etc., gave me some light on the foundation upon which she built her faith of future life. Thus:

Miss Anthony, what is your faith concerning a future life?

"The same as the Swedenborgians."

Do you base your faith upon reason, philosophy, or the Bible?

"Neither. I can give no logical reason for my faith."

We learn from Scripture and observation, that man dies; now, if there be a future life, must it not be by virtue of a resurrection of the dead?

"Oh! I never pretend to argue with materialists. I have no faith in the resurrection of the dead."

Upon what ground, then, can you hope for future life?

"Simply upon aspirations."

Is not that rather a slimsy foundation to rest a hope of so much importance as a future life upon; for you know we aspire after many things in this life; but we are not always successful, and may not our aspirations for a future life fail us, unless we have some more reliable foundation; and since we are so positively assured that man, and all that constitutes man, dies.

"Death is our best friend."

It must have undergone a great change then since Adam; for it was the penalty of God's broken law then; the king of terrors in the days of the prophets, and an enemy to be destroyed in the days of the apostles. How, then, does it turn up to be such an angel-friend in our days?

"I do not pretend to argue with literalists. I have no argument for my faith; still, with Emerson, I believe if the soul is capable of aspirations here, it may not be unreasonable to suppose that those aspirations might be realized at some future time."

After such a frank and explicit confession from an individual of so much talent, I say—

"Blessed Bible, how I love it!
How it doth my bosom cheer!
What hath earth like this to covet?
O what stores of wealth are here!"

CURE FOR CANCER.

In the Crisis of July 25th, 1866, is a request by Sr. Catherine Daggett, of Orrington, Me., for a remedy for a cancer. The following has been forwarded for her benefit, as well as others:—

Take garget root, make a tea of it, and drink of it, and wash the cancer in the same. Grate the root on a wet rag for a plaster. When the leaves of the garget grow, if needed, make a salve of them by putting them between pewter, and setting in the sun, carrying it in at night. Continue this till it is sufficiently turned.

Another receipt. Take a pail full of pyrola umbrellata, or, as it is called, noble pine, and by the western people, pipsissewa. Add three pails of water, boil the same six hours; strain off the liquor, and boil the same down to three quarts. Pour that hot upon one pound of sulphur in a new gallon stone jug; shake the same thirty minutes; then add one quart of Holland gin; cork the same up, and take from a table spoonfull to a glass, as the patient can bear, four or six times a day; and apply the same as a wash to the tumor.

PATENT MEDICINES.

The use of many advertised medicines, as they are called, is often a refined species of dram-drinking. A more striking instance of the danger of resorting to these nostrums, was perhaps never given, than that which is related in the memoirs of the late Adam Clark.

A. B. and his wife, C. B., were members of the Methodists' society in Portsmouth Common, and in decent and respectable circumstances. C. B. was frequently troubled with indigestion. A female neighbor said to C. B., "There is a very fine bottle, which has done me much good, and I was just as you are; and I am sure it would do you much good also. Do try but one bottle of it." "What do you call it?" "The cordial." "Well, I will try it, for I am sadly troubled, and would give anything for a cure, or even for ease." A bottle of this fine spirituous saccharine opiate was bought, and taken as directed; and it acted as an elegant dram. "O, dear, this is a very fine thing! it has done me good already: I shall never be without this in the house." A little disorder in the stomach called the bottle again in request; it acted as before, and got additional praises. By and by the husband himself got poorly with an inward pain; the wife said, "Do take a little of my bottle, it will do you much good." He took it; but then, as he was a man, it must be a stronger dose. "Well, C., this is a very fine thing, it has eased me much." Though the wife was not cured, yet she was very much relieved; so bottle after bottle was purchased, and taken in pretty quick succession. The husband found it necessary also to have frequent recourse to the same; and now they could both bear a double dose. By and by more and more was taken, for former doses did not give relief as usual; but the increased dose did. No customers to the quack medicine venders were equal to A. B. and his wife. They bought it at last by the dozen, if not by the gross! Soon scores of pounds were expended on this carminative opiate, till at last they had expended on it their whole substance. Even their furniture went by degrees, till at last they were reduced to absolute want, and were obliged to take refuge in the poor-house. Here they were visited by some pious people of the society; saw their error, deplored it, and sought God for pardon.

A good report was brought of this miserable couple to the society; it was stated that they saw their folly, and were truly penitent; and it was a pity to permit a couple, who, in all human probability, had much of life before them, to linger out uselessly in a wretched workhouse. A collection was proposed for their relief, among the principal friends; it was productive, for a considerable sum was raised. They were brought out, placed in a decent little dwelling, and a proper assortment of goods purchased with the subscription already mentioned, and they were set up in a respectable little shop. Many of the friends bound themselves to give A. B. and his wife their custom. They did so, and the capital was soon doubled, and they went on in religious and secular things very prosperously. Unfortunately the wife thought her indigestion and unpleasant feelings had returned, were returning, or would soon return; and she once more thought of "the cordial" with desire and terror. "I should have a bottle in my house; surely I have been so warned, that I am not likely to make a bad use of it again." "C., I am afraid of it," said the husband. "My dear," said she, "we have now experience, and I hope we may both take what will do us good, and that only." Not to be tedious, another bottle was bought, and another, and a dozen, and a gross; and in this they once more drank out all their property, and terminated their lives in Portsmouth Common workhouse!—The Christian.

HOW A MAN GETS TO BE HARDENED.

By permitting himself to be hardened. It is an easy thing, you see, and generally insinuating, tempting. All is done by habit, as we are "creatures of habit." Did we ever think upon the power of this maxim? Very little, as we reflect upon such things. Although we see daily that habit rules the world, yet we are taken by it constantly, and always are aware of it.

The boy who stole a pin next took a needle, and felt less guilt in taking the needle than the pin. He had already acquired the habit.

The first guilt is nauseating; the second less so; the third is encouraging; the tobacco chewer is the result—and that in a short time for a long life to be polluted.

The man who has his first fight has the way opened for the second, and that for the third, and so on to the gallows. This is the way these men are formed. It is from such small beginnings that the prison gets its inmates.

And we are all subject to these habits that lead to prison, to the gallows, and to degradation. The worst criminals do not expect in youth, to become victims no more than you or I. But the easy habit, with its accompanying temptation, leads on gradually—so gradually that it is not perceptible, till all at once the individual is in trouble, and often such a trouble that he would give the world to be out of it.

Is it not worth while then that we should be cautioned against this insidious evil? We cannot be cautioned too much—daily we are surrounded with its influence. It is in the world around us, everywhere. The cigar holds it out in its perfume, the meerschaum in its prestige. How sparkling, how very beautiful the dancing beads of the bowls, and it is "fashionable," solid men, men of "standing" indulge in it. And so the evil keeps tempting, and in a weak moment the person yields—yields for once. Bu succeeding temptations are a little less easily resisted, and still a little less. By-and-by the eye brightens and the step hastens to ratify usual indulgence, not now become a habit, but a confirmed condition, now and then breaking down in abject drunkenness and ruin. And who of our habitual indulgents will escape the "ruin?" This is not foreknown, though every one is sure he is not the man.

Now, the most effective cure that is known is to uncover to view the insinuating workings of habit—how easily it is acquired, for you can not break up a habit, that will not do to trust to, habit will floor you. You are to avoid it. Then it is easy; then the clay is soft in the hands of the potter, if you can only be made to see it—to see the force of now breaking away from it. By doing so you will be free, readily. Many do so and have a life of peace and safety. They avoid at the dangerous moments a corrupt life ending in misery.

Avoid then, while you can, yet easily, this insinuating, hardening process.—Herald of Health.

BURNS.—To cure a burn, immerse the part in cold water as soon as possible, and keep it there till the smarting ceases; this will generally prevent blistering, though in order to do this it may sometimes be necessary to keep it in water for hours, frequently changing the water, so as to have it as cold as possible. If you can have a dish or tub so arranged as to have fresh cold water constantly running in, all the better. The object of this treatment is to keep the air from the injured part till nature can throw out lymph sufficient to cover and protect it. Water will do this most effectually, for it not only keeps out the air, but puts out the fire, and thus the inflammation is kept down. The next best course is to cover the part with fine flour, mixed with a little molasses or oil to keep it in place. Cotton or wool packed closely around it answers a very good purpose; in short, whatever will protect the part from the air, serves well to lessen the pain, and permit nature to do her work of restoration.—Herald of Health.

"I MUST BE THERE."

Since God so loved this guilty world,
And sent his Son from heaven
To die for sin a sacrifice,
My sins must be forgiven.

Since all have proved the power of grace,
Who have that grace received;
Since Christ the Savior lives to-day,
I must not go unsaved.

Since Jesus says, "Come unto me,
From sin and death away";
Among the fleeting joys of earth
I can't afford to stay.

Since he hath prayed and wept and groaned,
And shed his blood for me;
Within the New Jerusalem
I must his glory see.

In that great day, when earth shall melt,
When all its works shall burn,
And souls of wicked men shall die,
I must be caught up then.

Since only such shall see their God,
I must be pure in heart;
When Christ shall say, "Ye blessed, come,"
I could not bear "Depart."

When all the happy church of God
The crown of life shall wear,
I must upon Mount Zion stand—
I must, I must be there.

IS THE ANTI-CHRIST YET TO COME?

BRO. GRANT:—As there are some who think the "falling away," and revelation of the "man of sin," or antichrist, are yet in the future, and being unable to view the subject in this light, I feel constrained to ask permission to offer a few thoughts for the consideration of those who hold this view of the matter. I would premise, however, that I too believe that the last phase or feature, and final work of what is termed "the beast," in the 13th chapter of Rev., and some others, are to be seen and enacted in immediate connection with the coming of the Lord and the setting up of his kingdom. But I do not think the "falling away," or apostasy, and revelation of the "man of sin, as brought to view in 2 Thess. 2nd chapter, are yet in the future.

In order then to get at the truth of this matter, let us look for a moment at the circumstances and conditions of the prophecy under consideration. The apostle, after exhorting the brethren not to be soon shaken in mind, or be troubled as supposing that the day of Christ was then immediately at hand, with of course the consequent disappointment, proceeds to declare, "For that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." etc. The great question that here presents itself is, Who, or what character, or power, is here intended? But this question, I trust, will be of easy solution, by observing, as we remarked, the conditions of the prophecy itself; and will be made still more clear by taking it in connection with some other prophecies referring to the same subject.

We inquire first, then, To whom was the language of the apostle immediately and directly addressed? to those then living, or to us down in the last days? I answer, evidently to those then living; for he says, "Remember ye not that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?" Surely, we at the present day cannot remember having Paul with us and telling us these things. Hence it must have been for them, and consequently it was then. "The mystery of iniquity" was working, which was subsequently to be developed into the "man of sin." This point, I think, all must see. Therefore, it was then the hindering power existed which was to still "let" (hinder) until taken out of the way, and give place to the revelation of "that wicked," whom "the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." Hence, it will be readily perceived that these two characters or powers were to extend through the entire space from Paul's day, down to the coming of the Lord.

And now I would ask, what other two powers can be found on the field of prophecy, whose history has covered the entire gospel dispensation, except Imperial or Pagan Rome, and the Papacy? Or I might rather ask (supposing the apostasy and antichrist yet future), Where is that one power which stood in Paul's day, and still stands and hinders the development of the "man of sin"? Evidently, no such power can be found; and hence, either the prophecy has proved a failure, or the "man of sin" has long since appeared. Which horn of the dilemma shall we take?

But again, the apostle introduces this character—"that man of sin," or "that wicked" or lawless one, as something already understood and anticipated, of which he but reminds the Thessalonian church, describing however at the same time a little more explicitly some of its acts and characteristics, but in evident allusion to what was noted in the Scriptures of truth: and as the apostle's description is in part almost a verbal quotation from the prophecy of Daniel, and his prophecies being the most lucid and explicit of any in relation to chronology, and consecutive events, we may with much propriety refer to him for a more general and extended account of the character named. Where, then, in Daniel, shall we look for him? Let us see. What does Paul say of him? "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." Why, says one, that is very like what we find in Daniel 11: 36. Truly it is, as we there read, "And the king shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every God, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods, and shall prosper till the indignation be accomplished; for that that is determined shall be done. Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of woman, nor regard any God; for he shall magnify himself above all." Surely, this is so like Paul's description, that the character must be identical. But can we find him any where else in Daniel's prophecy? Turn to chapter 7: 8, 11, 20, 21, 24, 25. "And, behold, in this horn [which came up after the other ten, and plucked up three,] were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things." Before, we found him a king, assuming the place of God, i. e., exercising both spiritual and temporal power. Here he is a "horn" with "mouth" and "eyes," combining regal and ecclesiastical authority.

But to proceed: "I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake; I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." "Even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows. I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High." "And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and think to change times and laws, and they shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit," etc. That this character is identical with that in the 11th chapter, appears to me too manifest to need any further proof. But here we see that he prevails against the saints for "a time and times and the dividing of time." In the twelfth chapter, we are told he takes away the "daily sacrifice," and places "the abomination that maketh desolate" and persecutes the saints until the time of the end, shown to be for 1260 yrs., commencing 1335 yrs. before the resurrection. In Paul's account, he was to continue from the time the power then letting [hindering] was taken away, and be revealed until the coming of the Lord; thus showing a complete correspondence with Daniel. So then, if this "man of sin," or antichrist, is yet to be revealed in future, we are driven to the conclusion that the past history of the church in her long night of darkness and persecution, is left prophetically a measureless blank. Our blessed Lord, in speaking of the setting up of this same power,—the abomination of desolation, declares that there should be tribulation [of course on his elect] such as never was before, nor ever should be again, and in Rev. 19th, when the heavenly host are triumphing over the judgment of the harlot Babylon, they also proclaim, "The marriage of the Lamb is come."

Jesus bids us, when we see "those things begin to come to pass (which we have already seen), then look up, and lift up your heads; for your REDEMPTION draweth nigh." O then be of good cheer, ye waiting, sorrowing ones, your deliverance is almost here. The seventh angel, as I firmly believe, has already begun to sound; and voices from heaven will soon proclaim the kingdom come of our Lord and of his Christ, and the time of rewards for all who fear him. Cease then from all your tears and sighing, and be ready for the reward of the kingdom. The day of trouble indeed cometh, but the Lord will deliver you from the storm, and bring you to Mount Zion, with songs and everlasting joy upon your heads, where the everlasting light shall shine upon you for ever more. Amen. Yours in the blessed hope, Z. WHITNEY.

"DESIRE TO DEPART."

"For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor; yet what I shall choose I wot not, for I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better; nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you."—Phil. 1: 21-24.

When Paul wrote these words, he was uncertain whether his bonds would terminate in life or death. But it deserves notice, he does not say, "Christ shall be magnified in my immortal soul." No, he says, "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or death." (ver. 20.) How he answers this in verse 21: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." If he lived, Christ would be magnified in his body, by his labors in the gospel; and if he died, he would be magnified in his body, in sealing his testimony with his blood. But it may be asked, How could it be gain for Paul to die, if in death he was to have no conscious existence until the resurrection? I answer, that this difficulty arises from not considering what was Paul's situation. He was then in bonds, and if he lived, bonds and afflictions awaited him. We say that for a man to die under such circumstances; yea, under circumstances less distressing, is, in Scripture, viewed as a favor from the Lord. Moses viewed his death so, and prayed for it.—Num. 11: 15. It was viewed as a favor to the King of Judah to be removed by death, that he might not see the evil God was to bring on others (see 2 Kings 22: 20, 2 Chron. 34: 28); and it is granted as a favor to the righteous to be taken away by death from the evil to come. See Isa. 57: 1, 2.

Solomon expressly says (Eccl. 4: 1-4), "So I returned and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun; and, behold, the tears of such as are oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of their oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter. Wherefore I praised the dead which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive. Yea, better is he than both they which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun." Was not Paul in the very situation which Solomon here describes? and does not Solomon teach in plain language, that it is better for such persons to die, than to live suffering such oppressions? In verse 22, Paul says,—"But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor; yet what I shall choose I wot not." The choice referred to is allowed by all to be between abiding in the flesh and departing to be with Christ.

Macknight interprets this passage as follows:—"Flesh includes the idea of weakness and affliction. Wherefore, to live in the flesh is to live burdened with those afflictions to which men are subject by means of the body." For Paul thus to live was more needful for the Philippians. This weighed with him on the one hand; but he was in a strait; for on the other hand he had "a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better." Such was Paul's strait. Paul says,—"Yet what I shall choose I wot not."

But here we are met by our opponents. They claim that Paul expected to be with Christ immediately on his departure. The whole force and pertinency of the passage is lost on any other interpretation. If, say they, there is no conscious existence between death and the resurrection, he could not be with Christ any sooner by dying, than by living; consequently, there could be no opposition between his two desires; he could accomplish both objects at the same time,—could do that which was needful for his brethren, and be with Christ just as soon as though he died that instant.

But we inquire, when Paul said I have a desire to be with Christ, what about him did he expect to depart? It is contended that it was "his immortal soul." But this is the very thing to be proved, that Paul had an immortal soul to depart and be with Christ; and we think it cannot be shown that Paul, in this or any other passage of his writings, asserts that he had such a soul to depart and be with Christ at death. Nor does he intimate that what departed to be with Christ at his death, was to be in a state of conscious existence, or in happiness. All this is very confidently assumed, but it lacks proof. In fact, no such immortal soul can depart from man at death; for no such soul was ever infused into him. Man "became a living soul" by receiving the breathe of life. It is impossible for him to breath out any thing more than God breathed in at his creation. If any thing more is breathed out, it becomes our opponent to show when, how, and from whom he received it, for assertions and assumptions are just good for nothing on this subject.

Solomon declares that at death the spirit, or breath, "shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. 12: 7. And Paul declares, our "life is hid with Christ in God." When Jesus died, he commended his spirit, or life, into the hands of the Father. Why? Because God was to bring him again from the dead; and our "life is hid with Christ in God;" and it is Christ who is to raise us "up at the last day;" hence the dead saints are said to sleep in Jesus, for their lives are to be restored to them, and death to be swallowed up of life at the resurrection; and such as sleep in Jesus are then to be brought with him.

But if they sleep in him, how can they be alive in a state of conscious existence with him? for sleep is only another term for death, in Scripture; and what seems to put this beyond all doubt is, no Scripture writer ever speaks of soul or spirit after death as existing in a disembodied and conscious existence.

PERFECT OBEDIENCE IS PERFECT UNION.

Yesterday morning, I saw a heavy building mounted on wheels, all ready for being moved. Presently men began to arrive with oxen. They kept coming, until as many as forty oxen were there, all perfectly obedient, and all ready to pull together. It was a rare sight for this quiet old town, and but few, if any, who witnessed it, ever saw its equal. It was a grand sight to see them, as they stood quietly waiting for the signal to move forward. But what a lesson on the advantages of union was here presented, as, at the word of command, they all moved together, and the ponderous building, with apparent ease, began to move like a carriage through the street.

How can christians be persuaded to thus concentrate their power, and unite their forces upon one object? Most nominal churches are as useless as these cattle would have been if the drivers had taken off their yokes and let them scatter about at random. If you would work for Christ you must wear his yoke. Let us earnestly respond to the prayer recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, "that all may be ONE." Pray for union, labor for union. But we cannot have union, unless we have the spirit of Christ. If professors are not united, it must be that they have not enough of his spirit.

It seems that real christians sometimes mistake the character of each other, and seem inclined to "forbid," or condemn each other, because of different views of doctrinal points. Remember that your brother may not have all the light and knowledge that you have; but if he obeys from the heart the form of doctrine in which he has been trained, and manifests the spirit of meekness, the spirit of Christ, then "forbid him not." If it is in your power to show to him "a more excellent way," and expound unto him "the way of God more perfectly," then do so, as Aquila and Priscilla did to Apollos.

Ancient Israel was reproved by the prophet in language like this,—"The ox knoweth his owner . . . but Israel doth not know; my people doth not consider." And may not we, in these last days, learn a lesson of obedience and submission, and patience from the ox? Our usefulness, like his, depends upon our wearing the yoke, and yielding to the will of our Master. We have no wisdom, or skill of our own; but by submitting entirely to the Lord, he will be our sufficiency. And we may be sure, when we are perfectly obedient, that every one of the saints is working together with us. We are all praying for more entire purity and holiness, and thus all working together. And I trust we are all praying and laboring for the "perfecting of the saints," and striving to edify and comfort each other.

CHEERFUL RELIGION.

Religion has been considered by some, and not a few, to have a gloomy and cloudy apprehension, depriving man of many enjoyments in life. But I would ask, what has religion, either in it or about it, that should make it so widely opposite to the cheerful-feeling soul? Let us go back and stand on its foundation basis, and what do we find there that forbids us to be cheerful? Religion is a gift of God, and therefore it cannot be otherwise than good; and consequently make us happy and joyful. Herein it is obvious the religion that God revealed to man was designed to bless all those who will willingly embrace and practice it. All that religion has done for us, and is doing, is a blessing to man, by causing him to look forth to that blessed abode where the weary will be at rest; where there will be no trouble, sorrow nor pain.

What a blessing it would be to mankind, if they would all embrace true and undefiled religion, and walk in its divine counsels; for there can be nothing so well calculated to impart a happy feeling to the soul as undefiled religion. How well adapted it is to our various wants. Wherever we find this good religion in the hearts of men, there shines a holy ray, to soothe their minds, and spread around them a heavenly calm. Surely it is a heavenly boon, worthy of all adoration, thanksgiving and praise.

The real possessor of this heavenly treasure—"undefiled religion," can, without any fear, ride over the storms of life, by which he is assailed, with unrelenting fury; and though adverse fortune prove his lot, and enemies meet him on every side, and all without is dark; yet, with a serene countenance and satisfaction, he turns to his staff of hope for comfort and consolation. And surely there he finds it. Does any one ask him where his faith is grounded? With joy he points to his Bible, where his faith is anchored, and from thence directs the longing eye to his home in heaven, where he believes in due time he shall meet his God, and all his brethren and sisters in Christ, and there participate in all those joys that never shall have an end.

Now I would ask, dear reader, if "undefiled religion" is not worthy of our highest esteem and adoration? If so, let us embrace it and sustain its efficacy; then, unquestionably, we shall become heirs of Christ's glorious kingdom, which, according to prophecy and what the Scriptures teach us, is soon to be set up here on the earth. Let us prepare to meet this glorious scene before it is too late. If we wish to have a part in Christ's kingdom, we must be clothed with the robe of righteousness, without "spot or wrinkle."

WILBRAHAM.

What sacred memories linger there. From North and South, from East and West, the scattered ones came up once more and sat down together to partake of heavenly things. Once more we heard the cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh. He is nigh, even at the door;" and eager hearts responded with joy, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Songs of praise and shouts of joy were echoed forth from beneath those stately oaks.

There we met and greeted each other—those we had not seen before for many years. Many there we had never seen before, but we did not feel like strangers to each other. We did not wait for formal introductions before we could speak to each other. We were a family of children, one in spirit, one in hope.

There we stood upon the river's bank, and saw forty plunged beneath the liquid wave. God grant that the Spirit which raised up Jesus from the dead, may raise them up at the last day.

There we sat together, and commemorated the death and sufferings of our Savior, and remembered how his body was broken, and his blood poured out, that we through him might be saved. Yea, with him we will be crucified, and glory in nothing but the cross. One whole week we tarried in the camp of the saints, and as we met together and sung our parting hymn—

"When shall we meet again, Meet ne'er to sever," we knew we must go out into the world again, and meet its stern realities—the contending influences of these last days, which caused a feeling of sadness. But when we thought of Him who "tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," trust and confidence folded their wings, and said, It will be but a little while. Yes, a little while, and we'll stand upon the sea of glass," an innumerable company, whom no man can number, while the cry of "alleluia," like the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, will sound and resound through the vast expanse of that most glorious place. THE THREATENING RUIN.

The revised and enlarged edition of our discourse bearing this title, furnishes a survey of the present condition of the world, and contains the best we have to say on the subject. The symptoms, however, are multiplying on all sides in confirmation of what is there stated.

The eye of the world is now upon Europe—restless, oppressed, fitful, unbelieving Europe,—shaking once more with revolutionary outbreaks, national collisions, bloody battles, and a doubtful future. The demons of war have again been let loose. Venetia and Bohemia are reeking with the fresh blood of thousands, shed in a strange, inexplicable conflict. Numbers of the Germanic States have been overrun with hostile armies. In a campaign of ten days, thirty dynasties have been quite unsettled, and the fate of twenty millions of people has been permanently affected.

A new map of Europe is being made. What the changes will be, no mere human intelligence can foresee; but they will be great as they have been rapid. Austria has been humiliated, and her position as a great power endangered, if not doomed. The temporal dominion of the Pope is in its last throes. Venetia has been ceded to Napoleon, as a bid for his help, by the house of Hapsburg. Italy promises unity and concentrated nationality. England is seriously agitated from within and threatened from without. Russia is not a quiet spectator, and will have a hand in matters. The Sublime Porte is implicated, and will be forced to yield more and more. Spain is disturbed at home and has quarrels abroad. And Napoleon, in wonted subtlety, is shuffling his cards for the decision of the destinies of peoples—"the custodee of lapsed possessions, and the indispensable guarantor of new distributions of territory."

We are disposed to think that Austria will fall and be dismembered, by the time this contest has wrought itself out; that Italy will be extended to the Danube; that France will advance her frontier to the Rhine, from its mouth to its Alpine sources; that the Germanic Confederation will be destroyed; that the present European governments on the territory of the old Roman Empire will all become elective monarchies, united under a general Protectorate, which shall presently, in like manner, also extend over the East; and that the Papacy will lose its States, but increase its power by absorbing and turning to its own purposes the new elements of Spiritualism, and operating in subserviency to this general Protectorate, the occupant of which shall be the veritable Antichrist.

Much of this may appear improbable as yet, nor do we undertake to say that we have rightly caught the details of the prophetic intimations on the subject, or of the course of events; but such seems to be the coming outline of things, of which the present disturbances are the commencement. One thing is certain, that the Alliance on which the existing governments and divisions of Europe have been sustained for the past fifty years, is now completely at an end. The old regime is gone. And the whole political face of the Old World is changed, and being changed with a suddenness and depth which must cause thinking men to stand in awe of what is to be.

But, while these things are going on in the Old World, new dangers have been maturing among ourselves. The war of sections, so fierce and terrible, ended; but a more horrible war of parties is threatening. Congress has passed a resolution calling on the States to organize, discipline, and equip their militia, and directing that two-thirds of the arms, ordnance, and ammunition now under custody of the general government be distributed among the States—the distribution among the States lately in rebellion to be postponed until further orders. The resolution came up from the Committee on Military Affairs, and was pushed to a vote, without debate or delay, under the previous question. It attracted as little attention in Congress as it has in the country; and the public will doubtless receive with incredulity the assurance that it was intended by those who secured its passage, as the first step towards preparation for another civil war. Although no debate was had upon it, members were urged to vote for it by direct conversational appeals on the floor, on the part of the few who were privy to its introduction. Some were told that it was necessary to enable the Southern loyalists to protect themselves; others that it was simply a matter of detail in the War Department; others that the arms must be taken out of the hands of the President; and others that it was proposed at the instance of the Secretary of War. An appeal was made to allow debate upon it, as it seemed to be a matter of importance—but this was refused.

The state of parties is represented, by those who claim to know, as such that if the fall elections result in the choice of Northern Democrats enough to constitute, when added to the members from the Southern States, a majority of the House, this majority, thus constituted, will claim to be the Congress, and will act accordingly; and that will be recognized by the President as the body to which he will send his message, and whose sessions he will, if the necessity should arise, protect by military force. They assert, on the other hand, that the Union members from the loyal States—if they constitute a majority from those States—will claim to be the only legal Congress, and will, if necessary, invoke an insurrection of the people to maintain them in that position. They do not in the least conceal their purpose, in the event of such a collision, to appeal to force, and to "drive the rival Congress, with the President and his Cabinet and supporters, into the Potomac," as it is expressed.

There certainly has sprung up a very exciting feud between parties in power, which is extending itself through the community and from which there is real danger of a new outbreak, more to be dreaded than that which so nearly overwhelmed the country a few years ago. That was a war of sections; but if the present disagreement should be pressed to the extremity that seems to be contemplated, it will be a war of neighbors, and general anarchy and ruin must be the result. May the Lord protect us, and hasten his coming to deliver his people!—Prophetic Times.

THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

DOES THE SPIRIT REMAIN A SEPARATE BEING AFTER THE DEATH OF THE BODY?

I read the discussion between Eld. Clayton and Eld. Grant on the doctrine of the state of the dead, etc., and arrived at the following conclusion: that in case Eld. C's arguments are correct, they must apply to a supposed case. We will look at what all believe to be a fact; viz., man transgressed, and the consequence was, all must die and return to dust, from whence we were taken. Here we must all agree is death after life. Now I ask, where, or in what is our hope of eternal life? I think no one will deny when I say, it is in Christ, and his resurrection from the dead. Without this, our hope would be vain.—1 Cor. 15: 14-19. But, according to Eld. C.'s argument, it would follow that our spirit-man might still be happy in hades, without a resurrection of the body. Now suppose the sentence of death was pronounced upon all, and thus all die; and God had withheld his Son Jesus Christ, "the resurrection and the life"; then our bodies, which by reason of death turn to dust, would remain dust forever. All hope of life would be lost. But, according to Eld. C.'s arguments, the spirit-man which had left the body at death, in personal shape, with eyes, hands and fingers, which he learns from Luke 16: 23, might still be happy in some place between heaven and hell, without the resurrection of the body. Thus one shape and form of the body would be destroyed, and another shape and form would live for ever.

After a prayerful and candid study of the word of God, I came to the conclusion that neither the parable of the rich man, nor any other passage of Scripture, teaches that after death the spirit-man remains in bodily form, in a spirit-world, in order to re-enter the body from whence it came, after the resurrection.

Again, I ask, what will be the event at the resurrection of the dead? According to the immortal-soul theory, every soul or spirit will now come up, in bodily form, and re-enter the body which it left in death; viz., that the soul of Adam enters into the body which Adam had; the soul of David, Daniel, Peter, Paul, Washington, and Webster, will each one enter its own distinctive body. But what does the Lord himself say about this matter? Why, after he said (Ezek. 37: 12), "I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves," he says (ver. 14), "And shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live." Now this is what Christ also taught, saying, Except ye are, by the Spirit of God, born again to a new or second life, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of God; for "my kingdom," he says (John 18: 36), "is not of this world."

That the spirit of every separate individual remains in a bodily form in hades, and, as a separate spirit, enters its own body after the resurrection, cannot be reconciled with the word of God. B. KNEPPER.

I HOPE TO LIVE.

Yes, I hope to live when nature fades away into the gloom of night, when the earth crumbles into dust, and the fruitful dawn of refulgent day breaks forth in fadeless beauty of celestial day. Yes, our hope will be changed to glad fruition, our sighing into song. Let every heart be glad; let every tongue sing praises to our Redeemer, who was dead, and lives never more to die. Yes, I hope to live

"Where pain and sighing will be o'er,
In glory crowned forevermore."

O yes, I shall be glad, and so will you, my dear brethren and sisters, when we see our Savior coming; when we hear the glad sound, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world;" when we can join in the song of the redeemed, who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." They will be like angels, having immortal lungs, singing, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."

I long to be there, where no sorrow nor care shall disturb that sweet, heavenly rest. My heart goes up in gladness, my tongue bespeaks the ecstacy of my soul.

"I long to see my Jesus, and see his blissful face,
I long to see his glory, and in his bosom rest."

It will be blessed to see our friends, who have long lain in the silent tomb; but to see Jesus is more; to see both, and then be surrounded with the transcendent glory of that eternal realm, O how exulting the thought! The fadeless flowers of beauty there will reign, the pure river of water of life there will run, and peace forever reign. Yes, I hope to be there. I long to rest. I long to be where peace forever reigns, and night shall be scattered away.

Dear brethren and sisters, with whom I have labored and enjoyed many good seasons, waiting on the Lord, remember your vows. Remember how the Lord has blessed you in days past, and forget not that he is ready to impart those blessings you need daily. Be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. Let not conscience make you linger. Let not peril, or sword, or famine, or height, or depth, or principalities, or powers, or things present, or things to come, be able to separate you from the love of God. I hope to meet you in the kingdom. D. N. CHANEY.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

The first thing I will notice is our Wilbraham campmeeting. This year it was the best and largest, as we expected. Best, because there was more harmony, and more labor to spread light and get the people ready for the great events so near us; and much less hobby preaching than in years past, when some seemed determined to push certain views to the distraction and expense of everything else. This year there were only two or three of this class who appeared in uniform.

Another thing worth noticing. It is twenty-four years since it was my duty to preserve order on the ground in that county, and never, until this year, has a meeting passed off without arresting from five to fifteen of the Cain family for disturbance. This year there was not one, and no disposition was manifested to disturb the meeting. This change is not because the devil is getting better, or his agents reforming. It was because there was more harmony and praying, and a different influence on the ground, and an impression that some great event is near at hand, which might be the coming of the Lord, as we all believed and spake.

My perplexity was less this year than ever before. (1.) No rowdyism to contend with. (2.) But little cross-firing at each other. (3.) Because we had two more on the committee, and each had his appropriate business to see to, and did it, which saved much confusion.

The finances, although the best of economy was used, will fall short more than last year. The reasons are obvious. We always fall short on board at the low prices for such good tables in the woods; and as we had one third more boarders, of course we must fall more behind. The tables would not pay at our prices, if all paid as they do at other meetings; but when we add five hundred dollars of free boarders, with the necessary things added for a larger meeting, all can see the profit on the stands cannot fill up the hole or loss; so the larger the number of boarders, the more the loss. But some would say, "Cut off part of the free boarders." Well, whom shall we cut off? It must not be the preachers that pay their own fare, and preach for nothing. It must not be the committee and the help we hire, which are some thirty-five. It should not be the poor among us. These we always have with us, Jesus says. Well, cut off those that do not co-operate with us, but against us, and oppose us in every step we take, except when we are taking those steps to wait upon them at the table; and some of those this year found fault with their fare, when they got it for nothing, and those that paid for it were satisfied. Now, if such a class are cut off, you will have a fuss sure enough; for if they work against us when well used, by having our ground free for their convention, without asking, and our table, too, and then whine; what will they say if they are denied all this? You know there would be a howling at us by them for a year at least. This subject of reducing the number of free boarders came up, and it was thought best to let it go this year, as we thought the Lord was so soon coming. And here we are in debt. Now what is to be done? is the question.

These remarks are voluntary on my part—not the voice of the committee. I only am responsible for these statements, for I am the oldest on the committee, and have known all about the finances of every meeting held in Wilbraham for twenty years, or over; and have a right to speak on a subject that interests the whole body. The debt must be paid, and the committee are responsible, but they are not to blame; for each man will tell you they could not be hired to do what they did short of fifteen to twenty-five dollars each; and not one of us received a cent. It has been thought by some that the committee had pay, but it is not so. Some of us lost two Sabbaths, and worked all the week besides, and may have to pay forty to fifty dollars each to square up, unless our friends help us out.

Next to Alton Bay. The meeting this year was more harmonious than last, and better. A good, earnest, religious feeling was the leading spirit on the ground, until Saturday, when we left, and I heard it continued through the same.

Next to Portland, and witnessed the awful ravages of the late fire. Only think of all the buildings in the thickest and best part of the city being burned up that stood on three hundred and thirty-seven acres, and you can form some idea of the destruction. Most of the furniture that was not burned was stolen after it was carried into other buildings or the streets. The pianos were very plenty in the streets. Some of them were stolen and carried off for miles. One was found over to Cape Elizabeth. One family went over to the Cape to board, and went into a room furnished with their own furniture, which was stolen from their house while on fire. Many such instances of theft have come to light. This generation have no mercy on the distressed.

Next to Bath. The truth took effect, and the house was full. Some heard for the first time, and wanted to hear more. Probably they will have another chance soon.

Next to Poland. Had a full house, and a blessed time. The people shelled out from the hills and valleys. Nothing but the Advent doctrine passes current in that region. Even the wicked believe it. This is an old fortification. Sister Libby has died of her cancer since I was there. Bro. T. Jordan's cancer is cured, and he is in the field again preaching. He is the one I mentioned last winter, and called on the brethren to help, which they did from all parts of the country—some from the West. You little think how much good your little presents did that distressed family. God and that family have given you credit for it.

Next to Casco, Mayberry Hill. I found them in good spirits. Called on an old lady, one hundred and three years old, who reads without glasses. She has brought up eleven children, the oldest is now eighty-three years old, and now living. The old lady's name is Olive Mann. She was born in Wrentham, Mass., and was a Methodist. She recollects the dark day, being nearly seventeen years old. She says every body thought the day of judgment had come, and all read their Bibles, especially the twenty-fourth of Matthew; so the people say that talked with her before she was deaf. She answers questions by writing. She has paired seven bushels of apples this month. It seemed like shaking hands with an old prophetess. This generation will not pass until we see the Lord, I believe. I find an increasing desire to hear the truth. This gives us more courage to preach it. Calls from new places are plenty. Let us work every day. HIRAM MUNGER.

SPEAK KINDLY.

Kind words cost no more than unkind; but their effect is widely different. Many a wayward one has been won from his wanderings by kind words. Bitter words never do any good; and for this reason the Lord has forbidden their use. Let us all yield a hearty obedience to such a wise commandment. "Grievous words stir up anger," said the wise man, but "a soft answer turneth away wrath." Shall we not henceforth always give the "soft answer?" Let none but kind words be spoken in our families,—to wife, husband, children, parents, servants, neighbors—everybody, everywhere. Dear reader, what do you say?

EXCELLENT.—We would call attention to an article in another column, headed, "Tittle Tattle," from the pen of Bro. D. F. Newton, author of "Home Thrusts," "Shining Light," etc. Do not fail to read it. The subject is an important one.

INQUIRY.

What is the signification of the original word, rendered destroy, in Matthew 10: 28? Seeing, a few days since, a definition of the word alluded to, in a so-called religious paper, induced me to propose to you the foregong question. R. ROBBINS.

The word rendered destroy in Matt. 10: 28 is apolesai, from apollumi, and is defined as follows:—"to destroy, kill," "perish," "put to death," "to render vain, bring to nought," "to lose, be deprived of."

The word occurs in Luke 17: 27,—"The flood came and destroyed them all. Also in Luke 17: 29,—"It rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all."

CHARACTER OF NAPOLEON.

All admit that Napoleon III. is a "wonderful man." He is as noted for keeping his plans to himself as he is for his unparalleled success in their execution. Says the Boston Journal, when speaking of him.

"During the last ten or fifteen years he has exercised a greater influence on the destinies of the continental nations than any other man. His plans, so inscrutable, could never be fathomed by his rivals; his power of deception and dissimulation have been equalled by none. After a short period of probation after he became Emperor, he not only made himself to be recognized by the crowned heads of Europe as an equal, but in all the mysteries of king craft showed himself to be infinitely their superior."

All eyes are watching the steps of this man of wonder, expecting that he will soon make some important movements in relation to the Papal power. We have been satisfied for years that he will betray the Roman woman, and be the chief instrument in bringing her to desolation. It is evident he has no real love for the Roman Catholic church, only as it may assist him in gaining influence over the people.

A GENERAL WAR IN EUROPE.

Things in Europe are very far from being in a settled condition. The hush of peace for the past few weeks does not bid fair to be of long continuance. There is a remarkable condition of unrest among all people. Revolution is the order of the day. All are dissatisfied. The kings are seeking more power, and the people are determined they shall have less instead of more. The scene before us is like the ocean heaving before the opening of a terrible storm. None but the power of the Highest can quell the upheavings; but he is letting them loose. The winds are about to blow. A political tempest is at hand; but thank the Lord the storm will end in the destruction of the wicked powers of earth, and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom of God. "Let thy kingdom come."

The Marquis de Lawchejaquelin has just published a speech, which he would have delivered in the French Chambers, but for ill health; in which he assumes that "Europe is on the verge of a general war." He says, as reported in the Boston Journal of Sept. 18th:—

"There is no use in concealing the fact, France has played too great a part in recent times to have any alliances on which she can count Modern Germany does not love us, and rivalry will soon be aggravated into hatred. Italy is out of the question. The manner in which the French are received there, and the government judged and treated, does not allow of any illusion. Russia suffered too much from her wars in the Crimea and in Poland, and from the treaty at Paris, to trust to our alliance. England, having to choose between the empire of Germany and France, cannot hesitate. We are feared; all the great nations are jealous of us; and two of these great nations are created by our arms or with our assent. We have revived old and created fresh grievances against us, and it will be long before they are effaced. Soon, in a European conflict, we shall be alone."

To meet this startling condition of affairs, the Marquis proposes that France should prepare on the largest scale for the greatest events of the century, and secure an immediate alliance with Austria, so as to prevent the further aggrandisement of Prussia.

In England, the organ of high Toryism, Blackwood's Magazine, is earnestly advocating an alliance with the United States, for the same reason. It declares that the Alabama and other claims should be settled in a spirit that will show America that "we are not insensible to the value of her friendship, or the force of her example." "Cornelius O'Dowd," who urges this policy, plainly says his reason for it is the present unsettled condition of Europe, and the need of England having an ally "who is above being subsidized, but not above being esteemed." He thinks France is determined to revise the treaties of 1815, which England was mainly instrumental in forming, and upon these considerations remarks:

"It is because I see this, and that I see besides we have neither true friend nor well-wisher on the Continent of Europe, I would draw close to those who, once our narrow squables are forgotten, could not but regard the old country with affection, and would never stand coldly by and see her assailed by overwhelming odds, or crushed beneath the united forces of despotism."

NEW WORKS RECEIVED.

L. Hastings."

This is a valuable tract, and should be read by every body. Price 10 cents.

Czechowski's Thrilling Narrative.

A small edition of this work has been printed in paper covers, to be disposed of for the benefit of the European Mission. SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY.—This is the title of a valuable work by Dr. R. T. Trall, published by Miller, Wood & Co., No. 15 Laight St., New York. It is said to be "a scientific and popular exposition of the fundamental problems in sociology." For sale by the publishers. Price by mail, $2.00.

CONSUMPTION.—Dr. Andrew Stone, at the "Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute," No. 96 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y., has issued a valuable work of 309 8vo. pp., which those who are threatened with consumption ought to read, and every other one who wishes to keep clear from that and other kindred diseases.

SPIRITUALIST NATIONAL CONVENTION.

The third National Convention of Spiritualists was held at Pratt's Hall, in Providence, R. I., from Aug. 21st to 26th. Every year shows that their principles are making rapid progress in all parts of the world.

The following extracts from speeches at the convention, made by some of the leading Spiritualists, and reported in the Banner of Light, will give the reader some idea of their position and sentiments.

In a speech of Mr. J. S. Loveland, he endeavored to show that Spiritualists are called on to establish "the fundamental principles of morals." He then goes on to say:—

"But you ask me, why are Spiritualists especially required to do this work, and do it now? For (1) They have entirely discarded all the standards and authority, which the world has hitherto received as valid on this subject. The will of God, supernaturally revealed in the form of statutory laws, or preceptive injunctions, has been the world's only standard of morals, and is the only one of which it has any knowledge to day.

To be sure, moralists have talked of "the fitness of things"—"the greatest amount of happiness"—"the greatest good of the greatest number," etc., etc., but their real standard has been the Divine will supernaturally revealed. It needs no argument to prove that Spiritualists have discarded the whole system of supernaturalism; and, of course, all that depends thereon goes with the central, fundamental proposition. We may admit, do admit that there is truth in many of the moral precepts of the old religions; but to attempt to enforce them on us, upon the plea that God has specially spoken them, provokes only a smile of incredulity, or contempt. While, to some extent, admitting the justness of many precepts, we totally ignore the assumed principle on which they are supposed to rest."

Here is an honest confession "that Spiritualists have discarded the whole system of supernaturalism," by which it is meant the revealed will of God as given in the Bible. Spiritualists claim that our blessed Bible is no more a revelation from God than are the writings of Andrew Jackson Davis, or the communications received through any other medium.

Dr. H. T. Child, of Philadelphia, is reported to have said that "Spiritualists had been charged with being irreligious, but it was not so. This whole delegation indicated to him clearly that they were a religious people. He believed that God was glad to see them together, because he thought he could not be glad without making God glad—at least, God in him, and he had not been acquainted with any other, and was not anxious to know any other God; he filled him up. He did not believe in the Orthodox God, but in a God who was immanent in everything—as much in a flower as in a man, according to the power of the flower to express it."

Spiritualism denies both Father and Son; hence it is antichrist.

BEYOND JORDAN.

Jordan is the name of the largest and most remarkable river in Palestine. The name is derived from Yeour, or Don, or Dan, the family name of one of Jacob's sons, a word that signifies judge. See Gen. 49: 16. Hence the name of this famous stream denotes the critical waters, the judgment river, or river of judgment. The crossing of Jordan by the Israelites, under the leadership of Joshua, was the crisis or turning point in their history and destiny. This day of their triumph sounded the death-knell in the ears of their enemies. Josh. 5: 1. The passage was not effected without divine mercy and miracle; but once "over Jordan," the wandering church was in Canaan the blest land of promise. And Canaan was the long-sought goal, the end of hope.

Now there is a beautiful typology in all of this; but, as in many other scriptural things, we affirm the majority of the christian world to have utterly mistaken its meaning. For in all the theology of the day, as appears in books, sermons, and hymns, the waters of Jordan are made to signify dying or death, which, when once it has passed upon the saint, he enters the heavenly Canaan. Indeed he is gotten into Canaan before he is fairly out of the river! And on the heels of this error follows another, namely, that the dead come to the judgment, their dying being equal to the coming of Christ. The two errors are in wedlock. And, so, assuming immortality in death, the splendid type which so plainly sets forth the true period of rewards for the saints, is distorted from its proper meaning and forced to sustain the strange notion that our "last enemy" opens the gate of endless joy! Now the main error we are refuting would wear some semblance of truth if the Bible was shown to teach that the decease of each soul constituted its judgment day. For there must be first judgment and acquittal before there can come reward and glory. But nothing is plainer than that the Scriptures place the day and execution of judgment at and beyond Christ's second, personal coming. And as we herein have shown that the typical river has no relation to death, but rather refers to judgment, and the judgment day is not yet come, then no saint has ever crossed its swelling flood, not one of the good departed have yet gained the land of Canaan. Death may be as a dark river, a Lethean stream; but it has no type in the famous passage over or through Jordan, for in all the one hundred and ten usages of the word Jordan in the Scriptures, in not a single instance can it be made a type of dying or of being dead,—not in its natural sense, nor in the derivation or meaning of the word.

But just as Jordan separated Israel from exile and home, so the day of judgment intervenes between the church's militancy and her triumphant entrance into rest. Just as it is impossible for a multitude of people to cross dry-shod and unharmed a rushing, swollen river several hundred feet wide, and ten or twelve feet deep, without means save by a merciful miracle; so it will be impossible for the elect host of God to pass the searching ordeal of the judgment, unless Jesus by a miracle lead them through. Reader, "how wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?"—Jer. 12: 5. Just as the feet of the priests who bore the sacred ark dried up the river so as to banish all fear of the turbulent waters; so Christ, our High Priest and Ark, destroys for his chosen ones all the terrors of the judgment. See 1 John 4: 17, 18, and Matt. 25: 31–46. Indeed, for the good there is no future judgment of terror or fear; nothing but a glorious acquittal before an assembled universe. Just as Israel, when they had fairly gotten over Jordan, found the old corn of the land and Canaan the temporal rest; so the church of God will then, and not till then, find her eternal rest when Jesus leads her through the day of judgment into the kingdom. "For if Joshua had given them rest, then would he not afterwards have spoken of another day. There remaineth a (sabbatismos) rest for the people of God."—Heb. 4: 8, 9. And just as the hearts of Israel's enemies melted, neither was there spirit in them any more, and Jericho and Ai fell, and the sun and moon stood still in the heavens, "and there was no day like that before it or after it" (Josh. 10: 14); so will all the anti-christian kings of the earth faint and perish forever when, under Jesus, the church of God crosses the bold Jordan of judgment; and there will never be another day like it in the history of man. O that christians, who expect some day to be saved, would see in their true light these Bible types and doctrines, concerning the last things! Then would men sing understandingly about "crossing bold Jordan's stormy main," and "treading the verge of Jordan," and standing on Jordan's stormy banks," and "casting wishful eyes over to Canaan," etc, and the people of Jehovah everywhere would comprehend the glad meaning of, and as the Bride of Jesus, join heartily in the prayer of Moses, "I pray thee let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan." Men and brethren! the redeemed hosts will never "pass over Jordan," and enter Canaan, till Jesus comes to earth again. But they will cross over soon. The "hour of his judgment is come." "Hear, O Israel; thou art to pass over Jordan this day!" D. T. T.

SIGNS IN THE STARS.

There may be more wonders just ahead. The following, cut from the Boston Journal, would seem to indicate another one of those rare and striking occurrences that characterize the year we live in, which the celebrated Bishop Simpson styles "the prophetic year." I have thought that five hundred millions of people would never have occasion to pass another sleepless night to see the stars fall as a sign of our Savior's near return, but it may be they will, for remember it is the last in this century." Let us "discern the signs of the times." Herald this expected event far and wide, and let all eyes be on the watch. God may speak again in the rushing meteors ere the heavens pass away as a scroll. Happy are we who live in these sublime years. Happy are the eyes that see these things. Human wisdom may attempt to account for these celestial phenomena on secondary or natural principles; but when they have done so, still the event may remain as the predicted one. It is not necessary to work a miracle to bring about this sign. Let us watch, and whenever we perceive the exact fulfillment of our Lord's words, call the attention of the unbelieving to what is written in the evangelists and the Revelation. And if they scoff they alone must bear it. D. T. T.

"GREAT SHOWER OF METEORS EXPECTED.—Next in grandeur and sublimity to a total solar eclipse, or a great comet stretched athwart the starry heavens, is the great meteoric shower, such as was witnessed here in November, 1833. On this occasion, from two o'clock till broad daylight, the sky being perfectly serene and cloudless, the whole heavens were lighted with a magnificent and imposing display of celestial fireworks. Arago computes that not less than two hundred and forty thousand meteors were visible above the horizon of Boston, on the morning of the 13th of November, 1833. This display was seen all over North America. A similar display was seen by Humboldt at Cumana, South America, in 1799.

A comparison of the epochs of appearance of these great showers has led to the discovery that they are periodic, their returns being separated from each other by a third part of a century, or some multiple of this period, and are periodical appearances of one grand meteoric shower.

Prof. Newton of Yale College, who has devoted much time to the investigation of the periodic character of these showers, finds that a prodigious flight of meteors, the most imposing of its kind, will make its appearance, probably for the last time in this century, on the morning of the 13th or 14th of November next.

Only thirteen of these great showers are recorded between the years 903 and 1833. Such a rare phenomenon awakens a deep interest among all classes of persons. Preparations to observe this sublime spectacle, for scientific purposes, have already commenced in Europe. Let no one forget Tuesday and Wednesday nights, November 13 and 14.

WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.

"O I am so glad" I went to Wilbraham Campmeeting. For nine years I had greatly desired to go to that consecrated mountain; and I must say it far exceeded all my expectations. I am thankful the good Lord answered the many ardent prayers of faith, and granted his blessing, so that it was acknowledged by all to be the best meeting ever held there. The preaching was truly "meat in due season." The prayer meetings were excellent, and that love feast (rightly named) was well worth my going five hundred miles to enjoy. I wish some of our brethren in Western New York could have been there. Two hundred and fifty testimonies in one hour and twenty minutes. Think of this, brethren, when you are in some cold, formal prayer or conference meeting. How the children's faces shone with love, as one after another arose to speak It was the nearest to the marriage feast of any thing I ever expect to enjoy this side the coming kingdom. I rejoice that I am accounted worthy to suffer reproach with such a class as that. Truly it can be said of them as of a class of ancients, "of whom the world was not worthy."

What a good place to seek the Lord. Many who went there "strangers," were "brought nigh by the blood of Christ." Some who said at first, "You don't know how I want to be a christian," went home rejoicing to carry the news of salvation, and of a coming Savior, to the "regions beyond." Praise the good Lord. I hope to hear good tidings from them. The singing, too, could not be surpassed in mortality. Then to close with such a heavenly communion. Seven hundred and thirty-eight around the table of the Lord. Then came the parting. O how hard to say farewell, and leave such a company to go out and fight single handed and alone.

"O could I stay with friends so kind,
How it would cheer my fainting mind;
But duty's call and God's command
Now bid us take the parting hand."

We did, but with the bright prospect and firm resolve to meet in the kingdom soon, and no more "take the parting hand."

How glad I am to see that love is increasing. Truly the Bride is making herself ready for the marriage. She heeds the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and is preparing for the celebration. What a time that will be. O beloved, let us be ready for it. Let us be true to our Coming One. O my soul, shall I be at that wedding? By the grace of God I will. Reader, will you? You are invited, Will you accept the invitation? Will you come? God help you to come before it is too late. Beloved, we shall there have what Wilbraham Campmeeting was but a foretaste. A. P. MOORE.

WHO WILL HELP?

Had you lived in the days of Christ, and were a believer in him, and he had made you a steward of his wealth to the amount of fifty, one hundred, or two hundred thousand denarius, and he had called on you for the loan of one, five, or ten hundred of these pieces of money, with which to publish tracts, pamphlets, books, and papers—suppose they then existed—for the sake of spreading abroad everywhere the glad tidings of his kingdom at hand; and should tell you that these were for the benefit of poor men, poor sinners, and poor heathen, ready to perish for want of light, and already dying at the rate of one every second, or 76,400 every day, and that he would pay you again a hundred fold in due time, would you have refused him the loan? Could you, would you, if a christian, dare to deny Him? Would you have suffered him to ask for the favor a second time? Would you as a christian have doubted his ability or willingness to pay you again? Would you have questioned his responsibility or demanded a note on interest, or the endorsement of Joseph of Arimathea? Remember, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the LORD, and that which he hath given will he pay him again." Do you believe it? D. T. T.

HELP THE NEEDY.

BRO. GRANT:—I want you to have the kindness to lay before the brethren, through the Crisis, the circumstances and condition of one of the Lord's honest poor,—Bro. Franklin Douglas, now residing at Syracuse, N. Y., who is in very indigent circumstances, and is struggling very hard against the tide of adversity. His wife, I suppose you are well aware, has been a cripple and a helpless invalid for a long time, from the effects of inflammatory rheumatism; and he possesses a frail constitution and rather poor health, but a very willing heart, and does all he can for their support. He is at present keeping a boarding house, with but little patronage and high rent; all of which, with the high price of provisions, has placed him not only in very pressing circumstances, but a suffering condition.

Now I wish all those who love the Lord, and his honest poor; those whom God has prospered, and can give a little to one of his suffering children, would send immediately to Bro. Douglas. A few dollars will aid him materially in his dire distress, and be very thankfully received. His rent is due, and must be paid in a given time (very short), or be turned out on the cold charity of the world.

Brethren, let us all give a little in the name of Jesus. When we help the poor, you are aware, we lend to the Lord. His address is Franklin Douglas, Syracuse, N. Y.

Yours in hope, J. NARAMORE.

We know Bro. and Sr. Douglas, and hope there will be a hearty response to this call.—ED.

WESTERN CAMPMEETING.

BRO. GRANT:—You will see by this that I am in the West. I came here in August, for my health, by the advice of my physician. I am not here to preach, but to rest from preaching awhile, and recruit. I am with my brothers, whom I had not seen for many years, in Bloomington, Ill. My family are yet in New York, and I shall return ere long. I am very well pleased with the West, especially with those people living here who are looking for Jesus' coming. I have just returned from the campmeeting in De Kalb, where I spent a few days in as good society as I ever want on this sin-cursed earth.

That campmeeting was a glorious success in every way. It was a success in cheering the pilgrims gathered there; in converting many sinners; in raising funds for missionary and other purposes; in impressing the people in that vicinity very favorably in regard to the character of those looking for the Lord; and in showing to the world that we are in earnest in our faith. The meeting increased in interest up to the close, and many were converted to Jesus there. The scene at the waters of baptism, on Sunday, was the most glorious and beautiful one I ever saw. The first who went down were a man and his wife, the wife being dressed in white like a bride. They were buried together, by Bro. Himes and Bro. H. McCullock. Others were baptized in the same way, so beautifully; among them a little brother and sister of tender years. All came out smiling like pleased children, and some shouted. Many unconverted persons wept at the sight. Quite a number were converted on the ground, and a great many more were deeply convicted. Nearly five thousand dollars were raised on the ground for the Association and campmeeting, and they propose to raise fifteen thousand within the year. I think they will do it, too, for the great West is getting pretty thoroughly aroused to the work. I feel much attached to them, and pray God to bless them in their great work.

They have no stall-fed preachers out here, nor plants of hot-house growth; but they have what is far better, men of noble hearts and strong minds; men consecrated to toil, and hardship, and privation; men of God and men of action, and their work will prosper. Here is a glorious soil for truth to grow, and, in the hands of consecrated men, it will grow and harvest its hundred-fold in the day of the Lord Jesus. FRANK BURR.

TRACT ON UNIVERSALISM.

BRO. GRANT:—I desire to report further concerning the tract on "Universalism Exposed," its appreciation among the friends of Jesus, and also the verdict of some of those whom we hope soon to reckon among God's jewels. To a friend with whom I had labored in months gone by, to show the great fact that men do not go to heaven at death, I had previously given one of these tracts for perusal. In a few days I met him again. Says he, "That tract is the best argument for refuting Universalism I have ever seen. I would like it if you could spare me a few more of them to mail them to my Universalist friends The argument is unanswerable. I value it very highly." After stating the price, he said "they were worth a gold dollar apiece, and besides, on the last page there is the scripture quoted that shows that rewards do not come at death." I saw plainly that light had broken into his mind.

To a young man, who is rather inclined to take the idea that God is so good that he may look with some allowance on sin, I had previously given a tract. I asked him if he had read it, and what he thought of it? "Well," said he, "that tract uses those fellows up; They cannot get round that." I might mention many others, whose judgments have decided that it will head off those whose minds are leaning towards that system, as it has in the case last mentioned. These tracts have gone in every direction, and I am satisfied that God is honored in the effort. The engine is on the track, and though the barking of dogs is near the wheels, it don't stop for them.

We envy not the spiritual condition of any one, who shall in any way seek to annul an argument that will convince the enemies of God of their utter hopeless condition, unless they believe in the gospel of his Son Shall any whisper Peace, when "there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked"? Shall any stand in the way a moment, to prevent them from seeing the vortex into which they will inevitably fall? or pander about words before the ungodly, thus giving him an occasion to spurn all entreaties? NEW PRESTON CAMPMEETING.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say, through the Crisis, that we have had a good campmeeting in New Preston. The meeting began and ended in the Spirit. The Lord evidently poured us out a blessing, and lasting good has been the result, I trust. Many are convicted of the truth of the soon coming of the Lord, and some are converted. A good influence in the neighborhood of the meeting has been the result. Brn. Ross, Hook, Pyle, and others, preached the word faithfully and plainly, so that all who heard had a chance to be profited and blessed. The Lord poured out his Spirit abundantly in some of the prayer meetings. The people had a mind to work. A great deal of anxiety—even distress—was felt on the part of parents for their children, and many asked special prayer for some dear child, or children; and this reminds me of a request made in some one of our papers, that some hour on Friday of each week, be observed in "praying for our children." We must have them saved. May the Lord give us faith to ask, believing that we receive.

I would like to speak in particular of each meeting, but have not time. The general conviction among God's children seems to be, Jesus soon is coming; and many are convinced beyond a doubt that this is the last year of separation between him and his people. "Forever with the Lord! Amen, so let it be." How thrilling the anticipation! what will it be to be there!

Among other things of interest, we would not forget the burial of some in the water—fourteen in all, I believe. The people seemed solemn, and I trust many understand the real import of baptism better than ever before.

Well, the meeting is over. The waiting ones are scattered, and have said Good-bye once more. A few are left here to bear the cross, and do all we can to hold up the light, so that the warning may be faithfully given, and the work well done over against our own house. The enemy is already busy, ready to catch with his snares; and how important it is that every caution should be used by God's children, lest we should in any way be overcome. We have been edified, but God forbid that we should lean to our own understanding. Our numbers are increased, but have we not already learned to "Cease . . . from man whose breath is in his nostrils," but may our whole trust be in the Lord. God bless you, dear brothers and sisters; and may the Lord help us to live out the good received at the campmeeting in New Preston, is the prayer of your unworthy sister in Christ,

"THE ENGLISHMAN'S HEBREW CONCORDANCE."

BRO. GRANT:—I very much need, and would like to obtain, a copy (or two copies—one for a friend), of "The Englishman's Hebrew Concordance," but am too poor to buy one at the common retail price, since the advanced rates, which I believe now are nineteen dollars. If any brother, or other person has a copy, and has not much use for it, or who from any other motive would be willing to sell cheap, or donate it, for the sake of having it placed within the hands of a thorough Hebrew student, who needs it for constant use, for the sake of doing good with it in promoting truth, and building up the Lord's cause, I will be obliged if such brother will give notice accordingly, in the Crisis, stating price,—or, what would be better, addressing me a note at Tuscola, Ill. I remain very truly your brother, N. S. BASTION.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. Campbell.

Bro. Grant:—Having a little leisure time this morning, I thought I would write you a few lines. My heart says bless the Lord for all his mercies to unworthy me, and to us as a people. Surely our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places, and we have a goodly heritage. I thought so when we were on old Wilbraham camp-ground, and heard the old trumpeters of Zion sounding out the alarm in his holy mountain. Dear brother, the influence that prevailed in that meeting, went out from it to the "regions beyond," as our dear brother Hastings says. It seemed to me to be the sweetest place this side the kingdom. Truly, it appears evident that the bride of Christ is making herself ready. Dear brother, I was rejoiced to see the lovely spirit that prevailed in the meeting. Although brethren differed on some non-essentials, yet they there determined to love each other for Christ's sake.

It is very evident "the end of all things is at hand." We must therefore be sober, and watch unto prayer. We are not our own, we are bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ. Therefore, as lively stones in his glorious building, let us labor for Christ, our living head. O let us be living members. Amen. To this end we must give ourselves much unto prayer. When, I looked at the embassadors of Christ, I thought those dear tried saints were much in need of our prayers and support. I was much pleased to see so many of the last day laborers present. I mean the female ministry. As to the labors of those dear sisters, I am in full sympathy, for I have been an eye witness of the labor and zeal of some of them; especially, our much beloved sister in Christ and fellow laborer in the gospel of the kingdom, A. E. Smith. She is fearless, bold and truthful. Some may think our sister shuns to speak the whole truth, because she does not always come out with strong meat; but it must be born in mind that the field in which our beloved sister, and her co-laborer, Sister Boyd, and others, are called to labor, is different from other fields in which some of our dear brethren and sisters labor; but I assure you, brother, she keeps nothing back that is profitable to them. You would think so if you could hear some of them speak in her little missions in relation to the coming kingdom, and of their joy in the Lord since they heard from the lips of our sister, that the kingdom of God and the inheritance of the saints is to be on the new earth. Their faces are all radiant with heavenly light when she tells them it is very near, and may come while she is speaking.

Yesterday, we closed a Campmeeting of seven days at Nyack, twenty-five miles from New York. There were upon the ground Sisters Smith and Boyd, and four colored sisters; some from New York and some from Philadelphia, and one dear old saint who was a slave for many years. Her name is Howard. She is the sister we took up a special collection for in the large tent. She spoke in power several times during the meeting.

Our brethren in Cooper Institute, New York, are very strong in the immediate coming of the Lord. Our dear brother Chambers is sounding the alarm in the Catskill mountain, with great success. To God be all the glory. Yours in the hope of the gospel,

H. Campbell.

From Bro. H. K. Flagg.

Bro. Grant:—Next Monday morning, the Lord willing, I expect to start for St. Louis, Mo. I am fully satisfied that all the periods of the Bible, ending with the coming and kingdom of Christ, will end before, or with the autumn of '67; and what is done for the spread of these great truths must be done quickly. Millions in our own country have never heard these glorious truths preached. By the grace of God, I mean to devote what little time I have in preaching the gospel of the kingdom to the freedmen, and others of the south and south-west, before the end. My address will be at St. Louis, Mo.

I have received the following donations to aid me in my mission work, which I have not previously acknowledged. Remember me in your prayers, that I may be faithful in the work of giving light on the advent of Christ in his glorious kingdom, to reign on the new earth.

Savoy, Mass. H. K. Flagg.

From Bro. G. W. Stetson.

Bro. Grant:—Inclosed I send you a model letter and a pattern spirit. I never received any thing in my life that did me more good. Why, I almost envied the writer his ability to confer so much good feeling in so small a compass, by exercising such a frank, generous, manly, and christian spirit. O, how like heaven earth would be if all its inmates, or inhabitants, would in all similar cases go and do likewise.

I have been corresponding with him over one and a half years, but do not personally know him, and never saw him.* My articles in the Crisis drew him out; he beginning the correspondence by inquiring for "further light." Being closely pressed in the argument, he became personal and somewhat abusive, to which I would not respond, but mildly rebuked him, and remonstrated against such a course, and the inclosed is the manly response:—

"Eld. G. W. Stetson:—Dear Bro.,—Your letter of Aug. 20th is at hand, and this is to inform you that I am sorry, very sorry, for the wrong done you by my last epistle, and humbly ask your forgiveness; though I think that I would not, and did not, knowingly and willfully perpetrate an insult, or purposely wound your feelings. I confess, however, that the 'square rule' is the 'best rule,' and freely take all back, confess my misdoing, and implore you to 'forgive and forget,' promising to try to do better in the future, and avoid such unpleasant things. If the above is not fair and christian, I desire to be told what is, as I wish to be on good terms with all my fellow creatures, of whom I am least and most unworthy.

I am nothing but a plow-boy of twenty years, always at home, and a backwood's home at that; looked down upon by everybody of any consequence, and the object of scorn and ridicule, on account of non-conformity in pomp and gaiety to the proud, selfish world. No friends, comparatively poor, quite obscure, and persistently humble, unworthy of any thing, I take up with all kinds of treatment, waiting patiently to see what the next world has for me. I know very well that I am a 'fool,' and that in more senses than one. Nay, I am willing to be accounted a fool by the giddy world around, if I can still obtain a knowledge, a divinely given knowledge, of the deep things of God. You know it is to 'babes' that the promise is made. Now, dear Bro., excuse all my foolishness and nonsense, and follow on in the pursuit of the mysteries of the gospel, with what light God shall in mercy give you. An apostle compares this life to childhood, the christian's youth,—we think as a child, understand as a child, but in eternity we shall know even as we are known. You and I shall meet there in a little while, my brother, and then our differences will forever cease. Farewell. God bless you.

Your unworthy ———."

Bro. David Briggs, Paoli, Wis., writes: "This is the first that I have felt to acknowledge any connection with the Advent people as a body; although I have believed and preached it for thirty-seven years, with the exception of a few years. I am poor in this world, yet rich in grace, and an heir of the kingdom, which God is preparing through his Son for them that love him. I run not as uncertainly; neither fight I as one that beateth the air; 'but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection'; lest after preaching to others, I myself should be cast away.' The Lord is as a wall of fire round about me, so that I shall not be moved.

I feel that my worldly business is closed up, and that I have only to do what God requires, and I am determined to be faithful in the discharge of my duty, until he shall send his Son from heaven to take possession of this earth, and set up his everlasting kingdom. I can say of a truth, it is my meat and my drink to do the will of my Heavenly Father.

I have no settled home, nor do I expect any till Jesus comes. I am a true friend and brother in Christ, and now I pray that we may all sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, and that our whole soul, body, and spirit, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen."

Bro. J. Naramore, Rochester, N. Y., writes:—"It is with much pleasure that I respond at once to your earnest solicitation for advance payment from all subscribers, and lovers of your very excellent and interesting paper. All should do it the more cheerfully in consideration of your untiring efforts and renewed exertions to make it more interesting every succeeding year. The Crisis to us is a very welcome visitor. May the good Lord put in the hearts of all who love his appearing to cheerfully respond to the call, and abundantly bless you in your unceasing efforts in spreading the glorious truths of the gospel, and the coming kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, wherein all the redeemed of Israel shall reign forever, and forevermore."

A Methodist brother writes:—"Your paper is 'a feast of fat things.' I regard it as a live christian periodical. And although I am a member of the M. E. church, yet I am one who is deeply interested in the immediate second coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and hence in all those truths relating thereto. O that we all may be fully prepared for the advent of that day—the great day of God Almighty."

Obituaries.

Burgess. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Mankato, Blue Earth Co., Minnesota, July 30th, 1866, after a distressing illness of two days, Emma G., daughter of Joshua and Sarah A. Burgess, formerly of Garden City, aged fifteen months and ten days.

Thus death has suddenly snatched a lovely flower from the fond embrace of loving parents, whose hearts seemed to be bound up in their little one; and as she was a very pretty and forward child, she was a playful pet of the household. But the parents being firm believers in the soon coming of the blessed Savior, expect to meet their little Emma clad in robes of beauty, with a body that disease cannot prey upon, and whose beauty never shall fade. We trust that this affliction will stimulate them to live in a constant preparation for the coming of the glorious Redeemer.

The funeral services were held in Garden City, and a sermon preached to a large and sympathising audience, by Eld. M. Wellcome, from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Emma dear, sweet gentle Emma,
Must we part with thee so soon?
Many bitter tears are falling
As we lay thee in the tomb.

God who kindly gave thee to us
Bids us sink into his will;
Unto him we now resign thee,
Rest in Jesus; all is well.

Gently in the tomb we lay thee,
Ever trusting in his grace;
Soon again we hope to meet thee,
Soon we'll see thy smiling face.

S. C. Wellcome.

Wellcome. Died very suddenly, in Garden City, July 28th, 1866, Arthur M., son of Dr. J. W. Wellcome, aged fourteen years and three months.

Arthur was a noble boy, beloved by all who knew him. A short time before his death, he went into the river to bathe, and when he came home complained of a pain in his side, which did not leave him until his death. None thought him dangerously sick, and the day before his death he was able to be out of doors. His father was called to go some distance to see a patient, and did not return until next day, and what was his surprise to find his dear boy whom he fondly loved just expiring. He told him his situation, and falling upon his knees by his bedside, he recommended him to God. Little Arthur uniting his prayers with his father, received God's blessing, and his last words were, as he lifted his hands towards heaven, and looked up with his large, expressive eyes, "O Lord Jesus, I give my heart, my whole heart to thee;" and sank sweetly to rest.

Sleep on, dear Arthur; we shall meet again in the morning, when the saints shall all be gathered home.

Very much do we miss this dear boy, and the affliction seems great. Yet we have already seen the hand of Providence manifested in his death. His last words were the means of bringing two of his young friends to Christ, who have found peace, and there is quite a prospect of a revival among the youth of this place. Truly,

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

I. C. Wellcome.

Foster. Died in Madison, Ct., Aug. 8th, 1866, Sister Rena E. Foster, aged twenty-four years.

Meetings were first held by the writer at Madison in Sept. 1865, when our sister was the first to request prayers, followed by revival, including her father, mother, sisters and brother, who gladly received the blessed hope of the soon coming of Jesus, and the resurrection of the dead.

Sister Rena bore a Christian character and contended earnestly for the faith of the gospel. She received much opposition from her associates, but was never ashamed to let them know that she loved the blessed hope. She was prompt to attend the prayer meeting, and ready to give in her testimony for Christ. She is missed by parents, sisters and a brother, but they all rejoice in the hope of meeting her in the morning, where these scenes of mourning will be forever fled away. We shall hear her voice no more on the shores of time, singing songs of praise as she was wont to do, but when the Life-giver returns to earth again to give life to the dear sleeping saints, we trust she will be among the number that will sing praises to God and the Lamb forever.

C. D. Woodruff.

Perry. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Litchfield, Me., Sept. 5th, 1866, Bro. William Perry, aged seventy-one years, ten months.

Long had Bro. P. been a follower of Jesus, and the blessed hope of soon seeing him sustained him in his trials and infirmities. He was among the first in Maine to embrace the faith of the Savior's coming in 1843. Though disappointed like many others, in not seeing Jesus then, he still waited and longed for the coming of the day of glory. During his sickness I called to see him, and found that though life was fast ebbing out, he was rejoicing in the "blessed hope." He rests in hope. Peace to his sleeping dust, till the morn of glory dawns, when in the Savior's own image Bro. William will arise.

A large circle of relatives mourn his loss. May the grace of God sustain them all, especially the heart-stricken widow and children.

R. R. York.

Bryant. Died in Livermore, Aug. 19th, 1866, S. F., son of Lee and Eunice Bryant, aged fourteen years, five months, and eight days.

Our brother and sister deeply feel the loss of their only child, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope, for he left good evidence that he died in the Lord, and now sleeps in Jesus, to awake in the resurrection morning to life and immortality. May God's grace sustain them in this time of affliction.

"Our breath is but fleeting, our days are but few,
In the sadness of parting we bid friends adieu,
We watch them while yielding their last feeble breath,
And follow them slowly to the valley of death.
From there, as we leave them, we look to the morn
When the glory of God the new earth shall adorn,
Where no graveyard or death will again meet our view,
Oh, may we all meet when the earth is made new."

E. M. Haggett.

Chamberlain. Died in North Woodstock, Me., June 6th, 1866, Mrs. Desire, wife of Bro. William Chamberlain, aged sixty-one years.

In former years she was connected with the Methodist church, but during the last years of her life seemed to stand alone religiously, not expressing any sympathy with her husband or any body of believers. I know not in what state of mind she died.

In this bereavement our brother is left to share the sympathies of all who have seen like affliction and to receive comfort, we trust, from that ever living friend, who hath said, "I will not leave you comfortless."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Paris, Sept. 18. The belief is general that Napoleon himself is the author of the note recently made public, and that his sincere desire is for a permanent peace.

Trieste, 19th. A great battle has been fought on the island of Candia, between the Turks and insurrectionists. The Turks were the Victors.

Florence, 19th. The works in connection with the Italian navy at Spezzia are being pushed forward with rapidity.

Berlin, 19th. The abdication of Ludwig, King of Bavaria, is now regarded certain.

Berlin, 20th. Count Bismarck has been taken very ill, though not so much so as to excite serious apprehensions.

The King of Prussia has written an address to the people thanking them for their part borne in the war, and congratulating them on victory and peace.

Paris, 20. The Finance Committee sent here from Mexico to negotiate for a loan are disheartened and have announced the Empire of Mexico without funds.

Florence, 20. A very serious outbreak of the brigands has occurred near Palermo. The telegraph wires have been cut in all directions; but as the national troops hold all the principal places throughout, the rebellion will be of short duration.

Letters from the continent speak in rather discouraging tones of the health of the Emperor Napoleon.

From India we learn that great suffering continued in the famine-stricken districts of Bengal, and the people were flocking to Calcutta for relief.

The Paris Siecle announces the immediate evacuation of Rome by the French troops, and states that their place will be taken by the Roman legion.

Cable Dispatches.

Paris, Sept. 22. It is said the Empress Eugenie will shortly repair to Rome to condole with the Pope.

Terrible Famine in India—Advices from Calcutta give heart-rending accounts of the famine in the provinces of Orissa and Midnapore. No less than 75,000 persons are daily fed by public charity, and it is estimated that an equal number are supplied privately, chiefly by the Hindoos. The number of deaths from starvation averages 2500 per week, and one week reached 3500! Besides these, many die in the interior whose cases are not reported. Accounts appear daily in the papers, reported by eye-witnesses, of the jackals eating the corpse of one wretch while they wait for his companion who is dying, or of the child taken from the breast of its mother, who has been dead two days. What is worse, the sufferings of the people have been aggravated by the outrageous if not criminal mismanagement of the English officials, who discouraged the efforts of private charity and refused to exert themselves to relieve the famine before it became so wide-spread and alarming. The famine began in October last, from the failure of the rice crop, and even now the efforts of the authorities are inadequate to meet the emergency, and the poor Hindoos are perishing by the thousand.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Sept. 18. Special dispatches from Canada state that the military preparations are increasing. Five new companies have been organized and an ample factory is about being constructed by the government. D'Arcy McGee is becoming very unpopular on account of his temporizing policy. The propeller Congress, of Detroit, seized some time ago, has been released.

New York, Sept. 23. Vera Cruz correspondence, under date of Sept. 11th, states that there were no indications of the withdrawal of the French troops. The 81st French regiment was expected to leave for France on the 10th, but only one battalion had come down from the capital, and the remainder—from 1500 to 2000 men—were ready to take up the flag of the Empire instead of that of France, as soon as the battalion left Mexico. French money was being expended in large amounts to increase the strength of the Imperial army.

The Revista of Vera Cruz says France permits the enlistment of volunteers, and will give to the Imperial Government arms and munitions of war. The Estafette says Gen. Uraga proceeds to Europe on a mission, and will then accompany the Empress back to Mexico. Maximilian has also appointed a Minister to the Pope.

The correspondent says: "It is true that Max desires to leave, but the French authorities, acting on instructions from France, object."

The Flood at Indianapolis.—Of the destructive freshet at that place, the Indianapolis Journal remarks:

"Within the last twenty-four hours our city has been the scene of the greatest flood that ever visited this section since the sound of the first settler's ax rang through the forest where now the city stands. In the spring of 1858 occurred a freshet which carried away bridges and trestle work, and did considerable damage, but it was a slight rise compared with the deluge that now floods our streets and dwellings. The wretched little streamlet, which in dry weather furnishes hardly enough water to float a duck, has assumed the size and force of a river, leaving its proper bed to submerge all the contiguous streets, and inundate the surrounding country. The continuous rains for days past had swollen Pogues' Run nearly bank full, and the very heavy fall of water during Monday night and yesterday morning, completed the deluge."

☞ Rev. Mr. Meredith of Stafford county, Va. tells of a negro woman of that region leading her people in idol dances, and giving out herself as immortal. Rev. Dr. Marshall of Mississippi says hundreds of negroes in that state have adopted what they call the New Religion. They teach that God is dead, and that the Savior has been superseded by two old negro women, whom they worship in his stead.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.
To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 572. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. Campbell.

Bro. Grant:—Having a little leisure time this morning, I thought I would write you a few lines. My heart says bless the Lord for all his mercies to unworthy me, and to us as a people. Surely our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places, and we have a goodly heritage. I thought so when we were on old Wilbraham camp-ground, and heard the old trumpeters of Zion sounding out the alarm in his holy mountain. Dear brother, the influence that prevailed in that meeting, went out from it to the "regions beyond," as our dear brother Hastings says. It seemed to me to be the sweetest place this side the kingdom. Truly, it appears evident that the bride of Christ is making herself ready. Dear brother, I was rejoiced to see the lovely spirit that prevailed in the meeting. Although brethren differed on some non-essentials, yet they there determined to love each other for Christ's sake.

It is very evident "the end of all things is at hand." We must therefore be sober, and watch unto prayer. We are not our own, we are bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ. Therefore, as lively stones in his glorious building, let us labor for Christ, our living head. O let us be living members. Amen. To this end we must give ourselves much unto prayer. When I looked at the embassadors of Christ, I thought those dear tried saints were much in need of our prayers and support. I was much pleased to see so many of the last day laborers present. I mean the female ministry. As to the labors of those dear sisters, I am in full sympathy, for I have been an eye witness of the labor and zeal of some of them; especially, our much beloved sister in Christ and fellow laborer in the gospel of the kingdom, A. E. Smith. She is fearless, bold and truthful. Some may think our sister shuns to speak the whole truth, because she does not always come out with strong meat; but it must be born in mind that the field in which our beloved sister, and her co-laborer, Sister Boyd, and others, are called to labor, is different from other fields in which some of our dear brethren and sisters labor; but I assure you, brother, she keeps nothing back that is profitable to them. You would think so if you could hear some of them speak in her little missions in relation to the coming kingdom, and of their joy in the Lord since they heard from the lips of our sister, that the kingdom of God and the inheritance of the saints is to be on the new earth. Their faces are all radiant with heavenly light when she tells them it is very near, and may come while she is speaking.

Yesterday, we closed a Campmeeting of seven days at Nyack, twenty-five miles from New York. There were upon the ground Sisters Smith and Boyd, and four colored sisters; some from New York and some from Philadelphia, and one dear old saint who was a slave for many years. Her name is Howard. She is the sister we took up a special collection for in the large tent. She spoke in power several times during the meeting.

Our brethren in Cooper Institute, New York, are very strong in the immediate coming of the Lord. Our dear brother Chambers is sounding the alarm in the Catskill mountain, with great success. To God be all the glory. Yours in the hope of the gospel,

H. Campbell.

From Bro. H. K. Flagg.

Bro. Grant:—Next Monday morning, the Lord willing, I expect to start for St. Louis, Mo. I am fully satisfied that all the periods of the Bible, ending with the coming and kingdom of Christ, will end before, or with the autumn of '67; and what is done for the spread of these great truths must be done quickly. Millions in our own country have never heard these glorious truths preached. By the grace of God, I mean to devote what little time I have in preaching the gospel of the kingdom to the freedmen, and others of the south and south-west, before the end. My address will be at St. Louis, Mo.

I have received the following donations to aid me in my mission work, which I have not previously acknowledged. Remember me in your prayers, that I may be faithful in the work of giving light on the advent of Christ in his glorious kingdom, to reign on the new earth.

From Bro. G. W. Stetson.

Bro. Grant:—Inclosed I send you a model letter and a pattern spirit. I never received any thing in my life that did me more good. Why, I almost envied the writer his ability to confer so much good feeling in so small a compass, by exercising such a frank, generous, manly, and christian spirit. O, how like heaven earth would be if all its inmates, or inhabitants, would in all similar cases go and do likewise.

I have been corresponding with him over one and a half years, but do not personally know him, and never saw him.* My articles in the Crisis drew him out; he beginning the correspondence by inquiring for "further light." Being closely pressed in the argument, he became personal and somewhat abusive, to which I would not respond, but mildly rebuked him, and remonstrated against such a course, and the inclosed is the manly response:—

"Eld. G. W. Stetson:—Dear Bro.,—Your letter of Aug. 20th is at hand, and this is to inform you that I am sorry, very sorry, for the wrong done you by my last epistle, and humbly ask your forgiveness; though I think that I would not, and did not, knowingly and willfully perpetrate an insult, or purposely wound your feelings. I confess, however, that the 'square rule' is the 'best rule,' and freely take all back, confess my misdoing, and implore you to 'forgive and forget,' promising to try to do better in the future, and avoid such unpleasant things. If the above is not fair and christian, I desire to be told what is, as I wish to be on good terms with all my fellow creatures, of whom I am least and most unworthy.

I am nothing but a plow-boy of twenty years, always at home, and a backwood's home at that; looked down upon by everybody of any consequence, and the object of scorn and ridicule, on account of non-conformity in pomp and gaiety to the proud, selfish world. No friends, comparatively poor, quite obscure, and persistently humble, unworthy of any thing, I take up with all kinds of treatment, waiting patiently to see what the next world has for me. I know very well that I am a 'fool,' and that in more senses than one. Nay, I am willing to be accounted a fool by the giddy world around, if I can still obtain a knowledge, a divinely given knowledge, of the deep things of God. You know it is to 'babes' that the promise is made. Now, dear Bro., excuse all my foolishness and nonsense, and follow on in the pursuit of the mysteries of the gospel, with what light God shall in mercy give you. An apostle compares this life to childhood, the christian's youth,—we think as a child, understand as a child, but in eternity we shall know even as we are known. You and I shall meet there in a little while, my brother, and then our differences will forever cease. Farewell. God bless you.

Your unworthy ——."

Bro. David Briggs, Paoli, Wis., writes: "This is the first that I have felt to acknowledge any connection with the Advent people as a body; although I have believed and preached it for thirty-seven years, with the exception of a few years. I am poor in this world; yet rich in grace, and an heir of the kingdom, which God is preparing through his Son for them that love him. I run not as uncertainly; neither fight I as one that beateth the air; 'but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection'; lest after preaching to others, I myself should be cast away.' The Lord is as a wall of fire round about me, so that I shall not be moved.

I feel that my worldly business is closed up, and that I have only to do what God requires, and I am determined to be faithful in the discharge of my duty, until he shall send his Son from heaven to take possession of this earth, and set up his everlasting kingdom. I can say of a truth, it is my meat and my drink to do the will of my Heavenly Father.

I have no settled home, nor do I expect any till Jesus comes. I am a true friend and brother in Christ, and now I pray that we may all sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, and that our whole soul, body, and spirit, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen."

Bro. J. Naramore, Rochester, N. Y., writes:—"It is with much pleasure that I respond at once to your earnest solicitation for advance payment from all subscribers, and lovers of your very excellent and interesting paper. All should do it the more cheerfully in consideration of your untiring efforts and renewed exertions to make it more interesting every succeeding year. The Crisis to us is a very welcome visitor. May the good Lord put in the hearts of all who love his appearing to cheerfully respond to the call, and abundantly bless you in your unceasing efforts in spreading the glorious truths of the gospel, and the coming kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, wherein all the redeemed of Israel shall reign forever, and forevermore."

A Methodist brother writes:—"Your paper is 'a feast of fat things.' I regard it as a live christian periodical. And although I am a member of the M. E. church, yet I am one who is deeply interested in the immediate second coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and hence in all those truths relating thereto. O that we all may be fully prepared for the advent of that day—the great day of God Almighty."

Obituaries.

Burgess. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Mankato, Blue Earth Co., Minnesota, July 30th, 1866, after a distressing illness of two days, Emma G., daughter of Joshua and Sarah A. Burgess, formerly of Garden City, aged fifteen months and ten days.

Thus death has suddenly snatched a lovely flower from the fond embrace of loving parents, whose hearts seemed to be bound up in their little one; and as she was a very pretty and forward child, she was a playful pet of the household. But the parents being firm believers in the soon coming of the blessed Savior, expect to meet their little Emma clad in robes of beauty, with a body that disease cannot prey upon, and whose beauty never shall fade. We trust that this affliction will stimulate them to live in a constant preparation for the coming of the glorious Redeemer.

The funeral services were held in Garden City, and a sermon preached to a large and sympathizing audience, by Eld. M. Wellcome, from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Emma dear, sweet gentle Emma,
Must we part with thee so soon?
Many bitter tears are falling
As we lay thee in the tomb.

God who kindly gave thee to us
Bids us sink into his will;
Unto him we now resign thee,
Rest in Jesus; all is well.

Gently in the tomb we lay thee,
Ever trusting in his grace;
Soon again we hope to meet thee.
Soon we'll see thy smiling face.

S. C. Wellcome.

Wellcome. Died very suddenly, in Garden City, July 28th, 1866, Arthur M., son of Dr. J. W. Wellcome, aged fourteen years and three months.

Arthur was a noble boy, beloved by all who knew him. A short time before his death, he went into the river to bathe, and when he came home complained of a pain in his side, which did not leave him until his death. None thought him dangerously sick, and the day before his death he was able to be out of doors. His father was called to go some distance to see a patient, and did not return until next day, and what was his surprise to find his dear boy whom he fondly loved just expiring. He told him his situation, and falling upon his knees by his bedside, he recommended him to God. Little Arthur uniting his prayers with his father, received God's blessing, and his last words were, as he lifted his hands towards heaven, and looked up with his large, expressive eyes, "O Lord Jesus, I give my heart, my whole heart to thee;" and sank sweetly to rest.

Sleep on, dear Arthur; we shall meet again in the morning, when the saints shall all be gathered home.

Very much do we miss this dear boy, and the affliction seems great. Yet we have already seen the hand of Providence manifested in his death. His last words were the means of bringing two of his young friends to Christ, who have found peace, and there is quite a prospect of a revival among the youth of this place. Truly,

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

I. C. Wellcome.

Foster. Died in Madison, Ct., Aug. 6th, 1866, Sister Rena E. Foster, aged twenty-four years.

Meetings were first held by the writer at Madison in Sept. 1865, when our sister was the first to request prayers, followed by revival, including her father, mother, sisters and brother, who gladly received the blessed hope of the soon coming of Jesus, and the resurrection of the dead.

Sister Rena bore a Christian character and contended earnestly for the faith of the gospel. She received much opposition from her associates, but was never ashamed to let them know that she loved the blessed hope. She was prompt to attend the prayer meeting, and ready to give in her testimony for Christ. She is missed by parents, sisters and a brother, but they all rejoice in the hope of meeting her in the morning, where these scenes of mourning will be forever fled away. We shall hear her voice no more on the shores of time, singing songs of praise as she was wont to do, but when the Life-giver returns to earth again to give life to the dear sleeping saints, we trust she will be among the number that will sing praises to God and the Lamb forever.

C. D. Woodruff.

Perry. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Litchfield, Me., Sept. 5th, 1866, Bro. William Perry, aged seventy-one years, ten months.

Long had Bro. P. been a follower of Jesus, and the blessed hope of soon seeing him sustained him in his trials and infirmities. He was among the first in Maine to embrace the faith of the Savior's coming in 1843. Though disappointed like many others, in not seeing Jesus then, he still waited and longed for the coming of the day of glory. During his sickness I called to see him, and found that though life was fast ebbing out, he was rejoicing in the "blessed hope." He rests in hope. Peace to his sleeping dust, till the morn of glory dawns, when in the Savior's own image Bro. William will arise.

A large circle of relatives mourn his loss. May the grace of God sustain them all, especially the heart-stricken widow and children.

R. R. York.

Bryant. Died in Livermore, Aug. 19th, 1866, B. F., son of Lee and Eunice Bryant, aged fourteen years, five months, and eight days.

Our brother and sister deeply feel the loss of their only child, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope, for he left good evidence that he died in the Lord, and now sleeps in Jesus, to awake in the resurrection morning to life and immortality. May God's grace sustain them in this time of affliction.

"Our breath is but fleeting, our days are but few,
In the sadness of parting we bid friends adieu,
We watch them while yielding their last feeble breath,
And follow them slowly to the valley of death.
From there, as we leave them, we look to the morn
When the glory of God the new earth shall adorn,
Where no graveyard or death will again meet our view,
Oh, may we all meet when the earth is made new."

E. M. Haggett.

Chamberlain. Died in North Woodstock, Me., June 6th, 1866, Mrs. Desire, wife of Bro. William Chamberlain, aged sixty-one years.

In former years she was connected with the Methodist church, but during the last years of her life seemed to stand alone religiously, not expressing any sympathy with her husband or any body of believers. I know not in what state of mind she died.

In this bereavement our brother is left to share the sympathies of all who have seen like affliction and to receive comfort, we trust, from that ever living friend, who hath said, "I will not leave you comfortless."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Paris, Sept. 18. The belief is general that Napoleon himself is the author of the note recently made public, and that his sincere desire is for a permanent peace.

Trieste, 19th. A great battle has been fought on the island of Candia, between the Turks and insurrectionists. The Turks were the Victors.

Florence, 19th. The works in connection with the Italian navy at Spezzia are being pushed forward with rapidity.

Berlin, 19th. The abdication of Ludwig, King of Bavaria, is now regarded certain.

Berlin, 20th. Count Bismarck has been taken very ill, though not so much as to excite serious apprehensions.

The King of Prussia has written an address to the people thanking them for their part borne in the war, and congratulating them on victory and peace.

Paris, 20. The Finance Committee sent here from Mexico to negotiate for a loan are disheartened and have announced the Empire of Mexico without funds.

Florence, 20. A very serious outbreak of the brigands has occurred near Palermo. The telegraph wires have been cut in all directions; but as the national troops hold all the principal places throughout, the rebellion will be of short duration.

Letters from the continent speak in rather discouraging tones of the health of the Emperor Napoleon.

From India we learn that great suffering continued in the famine-stricken districts of Bengal, and the people were flocking to Calcutta for relief.

The Paris Siecle announces the immediate evacuation of Rome by the French troops, and states that their place will be taken by the Roman legion.

Cable Dispatches.

Paris, Sept. 32. It is said the Empress Eugenie will shortly repair to Rome to condole with the Pope.

Terrible Famine in India—Advices from Calcutta give heart-rending accounts of the famine in the provinces of Orissa and Midnapore. No less than 75,000 persons are daily fed by public charity, and it is estimated that an equal number are supplied privately, chiefly by the Hindoos. The number of deaths from starvation averages 2500 per week, and one week reached 3500! Besides these, many die in the interior whose cases are not reported. Accounts appear daily in the papers, reported by eye-witnesses, of the jackals eating the corpse of one wretch while they wait for his companion who is dying, or of the child taken from the breast of its mother, who has been dead two days. What is worse, the sufferings of the people have been aggravated by the outrageous if not criminal mismanagement of the English officials, who discouraged the efforts of private charity and refused to exert themselves to relieve the famine before it became so wide-spread and alarming. The famine began in October last, from the failure of the rice crop, and even now the efforts of the authorities are inadequate to meet the emergency, and the poor Hindoos are perishing by the thousand.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Sept. 18. Special dispatches from Canada state that the military preparations are increasing. Five new companies have been organized and an ample factory is about being constructed by the government. D'Arcy McGee is becoming very unpopular on account of his temporizing policy. The propeller Congress, of Detroit, seized some time ago, has been released.

New York, Sept. 23. Vera Cruz correspondence, under date of Sept. 11th, states that there were no indications of the withdrawal of the French troops. The 81st French regiment was expected to leave for France on the 10th, but only one battalion had come down from the capital, and the remainder—from 1500 to 2000 men—were ready to take up the flag of the Empire instead of that of France, as soon as the battalion left Mexico. French money was being expended in large amounts to increase the strength of the Imperial army.

The Revista of Vera Cruz says France permits the enlistment of volunteers, and will give to the Imperial Government arms and munitions of war. The Estafeta says Gen. Uraga proceeds to Europe on a mission, and will then accompany the Empress back to Mexico. Maximilian has also appointed a Minister to the Pope.

The correspondent says: "It is true that Max desires to leave, but the French authorities, acting on instructions from France, object."

The Flood at Indianapolis.—Of the destructive freshet at that place, the Indianapolis Journal remarks:

"Within the last twenty-four hours our city has been the scene of the greatest flood that ever visited this section since the sound of the first settler's ax rang through the forest where now the city stands. In the spring of 1858 occurred a freshet which carried away bridges and trestle work, and did considerable damage, but it was a slight rise compared with the deluge that now floods our streets and dwellings. The wretched little streamlet, which in dry weather furnishes hardly enough water to float a duck, has assumed the size and force of a river, leaving its proper bed to submerge all the contiguous streets, and inundate the surrounding country. The continuous rains for days past had swollen Pogues' Run nearly bank full, and the very heavy fall of water during Monday night and yesterday morning, completed the deluge."

☞ Rev. Mr. Meredith of Stafford county, Va. tells of a negro woman of that region leading her people in idol dances, and giving out herself as immortal. Rev. Dr. Marshall of Mississippi says hundreds of negroes in that state have adopted what they call the New Religion. They teach that God is dead, and that the Savior has been superseded by two old negro women, whom they worship in his stead.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 573. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

LIFE'S TEMPESTS.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

We steer our shattered barks across
Life's dim and troubled sea;
And while becalmed or tempest-tost,
Are drifting towards the lee.

Our anxious eyes look up and on,
Along the billowy gloom;
And court the favoring breeze, that won,
Shall waft our vessel home.

We dream not that the winds that roar,
And dash along our bark,
Still bear us onward towards the shore,
Though all is wild and dark.

But when our ship has reached again
Calm seas and brighter skies,
We find we're further o'er the main,—
Nearer the port we prize.

Still further onward towards the land,
Where storms shall vex no more;
That home by Eden zephyrs fanned,
Where all our toil is o'er.

Then let the tempest howl in might,
Till all is seeming lost;
The golden hills are just in sight
That skirt the shining coast.

Our feet shall press their evergreen,
Where endless calm abides;
Where storm-swept skies no more are seen,
Where death no more divides.

FAMILY CONVERSATION;

OR,

TITTLE TATTLE AND THE TITTLE TATTLERS.

Tittle tattle is the height of their ambition. They have no relish for the solid, the pure, the virtuous, the light of life, the word of God, the power of gospel purity and love. The committing of practical portions of the holy Scripture to memory, and conversing upon them at table, in the social circle, by the wayside, finds no place in their hearts. They turn away from this bread of heaven, the food of angels, with apparent disgust. "Away with sombre looks, away; give us the jovial, the small talk, the tittle-tattle, something to excite laughter, like 'the crackling of thorns under a pot.'" Of all the expedients to make the heart lean, and sear the conscience, cause the Holy Spirit to take his flight, the most successful is the little talk and the tittle-tattle which, in some charmed circles, is courteously styled conversation. How human beings can live on such meagre fare; how continue such a famine of topics, and on such a short allowance of sense, is a great question, if philosophy could only search it out. All we know is, that such men and women there are, who will go on dwindling in this way from fifteen to fourscore, and never a hint on their their tombstones, that they died at last of consumption of the head, and marasmus of the heart; the whole universe of God, spreading out its splendors and terrors, pleading for their attention, and they wonder "where Mrs. Somebody got that divine ribbon to her bonnet;" the whole world of literature, through its thousand trumps of fame, adjuring them to regard its garnered stores of emotion and thought, and they think, "Its high time, if John intends to marry Sarah, for him to pop the question."

Formalists and backsliding professors take no special interest in the high and holy exercise of communing with God in the closet, and through the medium of the blessed Bible, the law and the testimony. David was of a different opinion. His whole soul was in it, on fire. He meditated upon God's word day and night. The midnight hour found him frequently at this blessed work of searching the Scriptures, and giving thanks to the Giver of all his mercies.

What a fearful, lamentable state must professed disciples of the Lord Jesus be in, who have no soul kindlings when God's truth is introduced, and made the subject of conversation. What kind of heaven are they looking for, or expecting? The Mohammedan's? What renders the state of these tittle tattlers fearful in the extreme is, they seem to flatter themselves they are on the way to heaven, when in fact they are on the way to hell-fires unquenchable. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

It is truly painful and deeply humbling, to observe the character of intercourse which prevails now-a-days among those whose professed principles would lead us to look for very different practical results. While marking the intercourse, and hearkening to the conversation which frequently obtains among professing christians of the present day, one feels disposed to ask, Is it possible that the people really believe what they profess? Do they believe that they are dead and risen with Christ, that their calling is a heavenly one, that they are part of Christ's body, that they are crucified with Christ, that they are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, that they are strangers and pilgrims, that they are waiting for God's Son from heaven? It may be that all these weighty principles are items in the creed to which they have given a nominal assent; but it is morally impossible that their hearts can be affected by them. How could a heart, really under the power of such stupendous truths, take pleasure, or even take part in vain, frivolous, empty talk,—talk about people and their circumstances, with whom, and with which, they have nothing whatever to do; talk about every passing trifle of the day? Could a heart full of Christ be thus occupied? It is as impossible as that noon could intermingle with midnight. Yet, professing Christians, when they meet in the drawing-room, at the dinner-table, and at tea-parties, are, alas! too often thus occupied.

Look at the Master, our great exemplar, how did he carry himself toward the men of this world? Did he ever find an object in common with them? Never. He was always feeding upon and filled with one object, and of that object he spoke. He ever sought to lead the thoughts of men to God. This, beloved reader, should be our object. Whenever or wherever we meet men, we should lead them to think of Christ; and if we do not find an open door for that, we should not certainly suffer ourselves to be carried into the current of their thoughts. If we have business to transact with men, we must transact it; but we should not have any fellowship with them in their habits of thought or conversation; because our Master never had; if we diverge from his path as to this, we shall soon sink into a low, unsanctified tone of spirit. We shall be as salt that has lost its saltness, and thus be "good for nothing."

We cannot doubt that much of that lack of deep, settled, habitual peace, of which so many complain, is very justly traceable to the light and trifling habits of conversation in which they indulge; to the reading of newspapers and other light works. Such things must grieve the Holy Spirit; and if the Holy Spirit is grieved, Christ cannot be enjoyed; for it is the Spirit alone who, by the written word, ministers Christ to the soul. If our souls are in a healthy state, spiritually alive in God, we shall delight to converse about things heavenly, all is natural and easy, "for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." It is said of a certain little insect, that it always exhibits the color of the leaf on which it feeds. So is it exactly with the christian. It is very easy to tell what he is feeding upon.

But it may be said by some, that "we cannot always be talking about Christ." We reply that just in proportion as we are led by an ungrieved Spirit, will all our thoughts and words be occupied about Christ. We, if we are children of God, will be occupied with him throughout eternity, and why not now? We are as really separated from the world now, as we shall be then; but we do not realize it because we do not walk in the Spirit.

Reader, live in the sight of God. This is what heaven will be—the eternal presence of God. Do nothing you would not like God to see. Say nothing you would not like him to hear. Write nothing you would not like him to read. Go to no place where you would not like God to find you. Read no books of which you would not like God to say, "Show it me." Never spend your time in a way you would not like God to say, "What art thou doing?"

"Whatever dims thy sense of truth,
Or stains thy purity,
Though slight as breath of summer air,
Count it as sin to thee."

A SHORT SERMON.

"Knock, and it shall be opened unto you."—LUKE 11: 9.

Dear brethren and sisters:—It is of the greatest importance that we seek the Lord with all our hearts. It becomes us to visit the closet often, and when we do it, we must not be satisfied with a mere form of words; but we must talk to the Lord from our very hearts, as the Savior says in our text, "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." I would in kindness say to you, dear Brn. and sisters, that we need no proof to show that the dear Savior meant to give us some very important instruction with regard to our devotion, when we approach the throne of grace in prayer. It will be of no use for us to go through with a dead form of prayer, when we attempt to make known our wants to the great Giver of every good and perfect gift; but, like Jacob of old, we must wrestle with God by faith, and plead his promises through Christ our advocate with the Father; and if we pray in faith, and in humble submission to his will, we are just as sure of this blessing as we are that he exists. Let us often repeat the following verse, with as earnest desire as though we were on our knees in prayer:

"O for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heavenly frame,
A light to shine upon the road
That leads me to the Lamb."

Let us examine ourselves, and see if we be in the faith once delivered to the saints; see if we have the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, given unto us. If we have a full supply of that holy love drawn from the great Fountain of love, we shall be well prepared to work for God.

There is another christian grace I would like to mention; it is that wisdom which comes from above, which is "pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated; full of mercy and good fruits." When all are in possession of these two noble christian graces—love and wisdom, there will be peace and harmony in all our labors.

But where, and when, shall we knock in order that we may draw a full supply of these graces? We answer first, we must knock at the door of mercy through Christ, who says, "I am the door"; and we must do it with an humble, contrite spirit, and with an earnest and sincere heart; and then the promise of God is, he "that asketh receiveth; . . . and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." We are also informed by St. James, he that lacketh "wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him"; but he must "ask in faith, nothing wavering." So you see, dear brethren, we must be firm and unshaken in our faith, when we go to the great Fountain for these christian graces, that we so much need to fit us to work for God.

But when shall we knock by prayer and supplication to God? "Evening and morning and noon," says David. "Pray without ceasing," says Paul; and says our Lord, "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint." The good old prophet Daniel prayed three times a day, with his windows open.

And now, my dear brethren and sisters, hear the advice of a poor unworthy pilgrim: let us be in earnest in seeking the Lord with all our hearts, and he will help us. The Lord is soon coming to call us to an account for our stewardship; and I am sure if we do our duty, and perform well our part, God will do the rest, and all will be well. May the good Lord bless us, and save us in his coming kingdom. Amen.

DO THE SAINTS MAKE INTERCESSION?

Do the saints make intercession? What a question is this to ask in this our so called age of progress and enlightenment! What a question to ask a Protestant, one delivered from the bondage and superstition of the Romish church! and yet some of our expositors tell us that the souls of the martyred saints, represented in the fifth of Revelations, are making intercession, and praying God to avenge their blood. Says a recent writer, "Though removed from this scene of woe and misery, safe from all the attempts of the wicked, and in the enjoyment of God's presence, their happiness is not yet complete, and they still find subject matter for prayer and supplication." O why not let us accept the whole Romish dogma at once. Surely they cannot be so selfish as to pray for themselves alone, but will intercede for us; and we can appeal to some patron saint, or to the Holy Mother, whose tenderness of heart may be more easily touched, and sympathy excited, and so through her, or their intercession, our prayers be heard and wants supplied.

But what says the Bible, the only sure guide, and the only safe chart we have to follow? It says first, that men on the earth can make intercession. See Jer. 7: 16; 27: 18; Rom. 11: 2; 1 Tim. 2: 1. Second, "the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered."—Rom. 8: 26, 27.

Third, that Christ maketh intercession for us. Isa. 53: 12, also in Romans. "Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather, that is risen again, who is ever at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."—Rom. 8: 34. Again, "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."—Heb. 7: 25. "And he saw there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor; therefore his own arm brought salvation unto him, and his righteousness it sustained him."—Isa. 59: 16.

These three classes comprise all capable of making intercession for us. If there is another, I think it is yet to be found, and it ought surely to suffice us to know that we have "an high priest which . . . was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."—Heb. 4: 15, 16. O. KENDALL.

REPORT OF PROGRESS.

Saturday, Aug. 11th, we went to Chestnut Hill, Ct., where we met Bro. Corey, with whom we took sweet counsel. He is laboring during the week in a cotton mill, as overseer in the mule room, and on the Lord's day he goes out into the regions round about, and preaches the word—"the gospel of the kingdom"—to people who would otherwise be destitute of preaching. It seems to be in God's order that some who labor physically should preach, thus reaching the people in the surrounding country. But there are some who are cramped and embarrassed, because they have felt it duty to go out and preach, and have been obliged to give up the work, and go to some place and engage in manual labor, still feeling the "wo." Sometimes we find two or three together, under such circumstances, and still places about needing preaching and having none. There should be more attention given to this point, so that these brethren could be free from the trying circumstances that surround them, and go out as God calls them.

Every faithful laborer that can be obtained should be put into the field, and kept there. The church's great work now is to give the last part of the warning, and all her energies should be bent in that direction. No standing "with rusted blade," no neglecting to bind up the sheaves, but working with all their might while the day lasts.

Saturday evening, we preached in the hall under the Baptist church, the rent of which is freely given by the individuals who own the building. It will hold as large a number as most of the places our brethren occupy; and when meetings are held there, and due notice given, the people fill the place. There is considerable interest among those who do not profess to love the Lord, in the Second Advent truth; and through Bro. Corey's labors, and the prayer meetings, several have recently been converted and baptized.

Lord's day morning, Bro. Corey took us to the Advent Tabernacle, in Foster, where we spent the day. We found an interesting Sabbath school there, which holds its sessions in the A. M. It is under the superintendence of Sister Sweet, who gives good evidence that the sisters are as competent as the brethren to direct our Sabbath schools; and why not, as well as the day schools? Their influence in the day schools is acknowledged to be of a higher order, and more salutary on the minds of the scholars. Why not let them occupy their place, as duty requires, in the Sabbath schools? They can do it without usurping any authority over their liege-lord, man. We had a good time preaching in the P. M., and then went to Hopkins' Mills, some two miles from the chapel.

We love to go through the country at this season, when Nature is dressed in her rich robes, when we can catch the refreshing breezes from the hill-tops, and from the top of some eminence view the landscape o'er, noticing hill and dell, lake and streamlet, forest and farm, with the attractive homes that the thrifty farmers have reared for themselves. But we feel, when thus engaged, a sighing spirit, when we think that this beautiful earth has been blighted by the frosty breath of sin, and that the dark shadow of evil is resting upon it, despoiling its beauty. Thank God, the curse is soon to be removed, and "Eden bloom o'er nature's tomb."

We were talking with a good Methodist sister the other day, something as follows:—(We had formerly belonged to the same church with her.) We told the sister what our present views were, and she asked,

"What is there specially new to lead people to embrace the Advent doctrine now? Any more setting time?"

We said, "The signs of the times are of special interest, and some think the Lord will come in 1868; and I hope he will."

Sister. "I don't."

"Why not? don't you want to see him?" No answer to this question, but she said,

"I want this beautiful earth to last longer."

We said, "It will continue longer. Restored to its Eden beauty, it will endure forever, more beautiful than now."

"Thank God the beautiful will live
When Eden is restored,
Earth, filled with trees and flowers, shall be
The garden of the Lord."

The meeting at Hopkins' Mills was particularly interesting to us. Here wife, for the first time, ventured to speak in the name of the Lord. She had been for some time, without our knowledge, struggling with conviction, and trying to excuse herself from taking up the cross. She reasoned—"I cannot say anything if I try. I have tried to speak in social meetings, but never could say anything. I should believe God wanted me to do this, but I am so small, so weak, how can I go forward?" So she said to us at last, and she stayed for light. She wept and trembled, hesitating and fearing; unable to sleep in the darkness of the night, when so burdened with the feeling of the heaviness of the cross, that it seemed too heavy to bear. Subjects were continually presenting themselves to her mind, till at last, we told her it seemed as though she must go forward or she would backslide. At last she yielded her consent, still distrusting herself and saying, "I cannot do anything unless God helps me."

The cross was heavy indeed. Her retiring nature shrunk from the publicity of the position; but she must go, and so she went before the people that evening, in the name of the Lord, and God did help her, and for half an hour (when before she had never spoken more than two or three minutes at a time) God gave her liberty in talking to those out of Christ, and the power of God was with the word. There were but few dry eyes in the house. Wild young men listened with almost breathless attention, and there was weeping there; but oh! how strong is Satan's power. None were ready to acknowledge their want of religion, though they gathered around us at the close of the meeting, and expressed sympathy and good wishes for our prosperity and success in the work.

Duty being done, the trembling speaker felt the burden gone, and a sweet peace in its place. It was the first time that she had felt that she must move at a particular meeting, and she was blessed, though still feeling that to enjoy the favor of God, she must go forward in this way as the door opens. We mention this more particularly for the encouragement of those of her sex who are trembling under the cross, that they may see what is the experience of others under like circumstances, and go forward in the name of the Lord as the way opens. The Spirit is as really poured out on God's handmaids as on his servants, according to his word; and let no one, specially the preaching brethren, put a stumbling-block or a straw in their way, however weak they may be. Let God choose the mouths through which he will speak, touch the lips with the live coal from off the altar, infuse his great strength into the weak ones, and throw his strong, loving arms around them; and let the church hold up their hands by prayer and every favorable influence.

Monday P. M. We returned to Danielsonville by stage, where we met Bro. H. K. Flagg, fresh from his mission-field among the freedmen. We found him deeply interested in them, and determined to live among them and labor for them till Jesus comes. God bless him in his work, for God has "put no difference between us and them," having made of one blood every nation under heaven; so that he that feareth God "and worketh righteousness is accepted of him." Bro. Flagg gave us an interesting lecture relating to his labors among the colored people, and their interest in hearing the truth. Surely Ethiopia is stretching out her hands to God, in the sense that the colored people are believing the truth. God bless them.

Tuesday morning, we left Danielsonville for Abington, Ct. We found we must travel some three miles by cars, and six by private conveyance. The brethren at Abington, not knowing just when we should come, could not meet us, and we were some five hours too early for the mail coach to take us. The cost of a ride otherwise would be two dollars, and pilgrims are not too well supplied with money; so wife and self concluded to leave our baggage to be brought by the coach, and save expense by walking. We started as pilgrims on the world's highway, singing as we went—

"Whither goest thou, pilgrim stranger,
Wandering through this gloomy vale;
Knowest thou not 'tis full of danger,
And will not thy courage fail?"

We arrived at length at Bro. John Brackett's, where we found a real home, and enjoyed a good rest for our weary pilgrim feet, having saved one dollar and sixty cents by walking. Quite an item for us. Some of nature's loveliest scenes are here. Here is the old mill where the people come with their grain, to get it ground for family use. Here is the pond and the stream enshrined by the grand old trees, beneath whose dark, shady arches it flows. Here is the bridge and the rock, the noise of the wheel and of the falling water.

We rested awhile, and then went out and enjoyed the luxury of a look at the beautiful scenery, so much superior to any work of art; for art's best work is when it most closely imitates nature. That is the perfection of art. O how we long to see the Savior, be made immortal, and enjoy the blessed privilege of a home on the new earth, where the saints, clothed in white, in immortal beauty will shine, and the glory of the Lamb will be their light; where "sweet fields stand dressed in living green;" and where the pure, sparkling, flowing river will be shadowed by the prolific fruit-bearing tree of life, whose leaves will be so fragrant and healthful. Blessed be the Lord for the prospect.

We passed the night with Bro. Baxter, and made our way to Bro. Ingalls, where we found a cheerful welcome and a pleasant home, surrounded by the stately old elms, whose drooping branches, festooned with shining foliage, seem to woo to their cool shade, and offer a loving protection from the sun's warm rays. We spent the Lord's day, Aug. 19th, with the people here, feeling free in preaching the truth, and encouraged by the interest felt by the congregation. My wife spoke here again, and had additional evidence that this is the path of duty, and that God owns the word.

MY FUNERALS IN 1866.

It is part of the minister's duty "to weep with those who weep, and mourn with those who mourn." When death enters the household, nothing is more natural for the christian than to look beyond this sorrowful world for solace. Often, too, the poor, careless, sinful man and woman, when looking into the pale face of the dear departed, instinctively turn heavenward for the consolation that earth cannot give. The minister of Christ is then appealed to for sympathy, and the gospel message is often welcomed where, under other circumstances, its precious promises are wholly disregarded. Knowing these things, I sometimes think, at the year's commencement, into what bereaved households shall I be called this year? Who of my circle of hearers will enter the abodes of "dust and decay" ere its close?

My first funeral was that of a young sister in Christ, whose life was passed in the obscurity of an humble western hut. Her associations had been with a little band of lowly pilgrims, who in rustic simplicity and trusting faith, were endeavoring to follow the directions of that one Book, which makes its learners "wise unto salvation." Her term of service closed one day while the white mantle of winter covered the earth. We assembled at the rude log meeting-house, and made "the life which is in Christ Jesus" our theme; then went to the "place of graves," and left our sister in one of "the chambers of peace," till the bright morning of the "day of God" dawns upon "the night of the grave."

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep."

A few miles distant from my home lived a lovely little orphan. Both parents had gone that journey "from whose bourne no traveler returns." In uncomplaining meekness the little one did what little hands could do for for those who cared for him in his loneliness. We have seen the pet lamb of the flock leave its playful fellows to droop and die under the shade of a friendly shrub. So the orphaned one felt the destroying hand's arrest; and when the Spring was robed in bloom and beauty, a little sufferer went to sleep till Jesus comes. We met and dwelt on the "gospel hope," after which the lamb-like child was laid away till the vivifying voice of the Good Shepherd shall call his flock together.

The rose-bud is beautiful as it rests upon the parent stem, by the side of the unfolded glories of the queen of flowers. Mothers sometimes look upon folded buds of finer make. One of these was growing in the flower-bed of a friendly family. A tomb-chill swept across the branch, and the tiny thing never blossomed. We gathered around the small coffin of the "infant of days," to contemplate a life that "dureth with duration," and to dwell on the benedictions of One whose soft, loving hands rested on the unsinning heads of innocency, and said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Then, in a little room of the "house prepared for all living," we left the blighted bud, till the time comes for such to bloom "in the paradise of God."

Sixty years ago the great valley of the Mississippi contained only some sparse settlements. The Indian encamped under the shade of primeval forests, where great cities now stand. The "blazed trees" marked the route from one thin neighborhood to another.—Sometimes the pocket compass pointed the way through trackless wilds; and sometimes the "Indian trail" led from point to point. Redemption's story was precious to many of these voluntary exiles—

"From the homes and delicate delights
Of ripe society."

The long-separated visits of the minister of Christ were feasts to hungry souls. A young man came with his parents for a home in this great woodland. Many by taking up favorable locations became immensely wealthy.—Christ called this young man to labor for him, and sent him a missionary through the "bridle paths" and "trails" of one of the mightiest forests on earth. Through the sun and the storm, by night and by day, he went forth to proclaim "the unsearchable riches of Christ." Cities sprang up, and cultivated farms waved with golden harvests where the wild-wood had been cleared away; but still he worked for God. At last, when the winters of fourscore years had bleached his locks, without chilling the ardor of divine love in his heart, the Master said, "'Tis enough,"—and rest came to the weary at last. Then we gathered as at the funeral of a father, and sorrowed, but not as those that sorrow without hope. We spoke of Jesus' coming, and of the surprising change from "weakness to power"—from "deformity to glory"—from "corruption to incorruption"—from "natural to spiritual"—and from "mortal to immortal," that shall then take place. We then placed him by his buried kindred, to repose

"Till the heavens be no more."

Then to awake—

"And forever be with the Lord."

Sometimes death slowly consumes the support of the candle of existence, till the flickering flame goes out; sometimes a tempest-blast extinguishes the brightest light at once. With an amiable young man of my acquaintance, it was only a second—

"From the blossom of health to the paleness of death."

A frightful accident stopped the wheels of life in an instant. A widowed mother fainted in agony; strong, manly brothers sunk under the weight of wo; and sisters stood monuments of tears. We met and warned against trusting the syren voice of to-morrow—then took our sorrowing way—

"To lay him down
With patriarchs of the infant world—with kings,
The powerful of the earth—the wise, the good—
Fair forms and hoary seers of ages past,
All in one mighty sepulchre."

Tempe's historic vale was lovely, but death reigned there. Eden was more lovely, but sin and death found entrance there. But when the serene skies of the new heavens, with their lights of sevenfold splendor, shall overarch the new earth's paradises of surpassing beauty and loveliness, there will be no more death. From Jordan's strand we look over into Immanuel's land, and sigh for the deathless shore. Religion, thou art beautiful. Blessed Jesus, thou art altogether lovely. Heavenly Father, thou art good. O guide us by thy counsel, and afterward bring us to glory. ELD. S. A. CHAPLIN.

"I WILL COME AGAIN."

O what a blessed, cheering promise is this to the lovers of Jesus, who are anxiously looking for his return to earth. When he departed from his disciples, and the clouds received him out of their sight, they gazed steadfastly into heaven, and doubtless they were anxious to accompany him; but they were not left comfortless. Angel messengers were dispatched with these consoling words,—"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 11.

They also remembered his own words to them,—"If I go away I will come again." And when about to leave them, it was his dying wish—a wondrous cordial—in his prayer, that those "whom thou hast given me be with me where I am." They believed his promise sure, and continued looking for his return till they fell asleep in death; and then looking forward with triumphant hope to the dawning of the resurrection morn, when they will come forth to meet him in the clouds of heaven.

Six thousand years has earth rolled on, getting hoary with age, and wrinkled with sin and sorrow. Now the waiting church see the lon-drawn shadows of twilight announcing the Lord is at hand. There are voices on every side proclaiming, "he cometh, he cometh to judge the earth." O what a joyous thought to the waiting ones, who stand often on the watch-tower, to catch the first streak of that brightness, the first murmur of those chariot wheels.

Hail, happy day, when our adorable Redeemer, who at his first advent was so dishonored and despised, shall be enthroned in the presence of an assembled universe, and crowned "Lord of all." Then, and not till then, will his promise be fulfilled, "Where I am, there shall ye be also." Yes, his saints will share his immediate presence. Happy reunion. It will be the meeting of the whole ransomed family,—the head with members, the vine with all its branches, the shepherd with all his flock, the elder brother with all his kinsmen. There will be the joy, too, of mutual recognition among the death-divided; ties snapped asunder on earth indissolubly renewed; severed friendships re-united; the triumph of love complete. Love binding brother with brother, and friend with friend, and all to the elder brother. Truly, Jesus hath loved us with an everlasting love. Soon will the bridal hour arrive, when the bride shall have "made herself ready." And if we are found having on our wedding garments, we may be joyful participants at the marriage supper of the Lamb. The Bridegroom tarrieth, but we must not slumber nor sleep.

WASHING FLUID.

Washing made easy by the use of this fluid, which every one can make, at the trifling cost of twelve cents a gallon.

Take one and a half pounds each of lime and soda-ash; boil fifteen minutes in twelve quarts of water (soft or hard); after which let it cool. Then dip off the clear liquid in a jar, or jug, when it is ready for use. Do not use your tin boiler to make this preparation in, but use a brass or iron kettle.

Directions for Use.—Put on your boiler, with thirty quarts of water (soft or hard), more or less, and let it boil. Then add one pint of the fluid, with half a tea-cup of soft soap, or that amount of hard; and immediately put it your white clothes, letting them boil ten minutes. Now don't be afraid, for you will be astonished to see the dirt boil out. After boiling ten minutes, take out the clothes, rub the dirtiest spots a little, suds and rinse, and they will look much whiter than by the ordinary way of washing, and without the least injury whatever.

COLD (?) WATER CURE.

Can it be possible this is you, George! Why I never expected to see you again alive, when you left us for that Cold Water Cure. But really you don't look much like dying now, I am sure, with your plump, rosy cheeks, and firm, upright form. I never believed much in cold water cure, but something has saved your life, that is a sure case. Didn't you take any medicines?

No, I can assure you, Aunt Katie, that the last dose of medicine I ever took was the dish of boneset tea you made for me the last time I was here, and I should beg to be excused from taking even that now, for I have learned a better way to live.

Well, George, do tell me about it, for we are never too old to learn, you know; and though I shall not promise to practice, or even to believe all you may say, yet I will listen to your views on the subject, for I like to keep pace with the world, and these cold water people are becoming quite numerous, and somewhat popular, and I think it is high time I knew something more of them; and I know of no one who is better prepared than you, after your recent sojourn among them, to tell me something of their principles and practices.

I will most willingly tell you anything I have learned, but first let me correct you a little in your use of the term Water Cure. It is by no means a cold Water Cure, as you, and most other people, who have read or know little of the system are sure to think it it is. Very little cold water is used. The baths are mostly tepid, sometimes warm, seldom cold.

Well, that makes a difference. I supposed you all had to jump out of bed into a great tub of cold water every morning.

Oh! no, indeed, our treatment is quite different from that, and much more agreeable, as well as beneficial. Only the stronger ones take baths in the morning, the others sometimes have a "dry rub" and a walk before breakfast, and then at ten or eleven o'clock they take a tepid bath, each according to their own prescription previously given by one of the physicians of the Cure; and of the dozen or more who may be in the bath-room at once, each may have a different bath, and one just suited to his or her particular case. So you see Water Cure means something more than jumping into a tub of cold water—more, even, than using water in any form. It means the proper use of light, air, exercise, clothing, food, etc., etc.

Oh! yes. I did hear they kept you on bran bread. Do tell me if it is true?

I do not look as though it was very hard fare, do I, if it is true?

Why, no, I don't think you do, for you look so much better than you did when you went away, that I can hardly keep my eyes off you. But, do tell me what you had to eat.

Well, we did have "bran bread," and a plenty of it too, and a nicer, sweeter bread you never ate. It was not exactly bran bread either, though it was as near it as unbolted wheat flour can be, and simply mixed with water and baked in little cakes or crackers, in a very hot oven.

What! was there not yeast or salt in it?

Not a particle of either—simply water and flour.

But I shouldn't think such heavy stuff would be wholesome.

It was not heavy in the least, but, on the contrary, was as full of little holes as a sponge, and so sweet you would scarcely believe there was no sugar in it. Sometimes it was made hard and rolled out into cakes or biscuits, sometimes made into small loaves; these, by the way, need a brick oven to bake them in, and the others are much better baked in one. But the favorite way with most was to stir the batter as thick as for griddle cakes and drop it into little round tins, thus making little cakes which, when baked to a nice brown, make the most delicious bread I ever ate, and so soft that any old person or child can eat them. That has been one objection which many have made to our bread, it was so hard no one could eat it if they had poor teeth.

I am sure that is very simple, and shall surely try it. James is going to mill this morning and I will have him get some wheat ground. There is nothing like "striking while the iron is hot," so I will try this while you are here and can show me how. But this is not all you had to eat?

By no means! We had nice pies and puddings, and excellent fruit and vegetables; in short everything that is really good to eat, rejecting only such things as tend, either directly or indirectly, to promote disease or minister to a depraved appetite.

Well, tell me about the pudding, now that I have commenced I may as well learn all about it, and then if I like it I can practice; if not, it will do no harm to know how to make these things.

A very wholesome pudding is made by stirring flour into boiling water or milk and letting it cook a few minutes. Two quarts of milk, a cup of rice and a cup of sugar, mixed cold, and baked slowly for about two hours, will make another nice pudding. Corn starch, sago, tapioca, and various other things, are sometimes used for a change. Corn meal stirred into boiling milk, making a thin batter, sweetened and poured over a dish of sweet apples, cored but not peeled and baked slowly for a long time, I think is one of the best for a cold day in winter. I might mention others, but will wait till you have tried your hand at these.

But do tell me about the pies. If you use no lard, how do you shorten the crust so as to make a decent pie?

Various things are used which are all very good, but you will no doubt think them very strange "shortening." I would use sweet cream and milk, usually, if it could be had, but in its absence, a few beans nicely sifted, or a few potatoes do very well. Coarse flour does not need so much shortening as fine flour, nor as many other useless, or rather, worse than useless, hurtful condiments to make it palatable. I do not think of putting butter on unleavened bread, but if I had to eat raised, fine flour bread, I should want plenty of batter to make it go down. Thus you see how one false step leads directly to another, and so in any direction. Do you know I think it is much easier to do right when you live on simple food than it is when the blood is kept at fever heat by stimulants. And just here let me moralize a little further by saying that I think the mothers of our land are accountable for a great deal of the intemperance and crime, in giving their children food and drink that stimulates and irritates, and thus prepares the way for that great curse of the American people, tobacco, and then strong drink easily follows, and then—but I forbear, too much has already been said on this subject by abler minds than mine, for me to attempt anything here, except to say that I think that if our good temperance people wish to get to the bottom of the matter, they must commence with the false habits of eating and drinking which begin with our growth, until we cannot live a day on simple, unstimulating, wholesome food and be satisfied.

Well, really, George, you would make an excellent temperance lecturer, and might give even old heads some new ideas; if it really is true that this simple matter of eating or not eating a little salt and pepper and spices, and drinking tea and coffee does engender an appetite for tobacco and strong drink; but it seems very hard to believe when we have eaten them all our lives, and none of us are drunkards, though father does chew tobacco, and the boys sometimes take a cigar when they are out, but I never thought my pies and cakes had anything to do with it.

Aunt Katie, did you ever know a drunkard who did not use tobacco, and did you ever know a man to use tobacco who did not use tea or coffee, or both, and eat stimulating food? I am sure I never did. These things go hand in hand, the one is but the stepping stone to the other. I wish you and every other christian mother could be brought to a realizing sense of your responsibility in this matter.

Well, George, I will promise to think of this matter, but it is all so new to me that I can scarcely realize its truth, yet I cannot dispute it.—The Sybil.

BENEFITS OF SUNSHINE.

Seclusion from sunshine is one of the misfortunes of our civilized life. The same cause which makes the potato vines white and sickly, when grown in the dark cellars, operates to produce the pale, sickly girls that are reared in our parlors. Expose either to the rays of the sun, and they begin to show color, health and strength.

One of the ablest lawyers in our country, a victim of long and hard brain labor, came to me a year ago, suffering from partial paralysis. The right leg and hip were reduced in size, with constant pain in the loins. He was obliged, in coming up stairs, to raise the left foot first, dragging the right one after it. Pale, feeble, miserable, he told me he had been failing for several years, and closed with, "My work is done. At sixty I find myself worn out." I directed him to lie down under a large window, and allow the sun to fall upon every part of his body; at first ten minutes a day, increasing the time until he could expose himself to the direct rays of the sun a full hour. His habits were not essentially altered in any other particular. In six months he came running up stairs like a vigorous man of forty, and declared, with sparkling eyes, "I have twenty years more of work in me."

I have assisted many dyspeptic, neuralgic, rheumatic and hypochondriacal people into health by the sun cure. I have so many facts illustrating the wonderful power of the sun's direct rays in curing certain classes of invalids, that I have seriously thought of publishing a work, to be denominated the "Sun Cure."—Ex.

VENTILATION OF CHURCHES.

The season of the year has arrived when congregations and preachers feel the necessity of thorough ventilation for places of worship. The objection to open windows is the draft, which may give a serious cold to some who are exposed to it. A plan has been devised to prevent the draft, and it is this:

Cover your windows that are to be open, with a network of wire. The entering air will be divided by the meshes into small portions, which will not unite again into a solid body, but will interfuse themselves throughout the building, refreshing the air and purifying it, to the annoyance of none, and to the health and enjoyment of all. The rationale of this phenomenon is less understood than the actual fact. Of the latter there is no doubt whatever. The doubters—if such there be—can try it at small expense, and will never repent the outlay.

FOR DIARRHEA.

Tincture of rhubarb, do. capsicum, do. opium, essence peppermint, spirits of camphor, equal quantities of each. Dose—for an adult, a teaspoonful every hour, in a little sweetened water. For a child, from one to ten drops, according to age. I have used the above, and for twenty years have never known it to fail to cure any diarrhea. It has been used here this season with remarkable success in the cholera. J. W.

AWAKE!

World, awake!
From the dust your garments shake,
Look on him who once was slain,
Lo! he comes, the "great and glorious,
Over death and hell victorious,"
Comes upon this earth to reign.

Can we sleep?
Better far to wake and weep,
E'er the day of grace is o'er,
And we see the angel stand
On the sea and on the land,
Saying, "Time shall be no more."

Dare we wait?
Soon, alas! 'twill be too late;
The wicked shall be wicked still,
But those who love the Lord shall stand
'Mid the happy, blood-washed band,
That soon shall rest on Zion's hill.

Soon life's night
Shall be lost in endless light,
All earth's gloom shall roll away,
Sun, thy liquid gold shall fall,
Moon and stars, your splendor pale,
In the glory of that day.

Even now,
On the mountain's rugged brow,
We discern the morning star,
Mourner, dry your bitter tears,
Lo! a golden gleam appears,
Streaming o'er the heavens afar.

Soon its light,
Scattering every trace of night,
Shall be seen on land and wave,
And from heaven the wondrous sign
Of the Son of God shall shine,
Telling that he comes to save.

We can see
All the lines of prophecy
Swiftly drawing to a close,
World, thy triumph soon shall end,
Christian, lo! your dearest friend
Comes in Sharon's deathless rose.

HAVE THE 1335 DAYS ENDED?

NUMBER ONE.

Bro. Grant.—The following article was sent to the Advent Review for publication, and was rejected. For what reason, I leave the reader to judge. Will you please give it a place in the Crisis, and oblige W. H. B.

Before entering upon an examination of this question, it may be well to remark that, having confessed my belief in the visions a few years since, the readers of the Review may be somewhat surprised that I should remain in doubt relative to any point of our faith. But such seems to be the case, notwithstanding the earnest desire and effort on my part to become established, settled and grounded in what is termed present truth. The fact is, dear brethren and sisters, some of our positions appear to be so contrary to both reason and revelation, that to settle down upon them with any amount of confidence and certainty, requires a greater stretch of faith than what I really possess; consequently, doubts are the result. It seems utterly impossible for me to become established, so as to have perfect confidence in all of our positions, until some of our views can be so explained as to appear a little more harmonious with the teachings of inspiration. Therefore I purpose to notice, in a series of articles, some of our positions, in which there seems to be a lack of harmony and consistency. And if the points which I may notice can be so explained as to shew that harmony does exist, such explanation will be thankfully received.

In the first place, I wish to offer a few thoughts upon the question at the head of this article; namely, "Have the 1335 days ended?" We, as a people, claim that all prophetic time ended in 1844. That then the declaration was made by the angel of Rev. 10: 6, that "time should be no longer;" and that time was prophetic time. Now to me it seems very evident that the prophetic measurement of 1335 days, or years, of Daniel 12, must reach beyond 1844, even to the coming of Christ, and the resurrection. I wish to briefly examine this point.

In Daniel 12: 1, 2, certain wonders are brought to view,—the standing up of Michael, time of trouble, deliverance of Daniel's people,—"every one found written in the Book;" and the awaking of "many of them that sleep in the dust," etc., It will be seen that the resurrection is here mentioned among the wonders; and the last one, too, in the category. Let this fact be particularly noticed. Therefore, in whatever light the standing up of Michael may be seen, it is certain that the coming of Christ must be embraced in the wonders, since the resurrection cannot take place prior to his advent. Therefore, when the angel, as recorded in verse 6, asks, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" he virtually asks, how long shall it be to the resurrection, as that is the last wonder mentioned. This question was asked by an angel of God, sent to Daniel for this purpose; and therefore the question demands a corresponding definite answer; the answer, therefore, must reach to the end of the wonders,—to the resurrection and coming of Christ.—Ver. 7. "And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and swore by him that liveth for ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a half; and when he [the little horn] shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished."

How long was this scattering to continue? In Daniel 7: 21, 22, we read, "I beheld and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Thus we see that the answer reaches to the end of the wonders, to the coming of Christ and the resurrection. It appears that Daniel had an earnest desire to know how long it would be to the end of those wonders, or to the resurrection; hence he says, verse 8, "I heard [the answer], but I understood not. Then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" This we understand to be a mere repetition of the question asked by the angel. Some object to this view, and argue that Daniel's question cannot be a repetition of the angel's, on the ground that it is put in different language; also because the answer is different. But I see no room for a doubt in this matter. To be sure, the question is put in a little different language, but it embraces the same thing.

The angel's question was concerning "the end of these wonders," Daniel's concerning "the end of these things." Now if THESE THINGS in verse 8th do not mean THESE WONDERS in verse 6th, then I would like to know what they do mean. This point is perfectly clear to my mind. If it be true, then, that Daniel's question is a repetition of the angel's, which few can doubt, then Daniel also virtually asks, how long shall it be to the resurrection? Therefore, we must expect a corresponding, definite answer. The answer must reach to the end of the wonders,—to the resurrection and coming of Christ. We understand the answer to this question involves the 1335 days of this prophecy, "The time of the end," the taking away of "the daily sacrifice," the setting up of "the abomination that maketh desolate," and the resurrection of the dead.

Says Daniel, "I heard, but I understood not." What was it that Daniel did not understand? It certainly was not the wonders spoken of, for they were all explained. It must have been something concerning the time that he did not understand; and this seems evident from the answer given by the man clothed in linen. He had given the "time, times, and a half," without giving a starting point; and ended them by an indefinite something, called the scattering of "the power of the holy people." This answer was too vague and indefinite for Daniel; and hence the repetition of the question, "How long?" to which Gabriel gives a final and satisfactory answer, in verses 11, 12 and 13,—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand, two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be; for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." The whole matter is now made plain. Daniel has got a starting point for the 1290 and 1335 days; and a point of termination at the resurrection, which is the end of the wonders. Thus Gabriel fulfilled the command, "Make this man to understand the vision." Now if the starting point for the 1335 days is not from the time the desolation of abomination was set up, then, to my mind, there is no starting point given.

Our position is, if I mistake not, that this period started from the taking away of Paganism in 508, and ended in 1843–4. But what authority we have for starting the 1335 days, or any other prophetic measurement, at the above date, is more than I can tell. It seems very evident that this period must start with the 1260 and 1290 where the abomination of desolation was set up, which we claim was in 538. If so, then it is certain that the 1335 days are not yet ended.

Another proof that they are not ended is found in the fact, that a blessing is pronounced upon those that wait and come to the end of the days. Now I ask, if those days ended in 1844, what special blessing did God's people receive, aside from having their hearts made sick in consequence of hope deferred? "Blessed is he that waiteth." Those words are full of force and beauty, when viewed in the light that the blessing promised is the gift of immortality at the coming of Christ. The admonition is, if the vision "tarry, wait for it." We claim to be now in this waiting time. Many will exclaim in that day, "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him!" etc. Now then, "Blessed is he that WAITETH and COMETH to the 1335 days." Daniel is also to stand in his lot at the end of the days. I know that it is said that the word here translated lot does not in the original mean lot of inheritance, but lot, or chance; to cast lots, etc. But I fail to see that this is any argument to prove that the days are ended; for as much as Daniel is to stand in his lot, or chance if you please, at the end of the days. Daniel is told to go his way (not until the investigative judgment sits), but "till the END be" ("At the time appointed the end shall be"); for thou shalt rest, and STAND (not lie in the grave) in thy lot at the end of the days."

Therefore, as the prophetic measurement of 1335 days was given in answer to the question, "How long to the resurrection?" And as Daniel is to stand in his lot at the end of that period, we conclude that the days cannot be ended. This is our view of the subject at the present time. Perhaps I may be wrong in my conclusions. If so, I hope to receive the true light on this and all other subjects. I shall endeavor to hold myself in readiness, with honesty of heart, to give up error for truth, let it came when and from whatever source it may. Yours searching for truth as for a hid treasure,

LIVING HOURS WITH THE PILGRIMS.—No. 2.

"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—Luke 12: 32.

It seems to me there was never a time since these words were uttered by our Savior, that they should be pressed home to our hearts with more comfort then now. They contain much of cheer and encouragement. Peter says, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad with exceeding joy." We have all got to be tried by fiery trials. Christ, in glancing through the vail that obscured the future, saw the perils to which the pilgrim band would be exposed. He saw that evil doers would "wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived"; that "the wicked should do wickedly," and some should "depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." But he says, in words of cheer, "Fear not, little flock." These words savor much of encouragement to his children, who, amid the thickening perils of these last days, are looking for his glorious appearing. To them they have a peculiar meaning. For "unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation."

In scanning the prophetic records, it appears to be a clearly established fact, that the true church of Christ should not walk in darkness respecting the coming of Jesus. "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief."—1 Thess. 5: 4. These words have their literal fulfillment. This generation has witnessed the very signs that were to warn us that he was near, even at the door. This moment sure and unmistakable evidences herald his approach. So that now it may be said to the "little flock," "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it (he, margin) is near, even at the door."—Matt. 24: 33.

Now the great and solemn truth that the glorious day of our redemption is near at hand, and that he will come as a thief to this ungodly world, should stir up every heart to devout and holy watchfulness. It should arouse every waiting soul to seek and obtain a life of holiness; for "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." A state of sanctification, of pure, practical piety, will shield us like a wall of adamant in the day of God's wrath. What other standard of piety will preserve us blameless unto his coming? This is the only state of safety. Seek this, beloved pilgrims, and then let the fiery deluge come; let the heavens depart as a scroll, and the elements melt with fervent heat; you will hear that sweet voice ringing the glad tidings in your heart, "Fear not, little flock." But, as time hastens us on to the realization of those scenes, we should make our preparation sure, and improve the flying moments.

Look around this cold, cheerless world. There is work to be done. The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Time is flying, and sinners are madly rushing on to the goal of destruction. We shall soon gather around the throne of judgment. You and I, dear reader, will be there. Nothing will hide us from the scrutiny of a just Judge. And nothing will hide the things indelibly written in the book of remembrance by the finger of him who numbers the hairs of our head. He calls us to labor in his vineyard. Sinners are sinking in the quicksands of these days of peril. He wants us to dig them out, and present them in all their filth to him, to be washed and made white in the atoning blood of the Lamb. Let not those who possess the one talent go and hide it, when the cry goes out for help. Reach out your hand, O pilgrim brother, and bring them to Jesus to be made partakers of the joy that is to be revealed. If we seek and obtain that holy walk with Christ, become sanctified through faith, and consecrated to his cause; a glimpse of the world, in its present deplorable condition, causes our hearts to yearn for the safety of those who are out of the ark of refuge. O, let us not be blind guides to this blind, heedless world. Let us, by God's assistance, lead them into the path of holiness—of primitive piety. This is the sure preparation. The way is very narrow; but, praise the Lord, Christ is a lamp to our feet, and will lead us on higher and higher, till at last he will gather us in one blessed assembly on the Mount of our salvation.

O how sweet it is to watch for Jesus! Watching and waiting, I sigh for his return to change this vile, mortal body into the likeness of the new Adam. And in this I am not alone. Groaning creation sighs for the long-expected day of rest. Faithful watchmen from the towers of Zion proclaim it near. The cry echoes from hill-top and vale, "Behold the bridegroom cometh!" He comes in power and glory, escorted by angels, to receive his waiting bride. O, beloved children, be ready. Watch and pray. Pray much. O the unknown power of prayer! Get near enough to Jesus to touch the hem of his garment, and you will be saved. As we draw nearer the morning of his bright appearing, we need to draw nearer to him. I can now almost see the golden rays of redemption's morning. O lift up your heads, waiting Israel, and rejoice. Stand firm upon the Rock, and let the destroying element all seething over the world; it will not stir your foundation.

"Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning,
Long by the prophets of Israel foretold;
Hail to the millions from bondage returning,
Gentiles and Jews the blest vision behold."

Annual Report of the Executive Board.

The operations of your Executive Board in the mission work the past year, have been as follows:

At the first meeting of the Board, August 30, 1865, Eld. J. V. Himes was commissioned to proceed South, as soon as possible, to select, in Memphis and elsewhere, suitable fields for our mission work, and to establish missions and schools. At the same time, an appeal was sent out to the brethren abroad for help.

Owing to sickness in his family, Bro. Himes was unable to proceed on his mission until the beginning of December. Taking St. Louis in his way, he stopped there and preached to great numbers of the freed people, who received the good news of the coming kingdom with gladness. A revival followed, and many conversions were reported.

Finding two devoted christian sisters residing there, who took much interest in the freedmen, it was thought that a mission school, under their charge, would be productive of good. Accordingly, a school was established, with Sr. Francelia F. Curtis as teacher, and Sr. Mary K. Prescott, with two others, as overseers. Much interest was manifested, and all were anxious to learn. This school was, in part, self-sustaining. All the expenses were borne by the freedmen except the pay of the teacher. It was found, after some months, that free schools for the colored people were soon to be established by the city; and as this school was intended only as an experiment, of perhaps temporary character, there appeared to be no further need of its continuance. It was therefore discontinued at the expiration of its term of four months.

Having arrived in Memphis, Bro. Himes rented the chapel of the United Sons of Ham, in Brown's Avenue, and established a day and evening school, placing the two daughters of Eld. J. C. Bywater in temporary charge, until the missionary and teachers appointed by the Board should arrive from the North. This was done at once, to satisfy the earnest solicitations of the freedmen, who were very anxious for the school.

This school, especially the evening school, was a very interesting one. Two of its members were local preachers of the African Methodist church, who were trying to learn to read, so that they could read the Bible and Hymn Book, and be better able to conduct meetings. The pupils improved very rapidly, and much good was done. The expenses of this school were borne entirely by the freedmen, who paid, the most of them, $1.00 a month,—thus relieving the Society of any expense as to the school. As the house was not large enough, nor the location as convenient as desired for the mission, Bro. Himes recommended building; occupying, in the meantime, the chapel for the day and evening schools, Sunday school, prayer meeting and preaching.

In connection with the establishment of this school, Bro. Himes held meetings and preached the gospel of the kingdom to the freedmen, with very encouraging results. A revival followed, and numbers were converted.

In the middle of February, Dr. I. I. Leslie, late missionary to the Nashville mission, was engaged to take charge of the mission in Memphis, and Sr. Martha S. Butler, of Connecticut, as teacher.

Proceeding at once to Memphis, Bro. Leslie looked about for a better field for the mission, and was at last able to secure, in North Memphis, a very favorable position, which Bro. Himes had endeavored to secure, but it was not then to be had. This field embraces a portion of the city, miles in extent, where there are thousands of freedmen, with few gospel privileges, and famishing for the bread of life; destitute of means of instruction, and very anxious for schools. A house was obtained, partitions taken down, and a room for meetings and schools fitted up.

Here Bro. Leslie commenced the real work of the mission—the work contemplated in the beginning—the preaching of the gospel, prayer meetings, Sunday school, and a day and evening school, all working together, and at the same time, as agencies in the great work of evangelization. A great interest was immediately awakened, and the meetings were crowded with hearers. Sinners have been converted, the truth advanced, and much good done. Of the Sunday school, which has numbered over one hundred scholars, Bro. Leslie writes that it has been the most interesting he ever attended.

They had last term a day school of about two hundred scholars, old and young, from six to fifty-five years, a large proportion over twenty. The number in the evening school was seventy-five, nearly all adults, and many of them heads of families. The scholars have made rapid progress, and the hearts of the teachers have been cheered by the good resulting from their labors. The faith once delivered to the saints has been preached, and a good foundation laid for future efforts.

Bro. Leslie and Sr. Butler have both been sick, owing mainly to their great and incessant labors, but they are now recovering.

Monies were appropriated by the Board for the erection of a mission house and chapel, but owing to the sickness of Bro. L., the house, at last advices, was not yet commenced. The expense of building had greatly increased, and new estimates were being made.

The riots have resulted in a better state of things there, and in securing greater protection and an advancement of school and missionary interests.

With regard to the freedmen, Memphis is one of the most benighted and needy places in the whole South. There are some fifteen thousand freedmen in the city, and, as yet, not more than fifteen hundred are provided with schools, and there is great destitution of gospel preaching. The particular spot where our missionaries are at work is the very best in all Memphis.

The importance of Memphis as a mission post, as a central or rallying point for our other missionaries, who, it is hoped, shall yet be sent there, to reach out in all directions with the proclamation of the Lord's speedy coming, will be seen from the following extract from a late number of the American Missionary:

"Memphis is a very important point to hold and man with a religious and educational force. It is the Gate City to the South West. Its influence, I believe, is felt over a larger territory than any other city in the Mississippi Valley. To West Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, North Louisiana, and North Alabama, it has a metropolitan position. What is done here for the colored man, in a very important sense, is done for him all over this territory. . . . Who, in the Last Day will be recognized by these thousands and tens of thousands, educated and ransomed ones, as their large-hearted friend, and the faithful steward of their Savior?"

In behalf of the Board,

William B. Herron, Sec'y.

FASHION.

Upon this subject, I would like to express a few thoughts. I would not do so in an unchristian manner, but as one possessing the spirit and meekness of Christ. It would be absurdly foolish for me to profess with my mouth to love my Savior more than all else, while my actions, habits of dress, and general deportment, proved that I still bowed at mammon's shrine; for I believe the love of Christ begets a dislike for the vain and useless things of this life. In this age of evil, when the allurements of Satan are multiplying and becoming more subtle and cunningly attractive to the unregenerate heart, christians must labor the more earnestly to subdue the powers of the adversary. To do this, we have not to look at our neighbor's faults first, and to battle the enemy for them; but we must see to it that he is driven from our own borders first, and then we can the more effectually assist our brother or our sister. Satan is a relentless foe to battle with, 'tis said, and under various circumstances it is true; yet I think I have learned a method of silencing his batteries and causing him to beat a quiet but sure retreat.

It is only very recently that I have learned this secret, and therefore I am only in the primary experience of its success. So far as I know, I can recommend it to all, or at least to those who have been assaulted by him in the ways by which he nearly overpowered me; viz., through pride and a love for the world's approbation. God was my helper, for he gave me the arcanum of success. He is ever ready to lead the willing mind.

It is generally understood, I think, that the Tempter has an eye for artificial beauty; and the more art-worshipers he can gain, the better pleased is he; for such forget nature, and nature's God. He has fine sensibilities withal, and is particularly fond of adapting himself to the fancies and imaginations of the young; and I think I am safe in saying, he prefers their society. Well, why is it? One reason is, they are less thoughtful, and are more given to jesting, joking, and thoughtless merriment; and while these things claim their attention, of course they have little or no thought for the sober realities of mortal existence and the life beyond. Another reason is, they live for the life they now live, mainly; hence they seek out every method of enjoyment here; every pleasure and place of amusement is sought after, and each strives to be the "gayest of the gay." These are the natural inclinations, perfected by sin. Now with the results of education and the influence of fashion, they acquire a taste for the artificial, and this pleases the enemy of righteousness most of all. With their perverted tastes, he finds a large and easy sale for his goods. A plain, sober garb would ill become their gay faces, gay habits, and gay pursuits, he argues. His aim is to introduce every thing that shall keep one from meditating; their whole attention must be taken up, or his cause is in jeopardy.

At present, FASHION is his chief element. This is the the acme of his power, I really believe; for it not only rules the worldling, but the professed christian yields to its sway. Has it any power over the real christian? if not, how easily we may answer the old query, Are there few that be saved? for how few think, speak, act or dress independent of the beau monde. Now, perhaps all who may read this are professed christians; then let me ask, do you possess the true, life-giving principle of christianity? If so, then you have a desire—a real desire to be wholly the Lord's; and if you would be his wholly, then you must abandon the idea of serving two masters;—in a word, you must become dead to the world and its influences, and thus baffle the enemy's plans, and exalt the name of our God. Taking it for granted that this is your desire, as it has been mine for a long time, and that you wish to drive the enemy of your soul from your presence (and we cannot be Christ's while we listen to the suggestions of Satan, and we shall listen to him so long as we permit him to remain near us), I will give you my method of dismissing him, and the secret of success.

It is this: dress plainly, be sober, and watch unto prayer. Satan, like many persons in our day, admires a showy exterior. He admires to see one fashionably dressed, bedecked with "mock pearls," and the "false glitter" of today, and especially if it is a professing christian that does it. If we would please the world, we must put on the artificial trappings, and torture our head and face with unseemly monstrosities and hurtful washes, in order to be "presentable" to the father of lies and fashion. It is expensive being a servant of Satan. I have proved it; hence the poor are not his pet subjects. But, thank God, every poor child may be the friend of Jesus. He requires no ornaments save a "meek and quiet spirit." The plaiting of the hair and wearing of gold is contrary to his demands. Then if you would be his, break the galling chain of fashion, forsake the world and its pleasures, and I assure you Satan will leave; for he dislikes plainly dressed and sober minded people, and an earnest prayer will thoroughly unnerve him. You will not have to fight with him; he will leave you, if you only get "out of fashion." He has no sympathy for old or young, unless they serve him in some manner. This I know, for he and I have had a "falling out" since I would not obey him, and he has left me, and henceforth we shall not be on speaking terms even.

I was once a faithful servant of his, but must confess he was a miserable paymaster. It was only a few months ago that I seceded from his government, and enlisted under the banner of Prince Immanuel. Since my adoption into the family of God, I have not had to wait for pay. I have been rewarded daily; and then to think of the reward laid up in store for the faithful! O I love the service of my new master, Jesus, for his yoke is easy and his burden light; while on the other hand, sin was a yoke of bondage and the gall of bitterness.

Now how many of my young friends will enlist into the cause of Christ? How many who have enlisted will drop the burden of sin and bondage, and march onward untrammeled, to battle the enemies of God? How many will forsake their fashionable follies, and become a fool in the eyes of the world, for the sake of Jesus? He is coming to earth again, and that very soon. I believe it with all my heart. Do you believe it, my sister? Then forsake trifles and live for God. Do we realize this sublime truth of Christ's coming in all its significance? If so, shall we not be willing to make any sacrifice for the cause of God? I know I love my Savior, and at Alton campmeeting I resolved that I would forsake all for his sake. Though the world present all its charms, I will shut my eyes and cling to Jesus. I can come unto him in full confidence now; while once I could not, through fear he would require something of me that I could not perform. Thank God, I have no fear now; for he will not require more than he will give grace to perform. My aim is to please him in all things.

To the dear brethren and sisters, whom I met with and parted from at Alton: cheer up. The day of deliverance is at hand. The King is coming, and he will want to find a waiting people. Then let us be ready and waiting; let us keep unspotted from the world, having on the robe of righteousness; then palms of victory, and crowns of glory we shall wear.

THE BLESSED HOPE.

Reader, are you looking for that blessed hope which filled the breasts of the early apostles? for that glorious appearing of our dear Savior? If so, you are traveling a very narrow but sure road, and are getting your house in order for the reception of your King. If you are looking for this hope, your daily walk and conversation will tell it to the world. The outer world is ever watching the professors of this hope with a scanning eye. If your walk does not agree with your profession, they are sure to be aware of it; and thus you bring the gospel into reproach. The world is jealous of Christ's disciples, who are looking for this blessed hope. The world is pretty well posted in regard to the characteristics of a christian's life. They know very well when a man or woman is living up to their profession. And when sinners see an individual that really does, and keeps the whole commandments of God unbroken, it makes an impression on them, and they are led to see the beauty of christianity.

When a person is looking for this hope, he is a new man in Christ Jesus. He has had a spiritual birth, and is walking in newness of life. He is dead to the world and alive in Christ. He is continually watching himself, that he may make his preparation sure. He is attending to his own business, and not that of his neighbor. He finds that it takes all of his time to keep his own house in order, and keep his own lamp trimmed and burning, ready to meet his Savior, who will soon come to enter in to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Oh, what a glorious prospect!

Now, dear reader, let us who are looking for this blessed hope purify ourselves even as he is pure. Let us give ourselves a living sacrifice to the cause of God, and receive the sanctifying Spirit—the spirit of adoption—whereby we are the sons of God and heirs of glory. Christ is soon coming in all his majesty to take his waiting children home. Angels will welcome us there. And, oh! how beautiful this earth will appear after it is purified, and filled with the glory of God. Then in blessed anticipation of the glories that await the faithful, let us remain steadfast and unmovable; and this blessed hope will grow brighter and brighter as we approach the Eden shores of our rest.

"SELL LESS FROTH."

"I can tell you how to sell a good deal more beer," said a customer one day to a beer-vender.

"Ah! how so?" said the vender.

"Sell less froth," said the customer.

Those professors of religion who are accustomed to much light and trifling conversation, foolish jesting, etc., are vending froth instead of beer. "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt" (Col. 4: 6), i. e., the salt that Jesus speaks of in Matt. 5: 13.

ADVENT CHRIS. STATE CONF. OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The annual session of this conference for 1866, was held in Whitefield, N. H., agreeably to the call of the official board. A business session was called by the President, Eld. J. Knowles, on Friday 8½ o'clock A. M., at which the following members were present: J. Knowles, J. Couch, T. W. Piper, J. A. Cleaveland, D. F. Leavitt, O. D. Eastman, and A. W. Sibley. Meeting was opened with prayer by T. W. Piper.

It was moved and carried, that the visiting brethren be invited to a seat with us, and take a part in our deliberations; after which the following board of officers were elected for the year ensuing:—

ELD. J. COUCH, President.
ELD. T. W. PIPER, Vice President.
ELD. A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.
ELD. J. KNOWLES, Treasurer.

On motion, the chair appointed J. A. Cleaveland, J. Knowles, and D. F. Leavitt, a committee to prepare business to come before the meeting. The committee on business reported the following order of business to be acted upon:

1. The election of a Ministerial committee.
2. The election of a Quarterly Conference committee.
3. The election of a Protracted Meeting committee.
4. The election of a Tract committee.
5. The reading of the Secretary's minutes.
6. The report of the ministers present and also the delegates of churches.

The order of business as reported by the committee was adopted.

A nominating committee appointed by the Chair, comprising the following Brn: T. W. Piper, J. A. Cleaveland, and D. F. Leavitt, reported the following nominations for the above committee:

For Ministerial committee—J. Couch, J. G. Smith, J. A. Cleaveland, T. W. Piper, and J. Morrill.

For Quar. Conf. committee—T. W. Piper, A. W. Sibley, J. Knowles, J. A. Cleaveland, and A. Ross.

For Protracted Meeting committee—John Couch, J. G. Smith, J. A. Cleaveland, A. W. Sibley, and C. S. Emerson.

For Tract committee—J. W. White, A. W. Sibley, and J. G. Smith.

The above committees were elected as reported.

Bro. A. W. Clark, Piermont, N. H., was formally received as a member of the conference, after which the minutes of the Secretary were read and adopted. Adjourned till after the close of the afternoon service.

Met as adjourned, Eld. J. Couch presiding. Prayer by Bro. O. D. Eastman. By vote, Bro. Harvey Deming, Cornish, N. H., was received as a member of the conference. The following resolutions were presented and passed:

Resolved, That an address shall be published to the brethren of New Hampshire by the official board.

Resolved, That the Protracted Meeting committee shall prepare and have published, in connection with the address of the official board, a condensed report of the meetings held by them during the past year. Adjourned till Saturday morning, 8½ oclock.

Saturday morning, 8½ o'clock. Met as adjourned. In the absence of the President, the Vice President, Eld. T. W. Piper, took the chair. Meeting opened with prayer by Bro. J. Knowles. The Secretary introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Ministerial committee, in connection with other duties, to inquire into the moral and christian character of the members of this conference, when charges are preferred against them. After some discussion, the resolution passed by a full vote.

The following Brn. in the ministry reported their labors:—T. W. Piper, A. W. Sibley, J. A. Cleaveland, J. Knowles, D. F. Leavitt, O. D. Eastman, H. Deming, A. W. Clark, and Dea. R. C. Jackman, a delegate from the Woodstock church. Adjourned till after the P. M. service.

Saturday P. M. Met according to adjournment. The Vice President in the chair. Prayer was offered by Bro. J. A. Cleaveland. It was moved and carried that we hear the report of the Tract committee. Eld. T. W. Piper, being the only one present on that committee, made the following report: That he had, during the current year, bought eight dollars' worth of tracts with his own money, and had given away a part of them, and sold a part, and had some left. Bro. J. G. Smith, another on the tract committee, reported by letter that he had "done nothing but to scatter a few," etc. Bro. J. W. White, chairman of the tract committee, deserves commendation for his energetic efforts in that department. He submits the following, as his report:

Received by collection of the friends in Concord, N. H.	$18.00
By private subscription, and tracts sold	21.70
Total amount	$39.70
Cash paid H. L. Hastings, and others for tracts, and express bills on the same	$39.80
Value of tracts on hand	8.00

Thus we find something has been done in the tract department for the past year, but not so much as we hope will be during the ensuing year. The following resolution was here offered, and unanimously passed:

Resolved, That the preachers of this conference unite their efforts with the tract committee in carrying forward the tract enterprise in raising funds, and forwarding the same to the tract committee.

It was moved and carried that we tender our thanks to the church in Whitefield, and especially to their pastor, Bro. J. A. Cleaveland, for inviting this conference with them, and for their liberality and christian kindness manifested during the meeting; and also, that we extend our thanks to the pastors of the F. W. Baptist and M. E. churches for their courtesy in inviting us to occupy their large, commodious house on Lord's day.

It was moved and carried, that the minutes of this conference be published in the World's Crisis.

Voted, to adjourn without date.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

P. S. There was preaching during the meeting by Elders J. Couch, J. Knowles, T. W. Piper, D. F. Leavitt, and A. W. Sibley. The spirit of the Lord was indeed with us, and good, we trust, was accomplished in the name of the Master. The reports from the preachers were truly encouraging. God, during the last year, in many places, has worked wonderfully in the conversion of sinners. Our conferences and protracted meetings have been signally blessed of God; so we will labor on, knowing our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

WHO WILL GO?

The time seems to have come to make a special effort to send the "gospel of the kingdom" to the Southern states. Before the war, but very little had been done by way of giving the last great proclamation concerning the second coming of Christ to that people. Then the way was hedged up; now the people stretch forth their hands and cry for help. Shall they have it? Who will go?

EXCELLENT.—Do not fail to read the article headed "FASHION." It is the best thing we have seen on that subject—true every word of it. May the Lord bless all with decision to adopt the plan proposed by Sr. Jackson.

In a private note, when speaking of the article, she says:—"I prayed over it before I wrote, and since I have written it." Will not others adopt the same method? The results, we think, would be glorious. Let us all trust in the Lord.

THE HEALTH REFORMER.

We have just received the second number of the Health Reformer, published at Battle Creek, Mich., by "the Western Health Reform Institute." We are very much pleased with this new monthly on health, and heartily recommend it to those who wish a good periodical on that subject. It is full of good sense, which every body should read. Price $1 per year. Address Dr. H. S. Lay, Battle Creek, Mich.

PAPAL DESPAIR.

The Papacy is in a very critical condition. This is apparent to all who know the facts. The Catholics themselves being judges, the temporal power of the Pope is about ended. In the Monde, one of the leading Catholic papers of Europe, is the following confession, which shows that hope is about gone:

"We cannot see indeed what is to prevent the Italian revolution from ascending the capital. France abandons Rome; Austria makes advances to King Victor Emmanuel; all the Catholic Powers become more and more entangled in revolutionary embarassments under the pretext of escaping from the embarassments of the Roman question. Christian princes seem more inclined to ally themselves with the revolution than to rise in defense of the Holy Father and the Catholic church. Rome, then, for one reason or another, is really abandoned by men. It is quite natural therefore, that the Cialdinis, Ricasolis and Garibaldis should prepare the moral means for taking possession of it. The only power which the revolution has now to fear is God. But what is God in the eyes of certain persons who are on the high places of power? A child's scarecrow. All this is horrible, but it is true."

TEMPORAL POWER OF THE POPE.

Every week brings additional evidence to show that the temporal power of the Pope is about closing up, with no prospect that it will ever be revived; consequently, the end of the present dispensation is just at hand. This is a solemn but glorious hour to the christian; but a terrible one to the sinner; yet how careless are the wicked. So it was in the days of Noah and Lot; and Jesus informs us that it will be so again at the time of his second coming. All the vivid signs of the times are passed as idle tales, while the merry scenes of gay pleasure absorb the attention of the multitude, that hurry on the way to perdition, with a scoffing sneer towards those who are sounding an alarm to the thoughtless world.

When speaking on "Romanism in Europe," the "American Churchman" of Sept. 13th, says:—

"The world, as it appears to the Vatican, will be divided among six great states, and of these France will be Voltairian, Prussia Lutheran, Britain on all Papal questions Calvinistic, Russia Greek and hostile, Italy Catholic but anti-Papal, and Austria Papal, but bound to the evil prejudices of the Hungarians, who are anxious to be shown by the church the way to heaven, but think they can see their road on earth for themselves. Spain is orthodox, to be sure, but then Spain is also sceptical, governed by men who detest all schism, but who also detest wars for a creed in which they only half believe; and then could Spain beat Italy? The prospect is dark on every side; Italy consolidated, Germany united, Austria moved eastward, Bavaria paralyzed, Spain left helpless, Rome seething with hatred under their feet, the poor priests are thrown back on heaven and Napoleon as their only protectors, and while heaven gives victory to infidels, Napoleon refuses to intervene and save the faithful. The changes are all so sudden, too, and the men who conduct them so violent; there is no time for intrigue, and what can one do with a Protestant aristocrat like Bismark, who treats Popes as if they were petty princes, and compels them to consecrate Bishops as if a concordat were a secular treaty to be enforced by the bayonet, who does not even believe, like Mr. Disraeli, that the "independence of the Papacy is essential to the European equilibrium?" . . . No 'guarantee of the great Powers,' the daily dream of the Vatican, is any longer possible. . . . The temporal power must end; even should the Pope remain in Rome, for he could only be safe under Italian bayonets, and an Italian Pontiff exercising power through Italians only over an Italian population, must be either an arch priest or a lieutenant-general of the secular sovereign of Italy. Flight is the only alternative, and though this will be pressed upon the Pope by the Jesuits and the fanatics, who think his departure will disturb the order of the world, there are more moderate men around him, who ask whither he is to fly. The hand of France will, he knows well, be heavier than that of Italy, no Italian priest or prince will willingly live in Germany, the Balearic Isles are too isolated for a Court which is still one of the great centers of human action, and in Malta, the refuge toward which the mind of Pope Pius most readily turns, he must conciliate an heretical power. The lodging, however, is no matter. No state will accept the Pope as King."

Thus the Lord, the woman on the "seven hills" has got through drinking "the blood of the saints," and soon they will rise from the dead to "rejoice over her," shouting "Alleluiah," as they see "the smoke of her burning."

THE WESTERN FLOODS.

The floods at the west have been very severe this year. The Springfield (Ohio) Republic, when describing the condition of that town says:—

"A large portion of the place was inundated and the flood rolled through the streets with the most melancholy results. Many of the inhabitants were completely imprisoned, the water surrounding their dwellings and preventing escape. Of course a good deal of property was swept away, while the cellars were flooded and merchants and traders sustained great damage. The railroads connecting with the town were submerged or swept away and travel was interrupted.

The Chicago Tribune says that twenty inches of rain have fallen in that city and its neighborhood during the past sixty days. Its effect upon the crops is very unfortunate. The corn crop is damaged, and the wheat crop, which had been cut but not threshed, has sustained very serious injury from sprouting. As the rain prevailed over a great extent of country, the damage must be wide spread; yet a few days of fine weather would do much to repair it. But the rain has not only been a detriment in regard to the crops, but has seriously interfered with the large class of out door laborers, who have been compelled to suspend work. All building operations have ceased, and bricks at Chicago are selling for $4 to $6 per thousand more than before the rains, which have obliged the brick-makers to suspend operations. The Tribune says the total loss to the community by the heavy rains cannot be estimated. It will probably exceed a million of dollars to the people of Chicago alone, without taking into account the higher prices which must be paid all through next year for provisions, the extent of which is prefigured in the fact that wheat has advanced fully twenty cents per bushel during the past week, and corn five to six cents."

NAPOLEON'S PLANS.

Some have thought because Napoleon found a reason for not pressing his demand on Prussia for the extension of the French territory to the banks of the Rhine, that he had really backed down before that power, and would be content with his present situation. Those who entertain such a view we think do not yet understand the character of Napoleon. The following from a Paris correspondent of the New York Times, we think gives us a correct idea of Napoleon's policy:—

"But I believe it may be safely predicted that the Emperor intends now to make such demands and open such negotiations as will enable him to keep the question open till after the Exhibition, and till his army is amply provided with improved arms, and then Prussia will have to accept the propositions now made in a mild form, or fight the most terrible war which has yet been seen on European soil. The French army and people will accept this arrangement, and nothing short of it. There is a loud demand for peace, certainly; there always is in every country; but in France the cry for peace only extends to those wars the government has been in the habit of making 'for an idea.' When it comes to the question of the Rhine, there will be no 'fire in the rear' in France; every man, woman and child will support the war, and will subscribe to every loan the government may demand."

Patrons of the Crisis,—A great idea is revolving in my mind, and struggling for exit. And when that idea drops off the end of my pen on to this sheet, and you read it in your "favorite paper," do you know what you will do with it? "Don't know." Well, I do know. Six thousand of you will lay down your paper (your "favorite religious journal," remember), and think no more about it. But will your neglect or indifference prove that the idea is not worth thinking about or acting upon? O no indeed. But it will exhibit a test of your zeal for the circulation of your "favorite paper," "the very best paper you know of." I am quite anxious, however, that you should know what my great idea is, no matter how you treat it. Now do get up a little responsibility and zeal, and read what follows this sentence. If each and every one of the subscribers to the Crisis would obtain ONE more new paying subscriber, it would increase the subscription list of the paper to over fifteen thousand. Only ONE apiece. A vigorous, bold, determined, persistent effort in this direction would double our list in three months. Now what do you say to my plan? Will you try, if it takes you six months to do it? And if not, why not? Answer to yourself, not me.

D. T. T.

"LOOK UP!"

Yes, look up, brother, look up! Do you ask who bids you do so? It is the Lord. Do you ask again why? Because redemption is just at hand. The bowed head is the symbol of sorrow. The uplifted head is the posture of joy. You cannot look up without lifting up the head. You cannot fail to do either now without being disobedient to the Lord. We have seen the signs of which he predicted, and should cheerfully take the revealed position. For centuries the church of God has traveled her lonely path with her head bowed, and eyes cast downward toward the grave. But as if in expectation of a deliverer from the skies, she has buried her dead with their faces turned upward, and the eyes in the right direction,—up. For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised and go sky-ward to meet Jesus. He is coming, and all should now take and keep the posture of expectant joy, as they are bidden by the Master. It is the glorious privilege, as well as duty, of the last generation of christians to live with their heads lifted up. It will be their privilege to stand at the judgment bar, meekly, but with their heads lifted up. It will be their happy privilege to march through the gates of the city of God with their heads lifted up. "Thou, O Lord, art a shield for me, my glory, and the lifter up of mine head."—Ps. 3: 3.

He that refuses at the proper time to look up and to lift up his head, and know that eternal redemption is at the door, is guilty of disregarding the express command of Jesus Christ. That time has come, and the light is so clear there is no excuse for the recreant. What a well of joy in trial, what a source of strength against sin, what a weapon of warfare against Satan, this belief would prove to the dear church of God everywhere, if she would but see and embrace it. The great heart of Christendom would be stirred with a mighty gladness, an exultant shout would go through the camp of the weary hosts, the enemy would tremble, and the multitude of believers would suddenly become engirded as with triumphant strength from the everlasting arms of the Almighty. Looking down begets weakness and a love of earth. Looking up inspires courage and hope and might, and indicates where the heart is gone, and around whom love and hope are entwined. Lift the drooping head, O weary watcher. With strained eyes and with ears intent, catch the first signal of the trumpet blast. Look up, for lo it soundeth, and the bell on the chronometer of the coming eternity is about to strike, ONE! To the last minute keep the HEAD UP!

D. T. T.

IS IT TRUE?

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."—MATT. 24: 14.

We will suppose the above words of our Lord to refer to the ordinary proclamation of the gospel of the Savior of sinners, as made by the christian world in general. Granting this to be their meaning—as the churches claim, we then enquire, Has the prediction met its fulfillment? Is the common gospel preached at the present time in all the world and to all nations? Now in regard to the answer to these inquiries, we present the following testimony:

"Rev. J. O. Choules, author of a voluminous work, a History of Missions, from the apostolic age down to the present day, being asked in May, 1842, if he knew of any nation which never had received the gospel, replied that he did not."—Litch's Prophetic Expositions, Vol. I. p. 147.

"The same question was proposed to Rev. Mr. Janes, general financial Agent of the American Bible Society, and nearly the same answer was elicited."—Ibid. p. 147.

Dr. Nathan Bangs, for many years at the head of the Methodist missionary operations, was asked the question in July 1842, and after reflecting some time, replied that he believed there was a tribe somewhere upon the north-west coast of North America to whom it had never been preached."—Ibid. p. 148.

"And now that gospel has nearly delivered its testimony throughout the globe There is scarce a nation of Europe, Asia, or America, in which it has not been preached."—Dr. George Duffield on the Prophecies, p. 105.

"At this moment the gospel has been preached in every tongue, the Bible translated into every language; all nations have heard the joyful sound from the equator to the pole." —Dr John Cumming: "The End, p. 105.

"It is probable that not less than about sixty millions of copies of parts, or the whole of the sacred word, in about two hundred different translations, and in some one hundred and seventy-five or two hundred different languages or dialects, have been given to the inhabitants of the earth since the year 1804 . . . Tenfold more Bibles were issued in the last fifty years, than in the whole history of the world before."—Hasting's Reasons for, &c. p. 73.

Now the foregoing testimonies, relating to the fulfillment of our Savior's words in the universal spread of the gospel at the present time, are either true or false. If the latter, then there are those living who are fully posted in the matter, and who are fully competent to expose the error. Will they do it? We call on the learned for the facts. Let us have them, no matter whose theory they sustain or sink. Has the common gospel been preached in all the world among all nations, or not? As to the signification of the words, touching the intent and purpose of its publication, we insist that Chrysostom (A. D. 400,) the "Golden-mouthed," understood the passage exactly when he says, "Attend with care to what is said: He said not when it hath been believed by all men, but when it hath been preached to all men. For this cause, he also said for a witness, to show that he doth not wait for all men to believe, and then for him to come; since the phrase 'for a witness,' hath this meaning,—for accusation, for reproof, for condemnation of them that have not believed."—Homilies I. p. 141, Ox. Ed.

Granting, then, that the passage, as the churches understand it, is being fulfilled, what should we look for but—"THE END?" And what "end" is this except it be the end of the gospel age.—the end of the world!

"THE BRIDGE IS GONE."

On a dark, wild night, many years ago, a train of cars under rapid motion were approaching the steep bank of the Connecticut river, where the stream was deep and swollen, and many rods in width. Will they cross it? The tempest swept over the track and went shuddering and wailing by. Suddenly, when within a mile of the river bank, a quick cry of alarm from a human voice at the road side sounded in the ears of the engineer, who immediately gave the signal to put on all the breaks and stop the train. Hundreds of startled men and women were awakened from their dream of fancied security, and springing from their seats breathlessly inquired, "What is the matter?" And their hearts leaped into their throats, and the blood ran chill, when they were told by the excited conductor that the wind had in its might lifted the long railroad bridge across the stream from its piers and fastenings, and carried it away off on the surging river, and that a few minutes more, and the noble train with all its living, precious freight would, but for that sudden, earnest cry, "The bridge is gone!" have been dragged over the precipitous bank into the black, deep, swift waters! Words were too feeble to express the thanks of those eager and tearful travelers as they crowded about the side of him who had proved their deliverer. And was not he, too, happy?

Years afterwards, when the saved and scattered company that were on board that train sat by their quiet firesides to tell the story of that fearful night, and the almost miraculous escape from instant death, their hearts would throb with gratitude towards God and that solitary watcher, who, when danger threatened them with swift destruction, heeded not the storm, but ran quickly to their rescue, and rang out his friendly warning voice on the midnight air—"The bridge is gone!"

Just so the innumerable multitudes that throng the highway of human life, heedless of peril and staying themselves in seeming safety, are rushing on with hot haste, amid the darkness of nature and time's waning night, towards the precipitous banks of the terrible Jordan of judgment, in the vague expectation that all is well, and that the bridge that "Vain Hope" hath builded to span the awful waters is all right for them, and will bear them in safety over to another and better shore; forgetful of the stern fact that none will ever cross into the Canaan of immortality and glory, save those whose sins are washed away in the atoning blood of the Lamb. The whirlwinds which they have sown have carried their bridge away, and they know it not. Divine mercy, that bridged for Noah the watery chasm which rolled between the world that perished and the world that now is, has for the good alone constructed a safe passage-way over the fiery vortex that lies between this world and that which is to come. All others, like Pharaoh and his hosts, will perish in the avenging flood. And he whose bark goes down then, will never rise again. That is the

"Last night; the long, dark, dark, dark night,
That has no more beyond it, and no star."

How, then, should we who are enlightened, and who stand but a little way from the shore of the awful river, and see the trains of human souls go careering by, cry like the faithful watcher quick, loud and long in their drowsy ears, "The bridge is gone!" And shall we not be culpable, if we can by our feeble voice save even one, and failing to do so, that one through our neglect go down in the blackness of eternal night at last? And if once and forever saved, how will we both sing for joy amid the happy circles of the eternal home, when we remember the earnest note of alarm that stayed the sinner's wild and wayward career.

O watcher on the walls! brave the darkness and the storm, and cry again in the ears of the perishing thousands who rush madly towards ruin, "The bridge is gone!" and if they heed thee not, then fling out the lurid signal of danger, and once more lift thy voice louder yet on the midnight blast, and cry as one that would wake the dead, "The bridge is gone!"

PERSONAL.—Bro. H. Pratt writes from the City Hospital, Rochester, N. Y., that his daughter "improves fast, and will soon be able to return east." This is good news. She has been a great sufferer, but has been wonderfully sustained by the Lord.

The following is from her pen, written in her hours of distress:—

TO THE LOVED ONES AT HOME.

I've been down in the mists by death's river,
Close by where its dark surges roll;
The chill dampness around caused a shiver,
As its billows came over my soul.

It was affliction severe that had brought me
So near to that dark, sullen tide;
'T was God's hand, his voice calling for me,
To bring the stray lamb to his side.

"My Father," I cried, "canst forgive me?"
While fast from my loosening hold
Dropped earth's hopes, now shorn of their lustre;
How I longed to re-enter the fold.

Oh Christ, who once tarried on earth,
To receive each sick, suffering soul;
I believe—I have faith, and am coming
To touch but the "hem" to be whole.

A hand clasped mine in the darkness,—
I saw not the white robes of light;
But it bore me away 'mid pure ether
To the "Eden above" where's no night.

I was left in its wondrous beauty,
Near the river of Life; and I heard
Sweetest music from harps touched by angels,
While the air with strange perfume was stirred.

Beyond in the hallowed radiance,
A mountain, with rills and with fount,
And the voice which is like many waters
Said, "This is my Holy Mount."

Then a sense of my own unworthiness
To enter that blessed abode,
Smote me low to the earth, and the tears
Unchecked and in silence flowed.

What was it sending light, life and gladness,
That with rapture and bliss my soul bathed?
It was the loved voice of Christ saying kindly,
"Daughter, thy faith hath thee saved."

Mine eyes did behold him, our Savior,
He who walked with the children of men,
To bless, heal and save, was his mission,
Oh, I knew how to worship him then!

While pity divine, and love—how complete—
From the sorrow-filled eyes above,
Brooded o'er me, and the words fell tenderly—
"I chasten those whom I love."

The vision has passed. I woke upon earth;
What was sickness or suffering then
But my pathway to Eden? 'Twas proven,
I could welcome it all with—Amen.

Oh, that we all may be purified
By means of this chastening rod;
And be sealed by the angel that comes from the east,
With the "seal of the living God."

THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

The committee on Missions wish to state briefly some facts relating to this mission.

1. The field was a noble one for doing good. Large numbers of the freedmen were without schools, and destitute of the gospel of the kingdom.

2. The gospel was preached there by our agent, to large numbers of the freedmen, and the prophetic word was so expounded to them as to give the clear evidence of the personal coming of Christ at hand. Many of these dear people were converted, and made to rejoice in the blessed hope.

3. Schools were opened also, for the purpose of learning them to read the Bible; first under the care of Misses Bywater, and lately by Bro. Leslie and Sr. Butler. These later efforts were more largely attended and blest, some two hundred attending the schools and the meetings and Sabbath schools.

With the above cheering prospects for usefulness, the Board, unable to hire a suitable place for meeting and school, resolved to build a cheap house, to carry on the school and meetings, and voted money for the object. In the mean time both of our missionaries and teachers were taken sick, and quite disabled from the duties of the mission. In the delay, land rent rose, and material for building also advanced to such a degree that the Board hesitated to go on with the work. In the mean time, the President of the Society was instructed to correspond with Bro. Leslie, our missionary there, and to advise with him as to the practicability of the work; assuring him that the Board had voted to sustain the mission, and would sustain it, if it was a practicable thing. To this Bro. Leslie replied in the following letter, which was written as will be seen in great weakness.

DEAR BRO HIMES:—Yours of the 2d inst. has just reached me; and, although I am hardly able to sit up, I will try to answer it. I will write you at once, and without hesitation, my convictions in regard to going on here.

I now am convinced that it is not the will or purpose of God to have the mission here continued. It is now my opinion that no mission house and chapel, costing what they necessarily must, should be built here; that the shortness of time, and the little amount of good that can be done, will not justify us in doing it. I have had this conviction ever since I made the estimate of the cost of the building; but thought I would let the whole thing turn on the decision of the Board, and whatever that might be, I would consider the direction of God. My mind is now fully made up that we should not stay here any longer.

In the first place, I am not able to go on with the work, being entirely broken down, with no prospect of getting up here for months. In addition to all my former troubles, for the last two months, I have now a diarrhea, which keeps me so weak that I cannot sit up more than half the time, nor walk but a very short distance. Sr. Butler is also in a weak condition, and will not be able to do any thing for some time. This house I now have, I do not suppose I can retain after this month. The owner says he is going to fit it up for a dwelling house, and wanted to begin before this to do it. There is no other building here that I can get, and unless a chapel is built, we therefore cannot stay and go on.

Again, we cannot go on without at least one more teacher, and at a higher salary than what is now given; for both myself and Sr. Butler have run behindhand, and are now owing more than we can pay the Society; for I have had to use the Society's money in my hands to pay our doctor's bills, and pay our way, living in the most abject and humble manner. However, I have done so by the direction of the Treasurer. I have lived here as I never lived before, suffering for the comforts of life, and I now, with all these indications of providence, do not feel it my duty to say that I think we ought to go on. There are other reasons, which I might name, why the house should not be built, which, when I see you, I will tell you.

These convictions have been forced upon me; for I naturally desire, when I attempt to do a thing, to prosecute it, and have a great dislike of giving up. But I cannot and will not allow myself to work against my convictions of God's will. I feel that my work here is done. I shall wait instructions from you. I should like to have you come down if you thought it would pay.

Yours truly, I. I. LESLIE.

It is with hearts of sadness that we relinquish this good work in Memphis. But the friends of the freedmen will see that the Board have done all they could, in connection with the missionaries and teachers, to carry on the work. And now they relinquish it as a matter of duty and necessity. We have "done what we could."

But while we have failed in this field, the Board intend to prosecute the work in other fields, by other agencies, to enlighten the freedmen, and others in the South, on the soon coming of the Savior, and so prepare so many of them as we can reach to meet the Lord in peace.

It is the opinion of the majority of the Board that we shall accomplish more good by the direct proclamation of the gospel, than by schools among the freedmen. Still they stand ready to open schools in any place, where it is practicable, and so apply the funds given them as to meet the wishes of the donors.

It will be seen that the Board have already appointed Elds. Sheldon of Wis., and Hook of N. H., to enter on this work. And they purpose to appoint others as soon as it is practicable so to do.

We ask the prayers of the brethren, that we may be guided aright in this work.

J. V. HIMES,
MILES GRANT,
Committee of the Board on missions and schools.

The above report of the committee, having been read to the Board, was unanimously approved, and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That in harmony with the view of our missionary at Memphis, and believing it to be the will of the Lord, we discontinue our mission at Memphis, Tenn.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER TEN.

BRO. GRANT:—Through the mercy of God, who has sustained and strengthened us, we have been much occupied the past month in the work of our glorious Master, doing what was in our power for the furtherance of his dear cause, by preaching, visiting and writing.

Aug. 12th, we held another general conference at Calmes, near Locle. The Savior, according to his promise, manifested his grace, and we felt the presence of his Spirit in our midst. The pastors of the Baptist churches in the vicinity, and brethren and sisters of different denominations, were present; some from Chaux de Fonds and Fleurier walked a long distance, in order to enjoy the season with us, and felt that it was good to be there. The discussion of Bible truth was conducted under the presidency of Bro. John D. Hanhart, with brotherly love; our hearts being united by the Spirit of God, according to 1 John 1: 7,—"If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." Brn. Ramseyer and Huguenin manifested their charity by a generous hospitality. May the Lord reward them abundantly.

Sunday P. M., Aug. 19th, we visited again the beautiful lake of Neuchatel, near our residence, and baptized three believers (two brothers and one sister) in its clear water, according to the model given by Christ, and followed by his apostles, for the "remission of sins" (Acts 2: 38); the commemoration of the death, burial, and resurrection of our Savior (Rom. 6: 4, 5), and for the resurrection of the saints (1 Cor. 15: 29). Then, after a discourse, which we gave in a large hall in the house we inhabit, Bro. J. D. Hanhart, by the unanimous voice of the council of the church, was set apart for the work of the gospel ministry,—to which he feels called of God,—by prayer and the imposition of hands. Thus consecrated and authorized, we send him, in the name of Christ, to preach the everlasting gospel, and spread abroad the light on the second coming of Christ, administer the ordinances of the Lord's house, and fulfill faithfully all the obligations imposed on him as a minister of the New Testament. We rejoice, and give thanks to our heavenly Father, who has given us this brother beloved as a fellow laborer in our Master's vineyard. May he give us both wisdom and grace, according to our need, that many may be brought to the knowledge of the truth and saved through our instrumentality. And may he raise up more faithful laborers, for truly the work is great and the laborers very few.

Monday morning, Aug. 20th, we left home again for the Canton of Neuchatel, and that day, and the following, walked much, visiting the people, and trying to find a suitable place in which to lecture.

Wednesday, the 22d, we were joined at Auvernier by the Brn. Hanhart, and were favored to obtain the National Temple, though not without difficulty, and gave two lectures there. The Spirit of the Lord was manifested, but Satan hindered our having a longer use of the Temple; and as we could find no other locality, convenient for lectures, we were obliged to suspend them for the present. We therefore left Auvernier, and walked over the mountain to the house of Bro. Wittmer, of Locle, where we had a happy meeting, the Savior being in the midst. Fervent prayers ascended to the throne of grace for the conversion of our European brethren to the truth, and also for America, and for an abundant blessing on the dear brethren and sisters there, who assist us in our labors here. We rejoiced and gave thanks to God for the manifestation of his grace toward several, who have recently resolved to serve God and wait for his Son from heaven.

Leaving Locle, we passed through Chaux de Fonds, where we stopped over night with the brethren, on the way to a new field of labor,—the valley of St. Imier, Canton of Berne,—accompanied by Bro. Hanhart. The results of our labor we will communicate to you in a previous letter. Providence permitting. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters, that, with help from God, we may prepare a people to meet our Lord at his coming, of many nations, tribes and tongues.

Have the kindness, after the receipt of this letter, to send all our papers and correspondence to Saint Blaise, Canton de Neuchatel Suisse, where we have decided, after much examination, to settle our family; that place being much more central for our mission than our present location. The European war has caused considerable derangement in Suisse, as well as the countries adjacent, in industry and commerce, and there is much scarcity of money; and notwithstanding the good will of our friends, they are unable to aid us much at present. We must leave Grandson for Saint Blaise, Canton de Neuchatel Suisse, Oct 1st, and are under the necessity of paying our rent there in advance, and cannot leave here in debt. I am much pained to be under the necessity of writing this, and asking you to be so kind as to forward me 1000 francs at once; for the loss by exchange at present makes the sacrifice great, but I cannot help it. May God bless you all abundantly, and reward you for all your kindness manifested toward Europe. Your faithful brother and servant,

M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

CORRECTIONS.

Bro. Grant:—I have just received a few lines from Bro. Munger, pointing out some corrections he wishes made in his tract,—"Gentile Infidelity," etc., which he wishes you to have inserted in the next number of the Crisis. The reason of this request is, because there is now a large edition of the tract for sale in the Crisis office; and inasmuch as it will be some time before another edition will be printed, this is his only means of pointing out the misprints, which do not rightly convey the ideas he had in his mind when he wrote the tract. The corrections are as follows:

On page 16, line 28, instead of "This king refused eighty-four millions of specie to Pythias the Lydian," it should read, "This king refused to receive eighty-four millions of specie from Pythias the Lydian."

Then on page 18, line 31, instead of "the wicked are not to understood," it should read, "the wicked are not to understand," etc.

Same page, line 34, "understood" should also read "understand," etc.

Then on same page, line 36, the word "understand" should be "understood."

On page 21, lines 29, 30, instead of "Hence that was the generation that was not to pass away until all these things be fulfilled;" it should read, "Hence that generation suffered the curses which Jesus declared should not pass away until all these things shall be fulfilled," etc.

On page 22, line 35, instead of "The signs have been, and are now visibly being fulfilled," it should read, "The signs have been, and will be so visibly fulfilled," etc.

On page 25, line 10, instead of "Now that we have passed the time of the end," it should read, "Now that we are in the time of the end," etc.

On page 29, last line, "present desire" should have been "fervent desire."

I have read this tract with interest, and think Bro. Munger has produced a tract that ought to be brought extensively before the people. For the happy manner in which he illustrates several important points in the doctrines, as taught by Jesus Christ, and his apostles, together with the signs of the times, is well calculated to give important light in that direction. Therefore I deem it a timely publication, worthy of a large circulation.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. M. Weaver.

Dear Friends:—My heart has been made to rejoice since my return from campmeeting, by the witnesses that I have seen stand up for Jesus. O how exceeding sweet do the testimonies of these dear ones sound to me, after being deprived of the privilege of meeting where pilgrims assemble to "exhort one another, and so much the more as" they "see the day approaching."

Some months ago, I think the Lord directed me to mention through the Crisis the cause of truth in Westfield; and in response, Bro. H. Rockwell came among us. He is an old man of seventy-two years; and has had an interesting experience in the things of God. He was the first man that our beloved editor, Bro. Grant, ever heard preach, and also administered the ordinance of baptism to Bro. and Sr. S. G. Mathewson,—all while in the Methodist connection. Bro. Mathewson was subsequently instrumental in leading father Rockwell into the truth concerning man in death.

Well, the few truth-lovers, who have attended our meetings, unite in thanking the Lord that Bro. R. came among us. He has proved "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," and we have seen one Bro. who has had his harp hung on the willows, wake the glad notes of the gospel again. Praise the good Lord for this blessed beginning.

Now, we do not want this little torchlight to die out, so long as time lasteth. And if any of God's servants feel sent this way, and can be small enough to break bread to a few hungry souls, we bid you welcome, male or female, black or white. The spirit of the living God has been with us; and every soul present has acknowledged its presence. I do believe this might be a "drop before a more plentiful shower," if laborers would come in the order of God.

Time is short. How important that we each examine ourselves, and see if every duty has been done between man and man. O, I feel that a clean sweep must be made of all hardness, all bitterness, and that old grudges must be burned out of the heart by the spirit of love. These duties must be attended to before the judgment; else, in that day, the Lord will say, "I never knew you." I do praise God for the possibility of loving our enemies, and praying for those that despitefully use us and persecute us. Praise God for overcoming grace.

In a little while, our troubles will be ended forever, and we be resting from our labors, where tears never flow and death never enters. O the bleeding hearts bereft of earthly friends, how joyful that hour, when death delivers his hir captors. Lord, hasten the time. Amen.

Yours in the gospel,

Maria Mathews Weaver.

Westfield, Mass.

Bro. Henry Pratt, writes from the Rochester City Hospital:—

"After leaving the camp at Wilbraham, where I almost forgot all my afflictions, I went to Hartford, and had a good time with the brethren. Thence to New York, where all hearts seemed to beat in unison at our meeting in Cooper Institute. I never got hoarse preaching in New York, whether at the Institute or Twenty-fourth street. God bless the dear brethren in New York is my prayer.

Albany. Here I met with the old soldiers of the cross, who seem always to obey the new commandment, "Love one another."

Suspension Bridge. Here I met with Bro. R. V. Lyon, at his home, who with me started in the service of God forty-one years ago. We spent our school days in boyhood together in the service of God. While other scholars played, we prayed, and now in the end of time we meet again to praise and pray. I regret that the brethren West are not fully apprised of the fact, that his integrity and christian character suffered not in the least, in the mind of the court, or disinterested spectators, in the judicial trial with his former wife. My own brother, with others of strict integrity, will ever attest to this fact. This is due to Bro. Lyon as well as to those who have been misinformed in this matter.

Quarterly Conference. We were permitted to meet with our brethren in this conference at Darien, and although we held different views on some points, harmony prevailed, and the near coming of Christ seemed the one all-absorbing theme. The book of Revelation has not had that attention in the West that its truths demand. There is a blessing attending the understanding of this book, that needs to be felt to be appreciated. "Blessed is he that readeth."

Brethren came several hundred miles to this meeting, and it was thought to be the best meeting they have ever had. People are hungering for the evidence of Jesus' coming. It seems almost like the famine for the word. How startling the proposed arrangement to make Napoleon the vicar of the Pope—really the vicar, or substitute of Christ! and yet it is just what we have long expected—the antichrist of Scripture—the wonder-doomed power going to perdition."

From Bro. C. F. Sweet.

Bro. Grant:—I very much like, yea, highly approve, the tenor and spirit of your remarks in the Crisis of Sept. 19th, headed "A New Volume," relative to greater forbearance and unfeigned love among us as a people. My heart at times, of late, has almost sunk within me to witness the prevailing want of that very principle; yea, even in our ministers. If a brother is known to differ in some doctrinal point, no matter how conscientiously, and speaks of it, no matter how cautiously, and with kindly feelings and words, towards those differing from him; yet, altho' to all appearance when present, all is forbearance and love, when absent, the unbridled tongue utters bitter words, and evil speaking, charging the innocent with "sowing discord." Now are such things right? are they as they should be? will they help to build up the bleeding cause of Christ? or, rather, are they not subservient to the cause of Satan, making division among honest souls, who love the truth.

Well, if any wish to revile me because I do not see as they do, they can do so, and I will pray the Lord to give me sufficient grace that I may not revile them in retaliation; but with meekness commit my cause to him who will soon judge righteously between us all.

O God, grant us thy assistance, that we may keep the new commandment (John 13: 34), to "love one another," is my most heartfelt prayer.

C. F. Sweet.

From Bro. A. D. Wilkinson.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord has said, "Go and labor in my vineyard. This I am trying to do. Although I am alone, yet I trust in God. He has said that one shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight. I have faith in God, for he has said that "what things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." My one desire is this, that the scales of tradition may fall from the eyes of professors of religion, and let the true light shine in their hearts.

I have scattered those tracts you sent me broadcast through this neighborhood. There are many here that are very much interested in them. I think some of the seed is sown in good ground. I am trying to clear the rubbish out of the way for some of God's ministers to put in the gospel plow, and break up the fallow ground. Who will come and preach the kingdom near at hand? We will do the best we can for you. Come over and help us.

A. D. Wilkinson.

Nankin, Mich.

From Bro. W. Nichols.

Bro. Grant:—I have returned from the conference at Levant, Me. Brn. Dammon, York, Baker, and Leverton were there to preach the word. It was well attended in numbers, and the Spirit of the Lord was there to bless his people, and to give joy and gladness to all who submitted to his do his will. It was a blessed, heavenly time. It was truly a piece of the Wilbraham campmeeting, and God's people looked, acted and praised the Lord just as they did there. Bless the Lord. How my heart feels to bless him for such seasons of pentecostal rejoicings.

The meeting will be continued, and we want the prayers of all who love the Lord, that the fire of God's love, that has been kindled in Maine, may burn until those who have fallen, through the devices of false teachers, may stand on their feet again, and that sinners may turn to the Lord, and find, of a truth, that his mercy endureth forever." Yours truly,

N. Searsport, Me. Walter Nichols.

For the World's Crisis.

REPORT OF THE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE OF W. NEW YORK.

Bro. Grant:—The 6th annual conference held with the church of God at Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., being also "a quarterly meeting of the Christian Conference of Western New York," was held, according to notice, at the Baptist church, near Bro. B. C. Simonds', Sept. 7th, and over the Lord's day following. The rain, however, broke up the meeting Friday evening.

Saturday, Sept., 8th, we met at 9½ A. M., for a social meeting, and had a glorious time. The meeting was opened by Bro. C. B. Turner, who made some very appropriate remarks, founded on John 17th, which were followed by cheering exhortations from the saints, who had come from the four points of the compass, from two to two hundred miles.

Eld. C. F. Sweet also read a letter of commendation in behalf of Bro. A. C. Newell, of Susquehanna, Pa., stating that he was present, and would offer himself for ordination. In view of this recommendation, the following resolution was presented to the conference by Eld. C. B. Turner, which was carried by a unanimous vote:

Resolved, That we receive Bro. Newell into this conference, as a co-laborer in the gospel, and a fit member for ordination.

Two o'clock P. M., preaching by Eld. C. H. Williams, from Heb. 2: 1.

Met again at 6½ P. M., for a social meeting. Had another glorious time. It seemed as though the brethren and sisters were all alive with the hope of soon seeing Jesus. Truly, this is a "lively hope." Preaching at 7½ P. M. by the writer, from Isa. 32: 1.

Sunday, Sept. 9th, met again at 9½ A. M., for social meeting. Interest still on the increase, if possible. Preaching at 10½ by Eld. H. Pratt, of Springfield, Mass., from Rev. 17. It was a very able and impressive discourse, in which he showed that the end of the present dispensation is near.

Preaching again at 2½ P. M., by Eld. C. B. Turner, from 1 Cor. 6: 20, showing the "necessity, nature, and result" of the atonement. After the sermon, we came around the table of the Lord, to commemorate the death and suffering of our dear Redeemer.

Met again at 6½ P. M., for a social meeting. Preaching at 7½ by Bro. H. Pratt, on the battle of the great day of God Almighty; after which the ordination of Bro. A. C. Newell took place.

The ordained preaching brethren at this conference were, Elds. C. F. Sweet, C. B. Turner, H. Pratt, C. W. Low, B. P. Stevens, C. H. Williams, J. Blain, J. W. Taylor, M. Miles, McWilliams and Colegrove. Unordained, A. C. Newell, J. Allen, and D. Cogswell.

It was said by many that this conference was the best ever held in the State. Although conflicting elements were present, which we must expect at such a gathering, yet it could be truly said, "The unity of the Spirit" was kept "in the bond of peace." We parted with the hope of soon meeting in our Eden home.

> "From Burmah's shores, from Afric's strand,
> From India's burning plain;
> From Europe, from Columbia's land,
> We hope to meet again.
>
> No lingering look, no parting sigh,
> Our future meeting knows;
> There friendship beams from every eye,
> And hope immortal grows."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Steamer.

The Eastern question again claims considerable attention. Continental journals state that it is no longer the insurrection in Candia alone which causes uneasiness to the Porte, but that movements are beginning in Eperius and the islands of Chios and Cyprus.

The mortality from famine in India continued unabated.

Advices by the City of London indicate much damage to the crops throughout England owing to the wet weather. Similar reports come from France and Germany, where the crops are also short. The harvest in Russia, however, has been abundant, and heavy orders for grain have been sent there.

The number of deaths from cholera in London had greatly diminished. The disease still prevails in various parts of England.

The 15th of September was the second anniversary of the Paris Convention for the evacuation of Rome, and the London Times says it is understood that the evacuation will be completed by Dec 9th. Meanwhile the so-called Franco-Pontifical legion, 1200 men, was to embark on the 13th, at Antibes, for Civita Vecchia, on board a French steamer. As the General in command at Rome objects to his French troops being brought into contact with these new Pope's soldiers, the legion would be sent to Viterbo, in spite of strong remonstrances from that place.

Cable Dispatches.

Berlin, Sept. 19. The abdication of Ludwig, King of Bavaria, is now regarded certain.

Trieste, Sept. 19. A great battle has been fought in the Island of Candia between the Turks and insurrectionists. The Turks were the victors.

London, Sept. 26. Some troops are to be sent to Canada. The steamer Hanse has been engaged to take about one thousand.

Rome, Sept. 27. The Empress is here on a visit to the Pope.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Sept. 26. The Tribune's Leavenworth dispatch of the 25th says information from Forts Laramie and Reno and Big Horn river states that 150 whites were killed by the Indians. The road from Laramie to Powder river is filled with the graves of the murdered men. A whole train was murdered on the Big Horn river. Numbers of men and women have also been killed. The Indians have become emboldened by unchecked success and defy the military. Red Cloud, the principal Chief at the Laramie peace treaty, has taken the war path. A band of Arapahoes attacked another train on the Big Horn, killed seven men, stole all the stock and compelled the people to stop traveling.

Scouts from Fort Reno report that the Sioux and Cheyennes attacked that post and carried away all their stock.

Reports state that a train of 260 wagons on the road fought the Sioux and Cheyennes all the way from Fort Laramie to Reno, losing twenty-two men killed and a great deal of stock.

Thirty-nine men had been killed on the Big Horn river. The Indians are well armed and equipped.

Fort Laramie, Sept. 26. Advices received to-day from Fort Philip Kearney states that the Indians are very troublesome, stealing stock and attacking small parties. On the 12th they captured a government herd of mules and wounded two of the guard. On the 14th Private Johnson and Ridgeway Glover, an artist for Frank Leslie's paper, were killed and badly mutilated. They attempted to capture the pickets near the Fort, but were driven off with the loss of two killed.

Two men of Bailey's mining party, while hunting, were killed after severe loss to the Indians.

Reports from Fort Smith, Dakota, state that there are five hundred lodges of Sioux Indians in Tongue River Valley, all hostile. They are determined that the new road to Montana shall not be traveled.

Government stock was stolen at Platt Bridge, Dakota, to-day.

New York, Sept. 25. The Tribune's special New Orleans dispatch of the 24th states that a detachment of troops, under command of Capt. Tripper, were fired upon by an Arkansian, who was not aware the war was over.

Official information received from Benham, Texas, shows that place to be in a state of insurrection. The citizens are all armed, and patrol the streets to prevent the soldiers from coming into the town. The mayor or Sheriff is reported to have telegraphed to the Adjutant General of the State to know how many men he could furnish to drive the Yankees off. A reply is said to have been received offering 500 well men, and more if necessary. The officer in command of the detachment of U. S. troops, numbering about 60 men, has intrenched and otherwise fortified his position. After receiving a large supply of ammunition from Galveston he expressed confidence in being able to withstand an attack.

Gen. Sheridan left for the scene of action this morning.

New York, Sept. 25. A Toronto special of yesterday says orders have been given to the whole force of the city to muster at given points on the first alarm of fire, to be accoutered with forty rounds of ball cartridges. An attempt to burn or capture the city is feared. Large quantities of military stores, including ambulances, are arriving here. The regular troops and volunteers are continually moving hither and thither. A yacht was seized today, and her crew of three men arrested on suspicion of being Fenians. A small quantity of ammunition was found on board.

An Ottawa (C. W.) dispatch says Cabinet meetings of the Canadian government are being held daily in Quebec, the subject discussed being the military condition of the province, the confederation, and failure of the of Upper Canada.

Much insecurity is felt in financial circles. The Fenians are said to be assembling for an invasion at Higate. Large quantities of military stores are being received at Toronto and Montreal, and sent to the western portion of the province.

Toronto, C. W., Sept. 27. Several regiments both of regulars and volunteers have been ordered into camp at St. Johns, near the Vermont line. All government employes in the different departments have been enrolled into the civil service regiment. The General Orders issued will be carried into effect in event of the volunteer militia being called out.

New York, Sept. 27. A Troy dispatch of the 26th says cholera has broken out with fearful violence in the vicinity of North Adams, Mass. There have been eight cases and five deaths, within 22 hours. The following deaths have occurred at Briggsville, a factory village located 1½ miles north of North Adams, and numbering about 150 inhabitants. A girl named Gulliland, George Mogul, two boys named Goiks, and Mr. Brown. Two cases in North Adams, Miss Brachett and Miss Buckly, have nearly recovered. One case at Blackinton is also recovering.

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Sept. 25. It is reported upon good authority that a large number of Fenians are concentrating in Northern Vermont for a raid upon Canada. Considerable excitement exists in those counties which border on the Canadian line.

New York, Sept. 26. The Herald publishes a secret treaty between Brazil, Buenos Ayres and Uruguay to overthrow the present legal authority in Paraguay and destroy the sovereignty, independence and integrity of that country. Bolivia, Peru and Chili have been aroused by the act to an indignant protest.

The Halifax Arcadian Recorder understands that instructions came out in the last packet from England to the Imperial authorities at Halifax to push forward the work on the fortifications around and about Halifax with all possible dispatch.

From South America.—New York, Sept. 20. The steamer North America brings Rio Janeiro papers to Aug. 25.

Advices from the Platte report fighting of a most stubborn and sanguinary character on the 16th and 18th of July, causing a loss of 4200 in killed and wounded to the Allied armies an approximate amount to the Paraguayan army, the latter fighting chiefly in intrenchments, and consequently losing less. The affair arose from the determination of the Allies to dislodge the Paraguayans from a position they were fortifying on a hill, which would have enabled them to endanger the Allied left and rear. The Paraguayans were surprised and driven out at daybreak of the 16th by a brigade of Brazilians, after a short fight. The victors then advanced to assault the Paraguayan works in the rear, but were received with such force that they were obliged to abandon the attempt and confine themselves to the defence of the work they had taken. This was successfully done, notwithstanding two fierce attacks by the Paraguayans and the storm of missiles poured on the ground, but the victors suffered a considerable loss, and the troops under fire were relieved several times during the day.

The Paraguayans continued up to the 16th to send down torpedoes, and on the 14th and 15th explosions occurred so near the leading vessel of the Allied fleet as to shake her severely. A boat was blown up and eight persons killed.

The second Brazilian army, 9000 strong, under Ponto Alegere, had been incorporated with the Allied forces. Two or three thousand convalescents had also joined.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Bro. H. A. Brown—I am not able to answer your inquiry.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 574. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

CORRECTIONS.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just received a few lines from Bro. Munger, pointing out some corrections he wishes made in his tract,—"Gentile Infidelity," etc., which he wishes you to have inserted in the next number of the Crisis. The reason of this request is, because there is now a large edition of the tract for sale in the Crisis office; and inasmuch as it will be some time before another edition will be printed, this is his only means of pointing out the misprints, which do not rightly convey the ideas he had in his mind when he wrote the tract. The corrections are as follows:

On page 16, line 26, instead of "This king refused eighty-four millions of specie to Pythias the Lydian," it should read, "This king refused to receive eighty-four millions of specie from Pythias the Lydian."

Then on page 18, line 31, instead of "the wicked are not to understood," it should read, "the wicked are not to understand," etc.

Same page, line 34, "understood" should also read "understand," etc.

Then on same page, line 36, the word "understand" should be "understood."

On page 21, lines 29, 30, instead of "Hence that was the generation that was not to pass away until all these things be fulfilled;" it should read, "Hence that generation suffered the curses which Jesus declared should not pass away until all these things shall be fulfilled," etc.

On page 22, line 35, instead of "The signs have been, and are now visibly being fulfilled," it should read, "The signs have been, and will be so visibly fulfilled," etc.

On page 25, line 10, instead of "Now that we have passed the time of the end," it should read, "Now that we are in the time of the end," etc.

On page 29, last line, "present desire" should have been "fervent desire."

I have read this tract with interest, and think Bro. Munger has produced a tract that ought to be brought extensively before the people. For the happy manner in which he illustrates several important points in the doctrines, as taught by Jesus Christ, and his apostles, together with the signs of the times, is well calculated to give important light in that direction. Therefore I deem it a timely publication, worthy of a large circulation.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. M. Weaver.

DEAR FRIENDS:—My heart has been made to rejoice since my return from campmeeting, by the witnesses that I have seen stand up for Jesus. O how exceeding sweet do the testimonies of these dear ones sound to me, after being deprived of the privilege of meeting where pilgrims assemble to "exhort one another, and so much the more as" they "see the day approaching."

Some months ago, I think the Lord directed me to mention through the Crisis the cause of truth in Westfield; and in response, Bro. H. Rockwell came among us. He is an old man of seventy-two years; and has had an interesting experience in the things of God. He was the first man that our beloved editor, Bro. Grant, ever heard preach, and also administered the ordinance of baptism to Bro. and Sr. S. O. Mathewson,—all while in the Methodist connection. Bro. Mathewson was subsequently instrumental in leading father Rockwell into the truth concerning man in death.

Well, the few truth-lovers, who have attended our meetings, unite in thanking the Lord that Bro. R. came among us. He has proved "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," and we have seen one Bro. who has had his harp hung on the willows, wake the glad notes of the gospel again. Praise the good Lord for this blessed beginning.

Now, we do not want this little torchlight to die out, so long as time lasteth. And if any of God's servants feel sent this way, and can be small enough to break bread to a few hungry souls, we bid you welcome, male or female, black or white. The spirit of the living God has been with us; and every soul present has acknowledged its presence. I do believe this might be a "drop before a more plentiful shower," if laborers would come in the order of God.

Time is short. How important that we each examine ourselves, and see if every duty has been done between man and man. O, I feel that a clean sweep must be made of all hardness, all bitterness, and that old grudges must be burned out of the heart by the spirit of love. These duties must be attended to before the judgment; else, in that day, the Lord will say, "I never knew you." I do praise God for the possibility of loving our enemies, and praying for those that despitefully use us and persecute us. Praise God for overcoming grace.

In a little while, our troubles will be ended forever, and we be resting from our labors, where tears never flow and death never enters. O the bleeding hearts bereft of earthly friends, how joyful that hour, when death delivers his captors. Lord, hasten the time. Amen.

Yours in the gospel,

MARIA MATHEWS WEAVER.

Westfield, Mass.

BRO. HENRY PRATT, writes from the Rochester City Hospital:—

"After leaving the camp at Wilbraham, where I almost forgot all my afflictions, I went to Hartford, and had a good time with the brethren. Thence to New York, where all hearts seemed to beat in unison at our meeting in Cooper Institute. I never got hoarse preaching in New York, whether at the Institute or Twenty-fourth street. God bless the dear brethren in New York is my prayer.

ALBANY. Here I met with the old soldiers of the cross, who seem always to obey the new commandment, "Love one another."

SUSPENSION BRIDGE. Here I met with Bro. R. V. Lyon, at his home, who with me started in the service of God forty-one years ago. We spent our school days in boyhood together in the service of God. While other scholars played, we prayed, and now in the end of time we meet again to praise and pray. I regret that the brethren West are not fully apprised of the fact, that his integrity and christian character suffered not in the least, in the mind of the court, or disinterested spectators, in the judicial trial with his former wife. My own brother, with others of strict integrity, will ever attest to this fact. This is due to Bro. Lyon as well as to those who have been misinformed in this matter.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE. We were permitted to meet with our brethren in this conference at Darien, and although we held different views on some points, harmony prevailed, and the near coming of Christ seemed the one all-absorbing theme. The book of Revelation has not had that attention in the West that its truths demand. There is a blessing attending the understanding of this book, that needs to be felt to be appreciated. "Blessed is he that readeth."

Brethren came several hundred miles to this meeting, and it was thought to be the best meeting they have ever had. People are hungering for the evidence of Jesus' coming. It seems almost like the famine for the word. How startling the proposed arrangement to make Napoleon the vicar of the Pope—really the vicar, or substitute of Christ! and yet it is just what we have long expected—the antichrist of Scripture—the wonder-doomed power going to perdition."

From Bro. C. F. Sweet.

BRO. GRANT:—I very much like, yes, highly approve, the tenor and spirit of your remarks in the Crisis of Sept. 19th, headed "A NEW VOLUME," relative to greater forbearance and unfeigned love among us as a people. My heart at times, of late, has almost sunk within me to witness the prevailing want of that very principle; yes, even in our ministers. If a brother is known to differ in some doctrinal point, no matter how conscientiously, and speaks of it, no matter how cautiously, and with kindly feelings and words, towards those differing from him; yet, altho' to all appearance when present, all is forbearance and love, when absent, the unbridled tongue utters bitter words, and evil speaking, charging the innocent with "sowing discord." Now are such things right? are they as they should be? will they help to build up the bleeding cause of Christ? or, rather, are they not subservient to the cause of Satan, making division among honest souls, who love the truth.

Well, if any wish to revile me because I do not see as they do, they can do so, and I will pray the Lord to give me sufficient grace that I may not revile them in retaliation; but with meekness commit my cause to him who will soon judge righteously between us all.

O God, grant us thy assistance, that we may keep the new commandment (John 13: 34), to "love one another," is my most heartfelt prayer.

C. F. SWEET.

From Bro. A. D. Wilkinson.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord has said, "Go and labor in my vineyard. This I am trying to do. Although I am alone, yet I trust in God. He has said that one shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight. I have faith in God, for he has said that "what things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." My one desire is this, that the scales of tradition may fall from the eyes of professors of religion, and let the true light shine in their hearts.

I have scattered those tracts you sent me broadcast through this neighborhood. There are many here that are very much interested in them. I think some of the seed is sown in good ground. I am trying to clear the rubbish out of the way for some of God's ministers to put in the gospel plow, and break up the fallow ground. Who will come and preach the kingdom near at hand? We will do the best we can for you. Come over and help us.

A. D. WILKINSON.

Nankin, Mich.

From Bro. W. Nichols.

BRO. GRANT:—I have returned from the conference at Levant, Me. Brn. Dammon, York, Baker, and Leverton were there to preach the word. It was well attended in numbers, and the Spirit of the Lord was there to bless his people, and to give joy and gladness to all who submitted to his do his will. It was a blessed, heavenly time. It was truly a piece of the Wilbraham campmeeting, and God's people looked, acted and praised the Lord just as they did there. Bless the Lord. How my heart feels to bless him for such seasons of pentecostal rejoicings.

The meeting will be continued, and we want the prayers of all who love the Lord, that the fire of God's love, that has been kindled in Maine, may burn until those who have fallen, through the devices of false teachers, may stand on their feet again, and that sinners may turn to the Lord, and find, of a truth, that his mercy endureth forever." Yours truly,

N. Searsport, Me. WALTER NICHOLS.

For the World's Crisis.

REPORT OF THE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE OF W. NEW YORK.

BRO. GRANT:—The fifth annual conference held with the church of God at Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., being also "a quarterly meeting of the Christian Conference of Western New York," was held, according to notice, at the Baptist church, near Bro. B. C. Simonds', Sept. 7th, and over the Lord's day following. The rain, however, broke up the meeting Friday evening.

Saturday, Sept., 8th, we met at 9½ A. M., for a social meeting, and had a glorious time. The meeting was opened by Bro. C. B. Turner, who made some very appropriate remarks, founded on John 17th, which were followed by cheering exhortations from the saints, who had come from the four points of the compass, from two to two hundred miles.

Eld. C. F. Sweet also read a letter of commendation in behalf of Bro. A. C. Newell, of Susquehanna, Pa., stating that he was present, and would offer himself for ordination. In view of this recommendation, the following resolution was presented to the conference by Eld. C. B. Turner, which was carried by a unanimous vote:

Resolved, That we receive Bro. Newell into this conference, as a co-laborer in the gospel, and a fit member for ordination.

Two o'clock P. M., preaching by Eld. C. H. Williams, from Heb. 2: 1.

Met again at 6½ P. M., for a social meeting. Had another glorious time. It seemed as though the brethren and sisters were all alive with the hope of soon seeing Jesus. Truly, this is a "lively hope." Preaching at 7½ P. M. by the writer, from Isa. 32: 1.

Sunday, Sept. 9th, met again at 9½ A. M., for social meeting. Interest still on the increase, if possible. Preaching at 10½ by Eld. H. Pratt, of Springfield, Mass., from Rev. 17. It was a very able and impressive discourse, in which he showed that the end of the present dispensation is near.

Preaching again at 2½ P. M., by Eld. C. B. Turner, from 1 Cor. 6: 20, showing the "necessity, nature, and result" of the atonement. After the sermon, we came around the table of the Lord, to commemorate the death and suffering of our dear Redeemer.

Met again at 6½ P. M., for a social meeting. Preaching at 7½ by Bro. H. Pratt, on the battle of the great day of God Almighty; after which the ordination of Bro. A. C. Newell took place.

The ordained preaching brethren at this conference were, Elds. C. F. Sweet, C. B. Turner, H. Pratt, C. W. Low, B. P. Stevens, C. H. Williams, J. Blain, J. W. Taylor, M. Miles, McWilliams and Colegrove. Unordained, A. C. Newell, J. Allen, and D. Cogswell.

It was said by many that this conference was the best ever held in the State. Although conflicting elements were present, which we must expect at such a gathering, yet it could be truly said, "The unity of the Spirit" was kept "in the bond of peace." We parted with the hope of soon meeting in our Eden home.

"From Burmah's shores, from Afric's strand,
From India's burning plain;
From Europe, from Columbia's land,
We hope to meet again.

No lingering look, no parting sigh,
Our future meeting knows;
There friendship beams from every eye,
And hope immortal grows."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per Steamer.

The Eastern question again claims considerable attention. Continental journals state that it is no longer the insurrection in Candia alone which causes uneasiness to the Porte, but that movements are beginning in Eperius and the islands of Chios and Cyprus.

The mortality from famine in India continued unabated.

Advices by the City of London indicate much damage to the crops throughout England owing to the wet weather. Similar reports come from France and Germany, where the crops also are short. The harvest in Russia, however, has been abundant, and heavy orders for grain have been sent there.

The number of deaths from cholera in London had greatly diminished. The disease still prevails in various parts of England.

The 15th of September was the second anniversary of the Paris Convention for the evacuation of Rome, and the London Times says it is understood that the evacuation will be completed by Dec 9th. Meanwhile the so-called Franco-Pontifical legion, 1200 men, was to embark on the 13th, at Antibes, for Civita Vecchia, on board a French steamer. As the General in command at Rome objects to his French troops being brought into contact with these new Pope's soldiers, the legion would be sent to Viterbo, in spite of strong remonstrances from that place.

Cable Dispatches.

Berlin, Sept. 19. The abdication of Ludwig, King of Bavaria, is now regarded certain.

Trieste, Sept. 19. A great battle has been fought in the Island of Candia between the Turks and insurrectionists. The Turks were the victors.

London, Sept. 26. Some troops are to be sent to Canada. The steamer Hansa has been engaged to take about one thousand.

Rome, Sept. 27. The Empress is here on a visit to the Pope.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Sept. 26. The Tribune's Leavenworth dispatch of the 25th says information from Forts Laramie and Reno and Big Horn river states that 150 whites were killed by the Indians. The road from Laramie to Powder river is filled with the graves of the murdered men. A whole train was murdered on the Big Horn river. Numbers of men and women have also been killed. The Indians have become emboldened by unchecked success and defy the military. Red Cloud, the principal Chief at the Laramie peace treaty, has taken the war path. A band of Arapahoes attacked another train on the Big Horn, killed seven men, stole all the stock and compelled the people to stop traveling.

Scouts from Fort Reno report that the Sioux and Cheyennes attacked that post and carried away all their stock.

Reports state that a train of 250 wagons on the road fought the Sioux and Cheyennes all the way from Fort Laramie to Reno, losing twenty-two men killed and a great deal of stock.

Thirty-nine men had been killed on the Big Horn river. The Indians are well armed and equipped.

Fort Laramie, Sept. 26. Advices received to-day from Fort Philip Kearney states that the Indians are very troublesome, stealing stock and attacking small parties. On the 12th they captured a government herd of mules and wounded two of the guard. On the 14th Private Johnson and Ridgeway Glover, an artist for Frank Leslie's paper, were killed and badly mutilated. They attempted to capture the pickets near the Fort, but were driven off with the loss of two killed.

Two men of Bailey's mining party, while hunting, were killed after severe loss to the Indians.

Reports from Fort Smith, Dokota, state that there are five hundred lodges of Sioux Indians in Tongue River Valley, all hostile. They are determined that the new road to Montana shall not be traveled.

Government stock was stolen at Platt Bridge, Dakota, to-day.

New York, Sept. 25. The Tribune's special New Orleans dispatch of the 24th states that a detachment of troops, under command of Capt. Tripper, were fired upon by an Arkansian, who was not aware the war was over.

Official information received from Benham, Texas, shows that place to be in a state of insurrection. The citizens are all armed, and patrol the streets to prevent the soldiers from coming into the town. The mayor or Sheriff is reported to have telegraphed to the Adjutant General of the State to know how many men he could furnish to drive the Yankees off. A reply is said to have been received offering 500 well men, and more if necessary. The officer in command of the detachment of U. S. troops, numbering about 60 men, has intrenched and otherwise fortified his position. After receiving a large supply of ammunition from Galveston he expressed confidence in being able to withstand an attack.

Gen. Sheridan left for the scene of action this morning.

New York, Sept. 25. A Toronto special of yesterday says orders have been given to the whole force of the city to muster at given points on the first alarm of fire, to be accoutered with forty rounds of ball cartridges. An attempt to burn or capture the city is feared. Large quantities of military stores, including ambulances, are arriving here. The regular troops and volunteers are continually moving hither and thither. A yacht was seized today, and her crew of three men arrested on suspicion of being Fenians. A small quantity of ammunition was found on board.

An Ottawa (C. W.) dispatch says Cabinet meetings of the Canadian government are being held daily in Quebec, the subject discussed being the military condition of the province, the confederation, and failure of the of Upper Canada.

Much insecurity is felt in financial circles. The Fenians are said to be assembling for an invasion at Higate. Large quantities of military stores are being received at Toronto and Montreal, and sent to the western portion of the province.

Toronto, C. W., Sept. 27. Several regiments both of regulars and volunteers have been ordered into camp at St. Johns, near the Vermont line. All government employes in the different departments have been enrolled into the civil service regiment. The General Orders issued will be carried into effect in event of the volunteer militia being called out.

New York, Sept. 27. A Troy dispatch of the 26th says cholera has broken out with fearful violence in the vicinity of North Adams, Mass. There have been eight cases and five deaths, within 22 hours. The following deaths have occurred at Brigsville, a factory village located 1½ miles north of North Adams, and numbering about 150 inhabitants. A girl named Guilland, George Mogul, two boys named Goiks, and Mr. Brown. Two cases in North Adams, Miss Brochett and Miss Buckly, have nearly recovered. One case at Blackinton is also recovering.

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Sept. 25. It is reported upon good authority that a large number of Fenians are concentrating in Northern Vermont for a raid upon Canada. Considerable excitement exists in those counties which border on the Canadian line.

New York, Sept. 26. The Herald publishes a secret treaty between Brazil, Buenos Ayres and Uruguay to overthrow the present legal authority in Paraguay and destroy the sovereignty, independence and integrity of that country. Bolivia, Peru and Chili have been aroused by the act to an indignant protest.

The Halifax Arcadian Recorder understands that instructions came out in the last packet from England to the Imperial authorities at Halifax to push forward the work on the fortifications around and about Halifax with all possible dispatch.

FROM SOUTH AMERICA.—New York, Sept. 20. The steamer North America brings Rio Janeiro papers to Aug. 25.

Advices from the Platte report fighting of a most stubborn and sanguinary character on the 16th and 18th of July, causing a loss of 4200 in killed and wounded to the Allied armies an approximate amount to the Paraguayan army, the latter fighting chiefly in intrenchments, and consequently losing less. The affair arose from the determination of the Allies to dislodge the Paraguayans from a position they were fortifying on a hill, which would have enabled them to endanger the Allied left and rear. The Paraguayans were surprised and driven out at daybreak of the 16th by a brigade of Brazilians, after a short fight. The victors then advanced to assault the Paraguayan works in the rear, but were received with such force that they were obliged to abandon the attempt and confine themselves to the defense of the work they had taken. This was successfully done, notwithstanding two fierce attacks by the Paraguayans and the storm of missiles poured on the ground, but the victors suffered a considerable loss, and the troops under fire were relieved several times during the day.

The Paraguayans continued up to the 18th to send down torpedoes, and on the 14th and 15th explosions occurred so near the leading vessel of the Allied fleet as to shake her severely. A boat was blown up and eight persons killed.

The second Brazilian army, 9000 strong, under Ponto Alegere, had been incorporated with the Allied forces. Two or three thousand convalescents had also joined.

To Brethren in Conn.

The cause of God seems to demand that a conference be held in Central or Western Conn. After prayer and consultation, it is decided that such a conference be held in Yalesville, Ct., to commence either the 18th or 24th of Oct. At which time the new Advent chapel will be dedicated. Full particulars as to the exact time, etc., next week. Yalesville is situated on the Hartford and New Haven R. R., thirteen miles from N. H., and about fifteen from Hartford. We hope the Brn. and Srs. will make an extra effort to attend this meeting, as it is expected then to organize a permanent conference to meet in different localities until the Lord comes.

Conference at Corinna Mills.

There will be a conference at Corinna Mills, Me., to commence Oct. 10th, at evening, and continue over Lord's day. Bro. Charles Goodrich, Bro. Whitehead, and others, are expected to preach. We hope brethren living in adjacent towns will be interested in this meeting. Come, dear brethren, and labor for the salvation of souls. Call on Bro. Daniel G. Smith, Benj. More, and I. Dammon.

In behalf of the brethren, I. DAMMON.

Dedication.

At Knowlesville, Orleans Co., N. Y., commencing Saturday, Oct. 6th, at 10½ o'clock, and continue over the following Sunday. Let there be a good turnout of brothers and sisters from the surrounding country. Come prepared to work for the Lord, for the Lord is doing a good work in this place, and the brethren have built a comfortable house of worship. Bro. H. Pratt will help preach the word.

C. B. TURNER.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 574. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

JESUS LOVES ME.

Jesus loves me, O I feel it,
Loves me with unchanging love;
To my heart he doth reveal it,
Peace descends from God above.

I love Jesus, O the fullness
Of the love for him I feel;
Language—words seem only dullness,
When my love I would reveal.

Precious Jesus, blessed Savior,
I am his, and he is mine;
Owned and blessed as his forever,
All for Christ I do resign.

He is coming, soon I'll meet him;
Soon he'll bring me to my home;
O my longing heart would greet him;
Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come.

For the World's Crisis.

BRO. J. PORTER'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

Bro. Grant:—As you are favored with so many "Wayside Notes," and "Notes by the Way," suffer me to drop a few words from the other side of the Atlantic. I left Quebec on the 14th of July, for Scotland, and landed at Glasgow on the 27th. From a message I sent to the captain on board, I was requested by him to preach to the crew and passengers on both Lord's days, when, no doubt, strange things were brought to their ears on the second coming of Christ, and his personal reign on the earth.

I found these doctrines to be as new to the people of Scotland as was Jesus and the resurrection at Athens. The same day that I landed, I took a train for Aberdeen, the place of my destination, one hundred and fifty-six miles through a country in the highest state of cultivation. On some farms there were not less than twenty acres of turnips. The railroad fences are thorn hedges, hundreds of miles long, planted in a row, so closely that a rabbit only might pass through. They are grown up about four feet high, and cropped with hedge shears. They are bushy, and pleasing to the eye. Within these hedges, and at every station (and these are numerous, as may be expected in a country of wealth and population), the ground around the building may be seen dressed off in the most tasteful style, ornamented with stones, and flowers of the rarest quality and most paradisaical in appearance; and sometimes the name of the station is either cut in the grass on the bank, or studded with stones of rare color. Upon inquiry, I was told that premiums were awarded to those who excelled. The roads are superior in smoothness, and the travel in velocity, to any thing I have seen in America; but the cars and management upon these roads are one hundred and fifty per cent. below par in this age of progress.

In the evening I arrived at the home of my brother and sister, whom I had not seen for the last thirty-four years. We were young men when we parted. When we met on the floor, for some moments we gazed upon each other in silence. The tear started, and the language of each heart was, Ah, how changed! After retracing past history, and talking over domestic affairs, as might be expected, it was not my least inquiry, if in this large city there were any of like precious faith with myself. My brother is an old stereotyped Methodist, whom I had gathered within the pale of Methodism fifty years since; but notwithstanding a strong epistolary correspondence, I had not, up to this time, been able to gather him out into a warmer clime, and under a more genial sun. I have since suspected that he was of opinion that an unpardonable sin would not be committed if he could keep me in the background in regard to a knowledge of my brethren, and seat me again in the Longacre chapel, where I had sat for many years. But his wife, a woman of more artless simplicity, put me on the track to a Mr. Mowatt, whom I shortly found to be one of the excellent of the earth, sound in the faith once delivered to the saints,—the state of the dead and end of the wicked, the coming of the Lord at hand, and the kingdom of God upon the earth, and the fulfillment of the promise to the literal seed of Abraham. They are cardinal doctrines with this body of believers. It was beyond my expectation to find such rare flowers in this northern region; but whatever eccentricities some may attribute to Dr. Thomas, this body, as well as a number more throughout Scotland, is indebted to his labors for light on revelation.

I next started for Stuartfield, a country village, twenty-seven miles north of Aberdeen, where I resided for the last three years previous to my leaving for America. Here I hired the village hall for two evenings, and put up and circulated printed notices for lectures in the evening. This day I attended a very large annual meeting of a branch of the Edinburgh Bible Society. Nine or ten Rev. gentlemen were present, who are going to put a Bible into the hand of every son of Adam, and the world is shortly to be flooded with righteousness. Well, thought I, here are nine or ten blind guides of the people, and if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch. By permission, I spoke a few words, announced my meeting for the evening, and left. I took for my subject "the signs of the times among the nations of Europe," etc., and the coming of the day of the Lord right upon us. I had a good hearing from the heads of families and my old acquaintances.

Next day, I called upon the Congregational minister, and found him very much dissatisfied with my course. He asked what was to be my subject that evening, and said his prayer-meeting would be at the same hour, and that I had insulted the Rev. gentlemen yesterday by coming there to publish my meeting (he being one of the number). He then asked if I were not a "Thomasite"? No, sir, I am a Bibleite; but if I must take a name, which I had rather not, I am a Pre-millennial Adventist. His wife was present, and seemed desirous to know what that was, and so I told her that the coming of the Lord would be before the Millennium. He then brought up the never-to-be-forgotten odium against us in America, that we had set times for the coming of Christ, and had been disappointed; and as proof of our folly and ignorance, quoted that passage of Scripture found on the tongue of every school-boy in America, and said that we had furnished ourselves with "white robes" in which to go up to meet the Lord, and, as might be expected, got disappointed. Well, sir, we did get disappointed, but have not you and your brethren been equally so? Have not you, and thousands more of your brethren, [illegible] 1866 for the conversion of the world, and [illegible] than it did three hundred years ago? Look into the nations of Europe, and [illegible] expectations, but you, sir, never; because you have not one solitary promise to that effect from Genesis to the amen of Revelations, but much to the contrary. And as for "white robes," just listen to me a moment. A Rev. gentleman who resides in the same village with me, who is in the pay and employ of the Sabbath School mission, and travels through Canada, at one of their anniversary meetings in Montreal, wishing to make a spread, and astonish his hearers by something marvellous, did so, not only at our expense, but what was worse, at the expense of truth, by telling about the people of some place in his travels, that were once called "The kingdom come," but now were called, "The devil's kingdom;" and that on a certain day the people put on their white robes to go up to meet the Lord in. It so happened that this Rev. gentleman's ebullition was published in the Montreal Witness, the organ of the body to which he belonged. I sat down and wrote an article, which was published in one of our county papers, giving the gentleman a fair chance to make money; pledging myself for the payment of $10, for every such case of a white robe he could substantiate; and that in case of failure, I should exact no other penalty than that he should enter his closet twice each day, for one week, and read two portions from his Bible, one from Psalms, "the slander shall be cut off;" the other from Revelations, "All liars shall have their part," etc. I have heard nothing from the author since.

The next attack of my inquisitor,—"Do you deny the immortality of the soul?" I don't know how he got hold of this, but my reply was, I do, sir, to all intents and purposes, as unscriptural, irrational, and big with the most fatal consequences to man, and the prolific root of all the religious error in the world, from Paganism to Popery, and from Popery to Protestantism; and I wonder how any man, or body of men, would dare to propagate a doctrine upon which the Scriptures were not only profoundly silent, but diametrically opposed; besides setting aside God's whole plan of redemption, as predicated upon the mortality of man.

By this time, my Rev. friend became rather crusty, and bluntly accused me of unsoundness on the atonement. I asked him, did he believe that Christ died? He said, Yes, the human nature died. Then, sir, you have a human sacrifice, and I have a divine; for I believe Paul when he says, "Christ died;" also Jesus to John in Patmos, "I am He that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore." Temper now gave way, and as I was standing on the floor, he seemed inclined to show me the nearest road to the door, which he did without much ceremony. I told him on leaving, that I did not recollect of ever being treated before so uncourteously by any christian minister.

I next called upon all in the village of my former acquaintance, and conversed freely with them upon the cardinal doctrines of our christianity, and all had ears to hear and a heart to understand: and some that were sick and bowing down to the grave, were cheered beyond expectation, while I told them of a day not far in the future, when the Lord would change their poor, frail body, and fashion it like unto his glorious body.

My subject that evening, as might be supposed, was "the conversion of the world by the iron rod." I brought forward all the passages usually quoted to sustain the "fable," and exposed to view those who handle the word of God deceitfully. Those who failed to note them, called upon me next morning to be supplied with the list. O how I should like to sit down in this village, for at least three or four months, surrounded as it is by so many "masters in Israel." I prayed with a number, distributed some choice tracts, where I believed they would do good, leaving a good impression behind, I bid them farewell in the Lord, and so returned to Aberdeen.

My brother and sister, who are jealous over my every absent hour, had a message from Bro. Mowatt, requesting that I should speak in the Music Hall to the church and congregation at 10 o'clock A. M., on the approaching Lord's day. My brother, up to this time, had labored hard to recover me from my heresy, but was desirous to hear me speak in public, and accompanied me to the hall, when the Lord made me "to ride upon the high places of the earth." O I felt at home among an enlightened, instructed people, who could understand and appreciate the heaven-inspired truths of God's book; and I have always found it an easy task to labor among such. I was again announced for the afternoon. At the close of which I was surrounded by this loving people, and caressed as though I had come from the third heaven. I parted with them, not to meet again, but by the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God.

This was the first chance that my brother ever had of hearing his brother speak in public, or address a congregation; and on our return home, on entering the room, he dropped the following words on my ear: "John, I believe you have much truth on your side, and were you to stop in Aberdeen, you would raise a church. And now, if you feel able, I wish you would send me the Crisis." Hah! I had sent it to him a whole year, but, as he contined to fight, I served him as Paul did his brethren, and so I judged him unworthy, and took it from him, and turned the blessing into another quarter.

On the following Thursday I left for Glasgow, where I had promised to spend a few days, and do some business. Early on Sabbath morning, in company with a kind friend, I started in search of "a sect everywhere spoken against." I found two that had formerly been one, and better if they had remained so. I could not find out the doctrinal difference, for both held a dead man to be dead, and that all the wicked would God destroy. These These words were the answers of both parties to questions asked. I attended the lesser one in the forenoon, and the larger one in the afternoon. At the first place, the speaker was all Jew. When dismissed, I remarked to him that I thought his meetings were susceptible of improvement; and asked an example where any of the apostles spent two hours in discoursing upon the Jews. Now I, as much as any man, hold to the literal fulfillment of the unfulfilled prophecies to the natural seed of Abraham after the Lord comes; but I cannot feed and grow fat upon Jew for breakfast, dinner and supper.

In the afternoon, I met the other body, in [illegible] much larger; and as soon as I [illegible] judge, a [illegible]

they would tolerate a few remarks from a stranger. "Yes, yes," was the reply. I stepped out on to the floor, and shook out my feathers, which in some parts would have kindled a flame; but I have yet to learn how much it would take to make a Scotchman cry out "Allelujah," or move a muscle in the face. But the preservation of my life, and safe return to my home, were most earnestly prayed for, and male and female gathered round me as though I had come from Paradise. I parted with them to meet again on Canaan's happy shore.

The kindness and attention shown me by a gentleman and his lady, here in Glasgow, will long be remembered; and I can only wish them a recompense in the morning when a cup of cold water will meet its reward.

On the following Wednesday, Aug. 22d, I embarked for home, on board the St. George steamer. There were two other ministers present, one a Congregationalist and the other a Calvinist Baptist. On the first Sunday morning, at the close of church prayers, I asked permission to preach to the passengers and crew at 3 P. M. It was granted. On the second Sunday, I published for the same hour, but a few minutes before the time, the Dr. called upon me with a message from the Captain, saying he had no objection to my preaching, provided I did not bring up my "peculiarities." Reply, "Sir, tell the Captain that I have no peculiarities, but such as are common to the Scriptures; and that I had rather decline the appointment than to be trammeled by any man." There was a cause for all this. Those two Rev. gentlemen passengers were present last Lord's day, when I preached upon the inheritance of the saints; and their luminous orbits were crossed with a witness, and these were the spiritual advisers of the captain in this case. But being urged by some on board, I sent the following note to the cabin:

"Sir, I am at a loss to know what you mean in your message in regard to 'peculiarities.' I beg leave most respectfully to say, that I hold no 'peculiarities' but such as are sustained by prophets, apostles, and our Lord himself; and if any thing to the contrary, I shall stand open to correction. Your answer, sir, will oblige your sincere well wisher," etc.

In a few minutes after, the bell was rung for meeting by his order, and a steward to wait upon and supply the necessary appendages, and the cry was to preach on the deck, which I did for the first time, in the open air, to a large, attentive congregation. I did not fail in shewing up the "peculiarities" of Jesus, his apostles and prophets. Here my public efforts closed.

In the evening, we had a sermon from the Calvinist Baptist, in practical bearing good, but in doctrine bad. It was poisoned at the very core with Calvinism. Lorenzo Dow sprang up into life before me, with his brief but graphic description of this doctrine:—"You can and you can't; you shall and you shan't; you will and you won't; and you'll be damned if you do, and you'll be damned if you don't." Here God's revealed will is one thing, and his secret will another.

Some may think that God is slack concerning the promise of sending his Son again into our world; but when you enter these large cities in Great Britain, and in the streets, or thoroughfares, in the public walks, and pleasure grounds, you will, at this hour in the world's history, find men with uncovered heads, in the open day, surrounded by high and low, and at the top of their voices, warning men and women of the approaching storm, and crying, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." Some of these I ran across, pressed into the crowd, stood up with them, and sanctioned their message.

The evening before I left Aberdeen, I saw newly posted up, large bills, by a lay gentleman, as Esq. was appended to his name, announcing lectures on the second coming of Christ, to be delivered in Bannaccord Hall, seats free. Eld. Grant, Nordeimer's Hall and Montreal came up to memory; but this was in the midst of a less paganized people. The rabble don't rule in these large cities. For here the announcement of the truth meets with no rowdyism. The civil power most rigidly protects every legal organization.

I gave away in Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Stuartfield, also on board the steamers, about four hundred tracts, highly doctrinal, and of choice selection; two hundred from Bro. J. Wilson, of Montreal, and some from Bro. G Smith. But Bro. Grant's liberal offer I was sorry I could not reach, having decided upon going only a few days before I started.

NUMBER THIRTY.

TRANSLATION OF ELIJAH.

The period of Elijah's sojourn on the earth was fast drawing to a close. Even the last day had come, the day that was to witness his translation from this life to another. As the glory of the morning sun broke upon the walls of Gilgal, the two prophet friends—Elijah and Elisha—might have been seen wending their way over the rugged hills to Bethel, engaged in earnest discourse. Elisha had been requested to remain in Gilgal, but he could not consent to leave his old friend, while he abode on earth. He fain would remain with him, even till the summons from celestial realms called him away.

They journeyed on together, till they came to Bethel, where, ages before, Jacob beheld Jehovah in the visions of night. Then again Elijah sought to have Elisha remain, while he passed on to his change alone; but Elisha persisted still to continue the journey together. Then they bent their footsteps down the valley to Jericho, the city of palms. There the same request was made with the same result, and the two passed on to Jordan. The sons of the prophets at Jericho were also aware of the coming exodus of their friend from earth, and fifty of them stood afar off to witness the miracle. As the two prophets stood on the banks of Jordan, where, generations before, Joshua opened a pathway for the tribes to pass over on dry ground, Elijah wrapped his mantle together, and smote the rolling tide of Jordan. Its onward course was stayed by its magic touch, and rose in walls of billowy foam, leaving a dry path upon the pebbly river's bed for the favored ones of heaven to pass unharmed. As they touched the banks of the farther shore, the waters rolled on, with a wild roar over the recent pathway of the holy men. As they left the banks of the sacred stream, "Elijah said unto Elisha, Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken [illegible] And Elisha said, [illegible] be upon me." And he said, Thou hast asked a hard thing; nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so."

The morning hours had passed swiftly, as they journeyed, conversing of the eventful past; but here a feeling of solemnity came over them, as they neared the shadows of Nebo, the place of final separation; a separation of more than usual importance, not of friends intent on missions to distant lands, or of a separation by the hand of death; but while one was to remain and battle on with the long future of earthly trials, the other was soon to be summoned to the glories of the celestial spheres. Still they talked as they slowly walked on, but the past no longer occupied their hearts; the future, with its profound mysteries,—the future, with its glories, was their theme; and methinks a vision of the second Elijah and of Immanuel flitted across the sky of their inspiration, and gave them a glimpse of the new dispensation. Bathed in the joy-light of the far future, another light, glorious as the sun, blazed upon their path, as suddenly from the cerulean depths above "appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire." The angel horseman drove his fiery steeds with the swiftness of light, and snatched Elijah from the earth, and bore him to heaven on the breath of a whirlwind.

As Elisha beheld the sublime scene, "he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horseman thereof." He gazed once more into the ether depths above to catch one more glimpse of his prophet father, but the blue curtain of heaven had closed over the swift passing pageant forever. The Lord had taken Elijah, as he had taken Enoch in the far ages past, to live on with unchanged vigor, while all the other sons of Adam went down to the shadows of the tomb.

The glory of the pageant was over, and Elisha felt the depth of his loneliness as he gathered up the mantle that fell from the departing prophet. As he wrapped its sacred folds around him, he felt the spirit of the departed come upon him, and, strengthened by its influence, he was nerved anew for the work before him; the holy work of a prophet of Israel. Slowly he retraced his steps to Jordan, pondering on the wonderful scene he had witnessed. Once more, and for the last time, Jordan obeyed a prophet's command, and opened a dry pathway through its midst. When he had passed, its waters rolled on as smoothly and placidly as though never magic wand, or mantle of warrior, or wrapper, had parted its flood. Thus another link was added to the golden chain of grand events which bind the past in one harmonious whole.

GOOD SUPPORT.

Bro. Grant:—I wish sometimes that our brethren in the ministry would never allude in the paper to a lack of support among the churches, while preaching the word. The sheep hear the shepherd's voice and follow him, and as they are enlightened, they do right. They make sacrifices, and love to; are ever ready to help after a "godly sort," as they are convinced it is duty. Such ones are among all the little churches; but often they may be poor, and in the minority, "for they are not all Israel, which are of Israel."

Now when preachers report a church as a whole, as not doing their duty pecuniarily, the sheep who always do their duty are included with the goats, and thus injustice is done them; for sheep never love to blow a trumpet when they do good works. Now is it not far better for the preacher to suffer in silence, rather than injure the sheep; and trust a little more in God? We ought not to get angry, because we cannot gather grapes from thorns, nor feel to curse such, but rather pity them, because such poor souls are only preparing themselves to be fuel in a little from this. Hebrews 6:8. Now the sheep and all the faithful watchmen (or shepherds) have the precious promises of the remainder of that same sixth chapter. Read also Heb. 10:32 to the end of the chapter. So we can afford to wait patiently to the coming of the Lord. O for more faith. Let us not, then, for the sake of hitting the tares injure the wheat, that must grow among them until the harvest. We may err we are aware suffer some roots of bitterness to spring up in our hearts, and it is possible for some preachers, ere they are aware, to become influenced by selfish or covetous feelings, as well as the lay members, unless they constantly watch.

I have had some experience, and have been in some places where the covetous element largely obtained, and sometimes would get so troubled that I, John, would write a sharp letter for the paper; but before I mailed it, Christ would get great little I under, and I would throw my billious effusions into the fire, and feel—O so peaceful and perhaps in the next place I went, if I did my duty faithfully, would find friends so liberal as to make me heartily ashamed of my lack of faith. I have had such experience the present year of both kinds. I have found many good friends in this region. God bless them, as I know he will. Praise the Lord.

But the sheep don't want drones among them, or hobby riders. They don't feel it duty to support such loafing. There is no time to lie in bed late mornings, and loll in rocking chairs during the day, feeding on rich food; but to be in good time for work, we must rise early; first of all pray; a good cold water bath is excellent for the body; eat plain food and moderately; pray much secretly; examine self closely; watch continually; and when you can, stay at one place some two or three weeks, so as to ascertain the spiritual state of the church, and the moral condition of the community. Visit all the families possible—not to gossip and feast and sleep, but make short calls as possible, and not neglect duty. Strengthen the weak, warn the unruly, instruct the ignorant and inquiring, exhort and entreat the sinner, comfort and pray with the sick and dying saints, heal divisions among the flock instead of making them; thus proving one's self no "hireling." Carry tracts adapted to all cases. Scatter them liberally, if you have often to pay for them yourselves. Get up an interest in Sunday schools, and get subscribers for the Pilgrim. Our people are very negligent in this direction. Get the people out to meeting; preach to them week-day evenings as well as Sundays. There is much time between Sundays to do a great amount of good in various ways.

Now, I find, when working thus, that the Lord greatly rewards even in this life, saying nothing of the "exceeding great" reward a little beyond.

I went [illegible]

Hall to fish in the beautiful lake near his residence; and although I enjoyed it very much, I felt somehow, in view of the shortness of time, I ought rather to have been using the precious moments at the other kind of fishing, which I profess to be engaged in. Thus our great Pattern worked and suffered, and never complained, ever stimulated by the joy set before him, not in this life, but beyond. O for more of his blessed image in our hearts, and in all our actions.

When preachers fly from place to place, Sunday after Sunday, never stopping long enough to learn the spiritual condition of the church; with a long string of appointments in the paper, making it look sometimes as though one was quite as much after the pay as the souls of his perishing fellow men; and if he is to be two Sundays in one place, the intervening week is spent in lounging, sleeping, feasting, and gossiping, with but little studying, praying and labor. As before stated, the sheep don't feel it duty to pay such. I don't say we have any such hirelings among us. God is judge. Let us not be deceived. He is not mocked.

I know we have many true men of God who do feel it duty to fly almost, at these times, [illegible] place to place, and no time to stop long with this last message of mercy and wrath to a doomed world. Such are not included in the above remarks. They are not making preaching a trade. J. T. Dixon.

HOW CAN I BE HOLY.

Many desire to be holy. They feel that they continually fall short of their aim and their duty. They cannot rest satisfied with anything short of complete transformation,—a state in which they are fully in Christ, and filled with the Spirit. They read the command, "Be ye holy, for I am holy," and look up to the height, as to a mountain, vast and almost inaccessible; yet with longing eyes and earnest desires they ask "how can I obey this command?" "How can I become holy?"

Let us first notice the obstacles in the way. We see our three great enemies, the world, the flesh and the devil. How far have you succeeded in gaining the victory over these foes?" When we love the Lord with all our heart, and the loveliness and glory of Christ is revealed to us, the world loses all its charms, and we can readily give up all it has to offer, and cast all its vain glories out of sight. Our Master has overcome the world, and giveth us the victory. But have you now the victory over the works of the flesh—the carnal mind which is "enmity against God?" Can you deny "all ungodliness and worldly lusts," and "live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present evil world?" This is what you are striving to do, yet you feel that you fall short of the mark. You are not holy, you are not yet made perfectly whole.

The great adversary has many ways of attacking and annoying those who are on the point of escaping from his power, but your best weapon to use against him is prayer. Pray that he may be driven away from you and kept away. I do believe that the Lord is able and willing to do this for us. Have faith; believe with all your heart, that God will protect you, and he will surely do it. Now we see how we may have the victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil. We must hold fast our confidence, steadfast unto the end, while we "wait on the Lord."

Now what prevents the attainment of the object of our desire? We are in earnest, we pray, we strive, we groan within ourselves; and we are ready to do anything the Lord requires. It is his will, and our most earnest desire that we should be holy. Humble yourself under the mighty hand, yield entirely to his will in all things, BELIEVE just what he says; be perfect in obedience, then, the blood of Jesus will cleanse you from all sin, and you will be made whole and holy. Let the Spirit and the word together lead us into all truth. When we are holy we have on the whole armor. Then we have given to us a spirit of wisdom and power that all the adversaries cannot gainsay nor resist.

EXTRACTS FROM HISTORY.

Bro. Grant:—I give for the benefit of such readers of the Crisis as do not have access to the history, the following extracts, which I think settles the time when the French Revolution occurred. It is from Goodrich's Church History.

East Boston, Mass. C. Goodrich.

On page 183, the historian says:—"The French Revolution, in 1793 also, contributed to abridge the power of papal Rome. About the middle of the century, a conspiracy was formed to overthrow Christianity. At the head of this conspiracy were Voltaire, D'Alembert, Rousseau, Diderot, and Frederic II. king of Prussia; who, by every artifice that impiety could invent, by union and secret correspondence, endeavored to spread abroad the poison of infidelity, and thus to debase and sap the foundation of Christianity."

On page 184, he says:—"The revolutionary torrent, which was thus set in motion, destroyed law, government and religion in France, and laid waste the Roman church, both there and in neighboring countries. Her priests were massacred. Her silver shrines and saints were turned into money, for the payment of troops. Her bells were converted into cannon, and her churches and convents into barracks for soldiers. From the Atlantic to the Adriatic, she presented but one appalling spectacle. She had shed the blood of saints and prophets, and God now gave her blood to drink."

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS.

As there is a great deal of travel on our railroads at this season of the year, we have procured the railroad signals, which will be found interesting to those who travel on the cars or witness the movement of the trains, and the men who operate the roads may desire to know the signals used everywhere on the roads. The signals are given by the whistle, by lanterns, flags and motion of the arms. Their signification is:

One whistle—"Down brakes."
Two whistles—"Off brakes."
Three whistles—"Back up."

A rapid succession of short whistles is the cattle alarm, at which the brakes will always be put down.

A sweeping parting of hands on level of eye is the signal to "go ahead."

A downward motion of one hand, with extended arms, "to stop."

A beckoning motion of one hand, "to back."

A lantern raised and lowered vertically is a signal for "starting;" swung at right angles, or crosswise the track, "to stop;" swung in a circle, "back the train."

A red flag waved upon the track must be regarded as a signal of danger. [illegible]

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

FROM IDA.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I am a little girl eleven years old. I live in Moline, Ill. I have been to Minnesota on a visit the past summer. I have asked several of my young friends there to leave off the use of tea and coffee, and join the pledge of the Try Company. Here are the names of some of them. Alice Taylor, who sends five cents for the Tract Fund. Charlie Miller, who sends twenty-five cents. Willie Wood, Miranda Wood, Jane Sanford, Sarah Jane McMurtrey, Lottie Musley, Asel Holembach, Thomas McMurtrey, James McMurtrey, and David McMurtrey. I am trying to serve the Lord. I want to be ready to meet Jesus when he comes. I will try and be faithful. Ida White.

Well done, Ida. We hope more of our young readers will try to get their friends to join the pledge. May the Lord bless Ida, and keep her from the snares of Satan in this wicked world. Let us hear some more good news from others.—Editor.

THE TRY COMPANY.

No tea nor coffee do we drink,
Tobacco we despise;
And liquor as a beverage
Ne'er comes before our eyes.

So we are a happy, healthy band,
Our minds are bright and clear;
No awful dreams at night we have,
And tremor we don't fear.

We have escaped from Satan's snares—
In this respect at least;
And while others go to early graves,
We still remain to feast.

A SPOT ON IT.

"What a fine large melon! I think I must buy it. How much do you ask for it?"

So said a gentleman as he stopped one afternoon before the little stands of two country boys, who had come into the city at an early hour to sell fruits and oysters.

"The melon is the last I have, sir, and though it looks very fair, it has an unsound spot on the other side," replied the boy, turning it over.

"So there is," said the man, I think I'll not take it. But how is it, my lad, that you point out defects in your fruits to customers?" he asked, turning back, and eyeing the boy sharphly. "That is not very business-like, is it?"

"I know it, sir, but it is better than being dishonest," replied the boy modestly.

"You are right, my boy. Always be honest and truthful, and you will find favor with God and man. I do not wish for anything else to-day, but I shall remember your stand in future.

"Are those oysters fresh?" said he, turning to the stand of the oyster lad.

"Yes, sir," fresh this morning."

Some oysters were purchased, and the gentleman went on his way.

"What a fool you were, Harry," said the fish boy to his companion as their customer departed. "What did you want to show that spot for? Now you can take the melon home, and throw it away for your pains. See how much wiser I was; I sold my yesterday's oysters for the same price I did my fresh ones. He never would have looked at the melon till he got away."

"I would not tell a lie, Ben, for twice what I have earned to-day. Beside, I shall be better off in the end. I have gained a customer, but you have lost one."

Harry was a true prophet in this. The gentleman came again and again to buy of Harry, and finding his fruits were always good, he became his regular customer for the season. But he never bought another cent's worth at Ben's stand. Sometimes he would have long conversations with Harry, and would give him kind, christian advice for his present behavior, and counsel him respecting his future. And learning that the lad was very desirous to become a tradesman, when winter came the gentleman took him into his own office.

Here, by his faithful deportment, he steadily gained in the esteem of his employers, till at last he became an honored member of the firm, respected and beloved for uprightness.

But poor Ben, so cheaply sold for a few pennie's worth of stale oysters, was left to fight his way alone through the world, with ruined principles, a heavy conscience, and a spotted reputation. When he sold his oysters, he bartered his integrity, parted with his manliness, and despised the favor and blessing of his God. No wonder he could not prosper. Nor will any who prefer self to others, who choose meanness instead of generosity, who covet riches rather than integrity, and who seek present prosperity above that eternal and glorious reward laid up for all, both small and great, who deny self, honor God, and keep his commandments. FROM SR. LYDIA.

Dear Children of the Lord.—As others have set forth the example of eminent men, and given the method by which they attained their eminence and high position in the social world, I wish to set before you the example of a very worthy one, and some of his leading characteristics, and the results of them; and lead you, if possible, so to see the beauty and lovelines of his character, that it shall be your constant delight to imitate his example, and follow him to your journey's end. If you will, you shall then be permitted to look with satisfaction upon him whom you so much admire.

He of whom I speak is Jesus, our elder brother and Mediator. Don't you love him? Even the name sounds sweet, doesn't it? I am deeply in love with him. His birth was in a lowly place. He came in humiliation, but "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and men." How unlike him we are—naturally growing up less and less in favor with our blessed God and man. Now, children, I, for one, am determined to be of this class no longer, but to walk and talk with God the rest of my days, God being my helper. Who will join me? Let us examine some of the sayings and doings of our great Teacher and Shepherd, and see if they will not explain the secret of all his success.

First. He said on one occasion, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business." So at the risk of everything else, he obeyed God. Do we do like this? Secondly. He went down with his parents to Nazareth, and was subject unto them. Children, are you doing the like? If not, I pray you begin just now, right where you are, and I know you will grow like him. Try it, and then through the "Children's Corner" write me your success. Success is certain, if you will only try hard, and pray the Lord very often to help you. He has promised, "my grace is sufficient for thee."

Little ones, will you do it? If you will, some poor sinners and backsliders may be induced to fall in love with Jesus, and with you. Follow him wholly, like Caleb and Joshua, till you reach the promised land, where you will see him of whom the apostles said, "Him hath God exalted . . . to be a Prince and a Savior." Jesus who was once the babe in a manger, Peter tells us, "Is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him." He has said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." This is the exaltation we, if we humble and deny ourselves here, shall receive when he comes to "reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Won't this be blessed? Dear Father, help us all to live in momentary readiness for this glorious event. I hope you will then and there meet this lover of Jesus.

FROM SR. LUCY.

Dear children, who read the Crisis, I would like to tell you a story that I have been reading. I know that all children love to hear stories, and when we can tell them something that is good, it is worth while to engage their attention. Now listen, dear children, while I tell you of a child's faith in God. He was very sick, and was about to die. His mother sat watching beside his bed. He said to her, "Mother, I know that I shall see you again." "How do you know, my child?" said the anxious watcher. His answer was, "Because Jesus says so," and something in his heart told him it was so.

It was a little boy, only nine years old, who spoke these assuring words. He was very sick, and thought the angel had come to take him home. The poor child had fallen from a tree, and his back was broken; but in all his sufferings he still had faith, and was happy, because he loved the Savior, and he knew that the Savior loved little children; because, when he was here on earth, he took them in his arms and blessed them, and said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

O, children, how blessed is the hope that we shall live again. Never forget, when you look upon the face of the dead, that if they died trusting in the Lord, they will live again when Jesus comes. Now, dear children, one and all, I would say to you, be good, and love the Savior, and try and get your playmates to love him too. Be kind one towards another, and obey your parents in the Lord, for that is right. Give your young hearts wholly to him, and serve him here, and when he comes, you will be made like him, and live with him forever more.

A WORD TO LITTLE FOLKS

ON PRAYER.

Pray, little friends, do you? When, where, how often? In what way? From the lips only? Is it lip service merely? like the Pharisees, to whom Christ said: "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me." Is this so, little folks? or do you pray in very deed, pour out your souls earnestly, fervently—confess your sins, put them away and thank the Lord for all his mercies, and every good thing? What is prayer?

"Prayer is the simplest form of speech
That infant lips can try;
Prayer, the sublimest strains that reach
The Majesty on high.

"Prayer is the contrite sinner's voice,
Returning from his ways,
While angels in their songs rejoice,
And say, Behold, he prays!"

Prayer should be the watchword, the first thing, the last thing; always, rising up, lying down—going out and coming in, "Lifting up holy hands everywhere."

"Let your first thoughts by morning light
Ascend to God on high;
And in the evening raise your thoughts
Above the starry sky.

"He loves to hear your infant prayers,
He bids you seek his face;
Go, like the children of his love,
And ask his promised grace."

We frequently put the question to little boys and girls, "Do you pray?" "O yes, to be sure we pray." "How often?" "Once a day," "twice," "three times." "How do you pray?" "Now I lay me down to sleep," "Our Father which art in heaven," etc. Very well, so far so good. All this may be and no soul in it—no repentance, no faith, no hope in Christ—no hungerings after righteousness—no breaking off from sins—little sins and great sins—sins of omission and commission. Those very boys and girls that tell us they pray so and so, meanwhile are careless, thoughtless, proud, vain, trifling—say wrong things, and do wrong things. Others go still further, disobey their parents, play truant, run about in the street school, tell lies, call hard names, quarrel with their brothers and sisters—say, "I will" and "I won't."

Is this you, young friends? If so, what avail your prayers?

David says: "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." Do you think God will hear your prayers, while you thus despise his counsels, trample on his precepts, grieve his dear heart of love? Again, the Psalmist says: "I will wash my hands in innocency, so will I compass thine altar, O Lord." What says Solomon? "My son forget not my law, but let thine heart keep my commandments: for length of days and long life and peace shall they add to thee." Put away your sins, little folks, put them away now and forever. Go to Jesus, with humble confession, bow the knee—pour out your little souls fervently: say, "God be merciful to us sinners." Then the Savior smiles, sweetly listens to your prayers, sends answers of mercy, keeps you as the apple of the eye! Will you do it?

"Happy the child whose early years
Receive instruction well;
Who hates the sinner's path, and fears
The road which leads to hell.

"When we devote our youth to God,
'Tis pleasing in his eyes;
A flower, when offered in the bud,
Is no vain sacrifice."

OVER THERE.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

I can see beyond the river,
Over Jordan's dashing tide;
There I'll be with Christ forever,
Close to his sacred side.

Chorus.—Over there, over there,—
Just over there.

Over there is no more weeping,
Over there all pain is o'er;
I shall rest in Jesus' keeping,
And droop and die no more.

Over there is no more sinning,
Over there are sunny skies;
Crowns of fadeless beauty winning,
And flowers of Paradise.

Over there I'll find my treasure,
Jewels lost, long, long ago;
Love and bliss in fullest measure,
There my sad heart shall know.

Over there all are immortal,
Over there is no more night;
And the city's pearly portal
Is now almost in sight.

Will you go, dear sinner, with me,
Where the Lamb will ever reign;
Where the loved of earth will greet thee,
And never part again?

NAPOLEON AND ROME.

Editor of the World's Crisis:—

Dear Brother:—I will crave the opportunity to express my sense of the courtesy and kindness which you have shown me hitherto, and though now I have but little time for writing, I can scarcely refrain from snatching a few moments for a communication. How portentous is the present phase of human affairs! Behold the Pope of Rome, robbed of a refuge in the Austrian emperor, whose power has been so exceedingly injured in the recent war; the aged, harassed, and helpless Pope, the last of a mighty line, now in extremity, resorting to his only resource, and to escape the confusion and ruin which impend over him, conceding the interests, not merely of the Papacy, but inclusively of the entire Romish system, to the seventh-healed headship of the therion, that is, Napoleon! If this is true, is it not also very significant? I would not for a single moment insist on the exceeding importance of the identification and verity of that headship, if it were not an inalienable and striking element in prophecy. Let us see. Let us scrutinize this matter closely, with the most absolute impartiality, and undivided attention.

It is, and has been, earnestly contended that this would be the inevitable issue of the revolutions which must characterize this epoch. It was distinctly maintained that the tottering Romish system must seek its only possible refuge in its chief secular supporter, and assent, however unwillingly, to precisely such arrangements as its consignee (if I may use such a term) should impose. It must therefore submit to the disposition which Napoleon is to make. Nor does this conflict in the slightest with the fore-doomed destruction of Babylon by the judgments of the Almighty. These are soon to be inflicted with unsparing and terrible energy from the magazine of God's thunderbolts. We only mean to show that for a moment, as it were, that is for a short season, Napoleon is the depositary of the Romish concern. And it is this transfer, and this transformation, which marks the period of the end. Romanism is metamorphosed just exactly in this manner and to this extent that the papal antichrist is succeeded by the personal antichrist.

Now, dear brother, with your kind permission, I will venture to invite attention to the series of events presented to us in the fourteenth chapter of Revelation. Certainly the clearness and the order and the sequence of the stupendous occurrences there related, and the grandeur of the visions in the prophetic panorama, and their interest and magnitude, must be obvious without argument.

Who are the 144,000 on Mount Sion? I think certainly they must be translated saints, a number waiting, watching, and prepared, that precedes the rest of christians. Is there not the promise of special reward to special vigilance? They are indeed expressly said to be aparche, a "first-fruit to God and to the Lamb." Twice also it is said they were redeemed,—(1) "from the earth" (apo, from, distinctly implying removal from a place); and (2) "from men" (the same apo denoting the same removal). Therefore it can scarcely refer to the resurrection of some of the dead, with any just propriety. Nor can it be reasonably applied to infants, as I have heard it done, for there are millions of them equally innocent; nor can it be applied to a past age, for this is obviously one of a series of events intimately connected, and chronologically and closely sequent upon each other at a critical epoch, that is, about the close of this present dispensation. This translation therefore embraces the ready and watching saints on earth, and, for aught we can possibly know, may occur at any time. If it be said that such a translation involves distinctions among christians, we may inquire if God does not indeed distinguish? He promises to distinguish the watching saints; and I believe, and our Advent brethren believe, that there are distinctions indeed in this particular thing, for there is a felt difference between those who look, and those who do not look for the coming of Christ in our day, in these days,—a personal coming with power.

In this first stage of Christ's advent, Jesus appears only to those whom he translates. He comes like a thief, stealing away his prepared ones into glory; while the world is left to the brief and dark hour of antichrist, and to the alarms and confusion and persecution of the "time of trouble." Such is the view of some of our most eminent brethren, and I feel confident that it can not be successfully controverted. The question of persecutions and sufferings and trials and martyrdoms, therefore, in the exceedingly near future, so far as christians are concerned, must depend on the question of their inclusion in the now imminent translation of saints. If Spiritualism, or demonism is able to execute its menaces against professed christians, and exercise its passionate hostility in incessant inquisitions and merciless decapitations and slaughters, that series of afflictions is reserved only for the unbelieving, who do not and will not put themselves in readiness for the salvation which Christ accomplishes for the Philadelphian christians, who are redeemed from the earth and from among men. And that persecution, my dear brother, there is no reason to doubt will ere long be inaugurated. It will be from a confederation of antichristian systems and powers, such as Spiritualism, Universalism, Fenianism, Romanism, Puseyism, and Napoleonism, embracing the elements of selfishness, infidelity, fanaticism, and all unhallowed and unscriptural sentiments and energies. Their operation too will be intensified by the desperation of the now hard-pressed Satan and his demons, and by the judgments of God literally pouring out on antichrist, and a frenzied and precipitate eagerness among men to evil. The chief of these appalling afflictions, of course, comes after the fall of Babylon, which has "become the habitation of demons and every foul spirit." Painful as is the picture, it must be realized, and the only complete deliverance is by translation.

We affectionately ask our brethren, who deprecate the possibility of the exaltation of Napoleon to the terrible eminence of a personal therionic headship, and a pope-imperial or pope-apostatic exaltation, who, or what is the beast, in this proclamation after the fall of Babylon? We think it is and must be the power which has supported the Papacy, which still survives the fall of Babylon, and which has so maneuvered as to metamorphose and subordinate the Romish system to his own purposes and his own exaltation. It seems to be an individuality yet in existence, the very power that has upheld the Pope, that has survived the Pope, and the fall of Rome as the metropolis of the Catholic church; a living, prevailing and odious power. The proclamation is to avert a danger now menacing, to save a people yet on earth from the unspeakable calamity of a capital offense, an unpardonable sin, and that is the worship of the beast. There is not a particle of doubt that this proclamation is yet in the future, that it is soon to be made, that it comes after the fall of Babylon, and that it will be extensively and rapidly diffused over the earth. If it is not done by the Atlantic telegraph, it probably will be through the line by Bherings Straits to Russia and Asia, and by every facility of rapid communication that characterizes this wonderful age, when many run to and fro and knowledge is increased.

We proceed on the supposition, in these remarks, that these proclamations are not by literal angels, but by agencies resembling them for swiftness and energy and power; although the employment of literal angels we would not assume to be an absolute impossibility.

I do not wish to weary you or your readers, my dear brother; but this is a subject to me of intense interest. It hardly seems to me that this interpretation of God's word should have applied to it terms of unqualified deprecation. Certainly, we should only studiously and prayerfully desire the truth; and while we treat with christian charity differing views, let us encourage one another to the acquisition of that knowledge which is derived by processes purely logical, while we covet the illuminations of celestial light. I cannot repress emotions of a character more than ordinarily powerful, in contemplating such a future as awaits an unsuspecting and incredulous Christendom. We know perfectly, from the plain portraiture and succession of events in this chapter, that a tremendous peril is impending; and that it is inexpressibly important to millions now living to be so thoroughly premonished as to escape being involved in the guilt and ruin of worshiping the beast. To say that Napoleon is not or can not be the person and power here designated, is to suggest that which at least may bear examination. If a political and imperial power is to exact universal homage, it must be personal, we infer; and if it is the beast of Revelation, it is that personal imperial power which supports the Pope, which accepts the Pope's responsibilities, and which succeeds his holiness, or unites a Pope-ship to himself. We are living in this epoch. It is a fearfully portentous time. But the ready saints may well rejoice, looking for their Redeemer to wrap them away into glorious security in the companionship of himself.

Is there any additional method of identifying the beast? We have in fact precisely that which God has given, in the last verse of the previous chapter. It is this method of identification by his name, which immediately precedes the scenery of that resplendent and sublime vision on Mount Zion. His number is the number of a man—it is 666. It is the very peculiar means of detection, which God has given in this connection, whereby we may unerringly mark and know the person enthroned and potent at Babylon's fall. I will just give a list of verifications by Napoleon's name, first specifying, by way of explanation, that his whole name is Charles Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, and that an ancestral family name of the Bonapartes in Greece was Comnene. Another name was Colomeros, the Greek precisely for Bonaparte. The name of Louis Napoleon's grandmother was Letitia Raniolini. With these explanations, and the remark of the Napoleonic Jewish lineage, physiognomy, as supposed, and prophetic association with the Jews, we give,

In Greek. 1. Napoleonti. 2. Lois Napoleon. 3. Na. Bonaparte III. 4. L. N. Colonmeros. 5. Commene Ellenikos.—(Comnene, a Greek.) 6. Lois ek Raniolini, (Louis descended from Raniolini.) 7. L. Napoleon III., therion deka, or (L. Napoleon III., wild beast (of) ten (horns.) Thus we have seven distinct verifications in Greek.

Second, in Latin: 1. Ludovicus, or (Louis.) 2. Carolus Judaeus, or (Charles a Jew.) 3. L. Napoleon III. Infideles rex., or (Infidel King.) Here are three in Latin. And finally in Hebrew, Louis Napoleon Bonnpart.

Thus in all, there are ten or eleven correspondences of the name to the number. Does not our Lord deal honestly with us? Does not he give the test? Shall we ignore his test? Could we with propriety decry or evade the force and effect of it, or impair the validity of it? My dear brethren in the Lord, let us rejoice in all truth, as in exceeding great riches, and understand that the beast, which men must not worship on pain of irremediable ruin, is Louis Napoleon Bonaparte! Let the church arouse herself—the tremendous crisis of affairs is urging on!

But I must close. I attended the meeting of the conference at Darien, and greatly enjoyed the sermon of Bro. H. Pratt on prophetic imagery and evolution. I ought to refer for one moment to the position of affairs at home. No sagacious observer can fail to see that our political concerns are becoming perilously involved. The divergence between Congress and the Executive, is alarmingly menacing. On both sides is a spirit of the most determined resolution. What a spectacle to the world! (Will France relax her hold on Mexico at such a juncture? It is a truly Napoleonic idea, if true, that prince Napoleon shall supplant the discouraged Maximilian.) The effect of the antagonism between different departments of the government must be sadly injurious at home and abroad. Every American interest must greatly suffer. This is a case of "distress with perplexity" (incipient, yet augmenting) among the nations. It is the fulfillment of our Lord's prophetic daguerreotype.

I will close by quoting a telegraphic report of President Johnson's remarks at Newark, Ohio, who said:—"We shall have another civil war. It will not be between the North and the South, but internecine." A lady in Philadelphia wrote home recently,—"Every one here is looking for civil war, and many think it inevitable. It will be a terrible war, even more destructive than our last, and may equal or exceed the French reign of terror. A lady in this city, who rejected Spiritualism after examining it, was told by one of the leading Spiritualists, that when they got power, he would take her to the public square and tie her to a stake, pile her Bibles around her, and burn her up with them." Our only help is Jesus. Your brother,

Clinton Colegrove.

For the World's Crisis.

"WHAT IS TRUTH?"—John 18: 38.

This question, proposed by the Roman governor, Pontius Pilate, is as natural, in one view of man as an intellectual being, as is his inquiry, "Who will show us any good?" or, "What shall we eat?" We all need truth, the proper aliment of the mind. But christians have a higher motive than to satisfy the understanding. They want that which shall become to them the element of the new—the everlasting life. The Roman governor, like his class, did not wait for, nor obtain the proper answer. However, our Lord has anticipated our highest want, and provided the "meat which endureth unto everlasting life." His "words . . . are spirit and they are life." The direct reply of Jesus is, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."—1 John 17: 17. The word of God is truth, as opposed to all departures therefrom. In christian profession, it is sincerity as opposed to hypocrisy. It is in practice and deportment our ideal of perfection. The truth as a system of instruction gives the origin, progress, and end of all things, in one unvarying harmony. And all other systems of instruction are but different degrees of departure from it, as to the origin and end, the nature and remedy of evil.

Again, "What is truth?" The truth is conformity to fact; and God's word conforms to all the facts of which it speaks. Note how day and night, summer and winter, seed time and harvest, Jew and Gentile, Roman, Turk, and Christian, all exist only according to "the Word."

I. It is truth in its two great commandments, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all the heart." For he is the author of all thy life. He is supreme; and truth only commands us to love him supremely. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," for he is as worthy or needy as thyself. Thus all the subdivisions of these two commands conform to the facts in the case.

II. God's word conforms to fact in its promises. He is as good as his word. See the rainbow,—the promise of no second deluge; so of all the promises to Abraham and his seed, the coming of Christ, and the gospel to the Gentiles.

III. God's word is truth in its prophecies. The facts foretold have all followed, and the things have come to pass thus far. Deut. 18: 17-22; and this is the test of their truthfulness. The four kingdoms in their revealed order—Babylon, Persia, Greece and Rome—demonstrate their conformity to the word. They but fulfill and fill out the prophetic word through all past ages. The picture given of "the time of the end" is about filled; of course Christ must come in his kingdom—in "his times."

Therefore, let me say to those embarrassed brethren before referred to, take the word of God. That "is truth!" It "will stand;" and your faith (and yourselves by faith) will stand only so far as it founds itself on God's unfailing, infallible truth. Man's interpretation may all fail; but "the Scripture cannot be broken."

ZION.

Jerusalem, shall we behold
Thy matchless grace? and shall our feet
E'er wander where thy every street
Is lined and paved with shining gold?

And shall we see the branches wave,
And taste the fruit on life's fair tree?
And where life's river rolleth free,
Shall we amid its waters lave?

And shall we walk, in robes of white,
Within thy walls of precious stone?
And look upon the great white throne
Of him who is our life and light?

And shall we join the thrilling song,
That yet shall make thy arches ring?
The song that angels cannot sing,
Of earth's redeemed and blood-washed throng?

O should yon eastern light foretell
That soon the Bridegroom will return;
What marvel that the bride should yearn
Forever with her Lord to dwell?

And though the world, with scornful eyes,
Looks on the written things of God;
We yet shall see the bursting sod,
And see the sleeping dead arise.

PRAISE THE LORD.

The most important music that man is capable of performing, is vocal praise to God. Most men possess some musical ability, which, if rightly cultivated and improved with half the vigor and interest taken in other things of minor importance, their voices would be raised in adoration and praise to God, the Father of all their mercies. There is something sublime and heart-stirring in music, when performed with the spirit and with the understanding also. "We find it recorded in sacred writ," says an eminent author, "that Jubal . . . was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ." And he further adds, "but who was the father, or rather the framer of the human voice? The Lord God Omnipotent!" Then surely a greater than Jubal is here. We know that neither Jubal, or any of his successors, were ever able to frame an organ that can distinctly articulate these words: "Hear my prayer, O Lord;" or change the key and say: "Praise the Lord, O my soul."

The most curious instrument ever constructed is but sound without sense; while man, who is blessed and endued with the faculties of speech, can alternately sing of mercy and of judgment, as duty bids, or occasion may require. I think it no great encomium upon the Creator of heaven and earth, to acknowledge his superiority in constructing a medium for the conveyance of sounds, which is at once both capable of vociferation and articulation; for, indeed, I think it not much short of blasphemy to set up Jubal as a competitor with the Almighty of heaven." And the same writer, when speaking of the conjunction of masculine and feminine voices, says: "Such is beyond expression sweet and ravishing, and is esteemed by all good judges to be vastly preferable to any instrument whatever, framed by human invention."

As the custom of using musical instruments has been handed down from generation to generation, since the days of Jubal to the present time, it may not be unimportant to note that it has always been a companion of war, in chanting its songs of victory, and all military parades, with many other vices and amusements. It has a charming or bewitching nature, drawing persons into other vices, which may end at last in perdition. Even serpents have been charmed by its fascinating sounds, being attracted from their dens and allured to their destruction. For authority for this remark, we take an extract or two from Robinson's Bible Dictionary, p. 152: "Certain kinds of serpents seem to be agreeably affected by music. It is a fact sufficiently well attested, that when any of these, or of other kinds of vipers, have got into a house, and made havoc among the poultry, or other small domestic animals, it is customary to send for one of these musicians, who, by tones upon his flute, or flageolet, finds out the hiding-places of the serpents, and allures them to their destruction; indeed, as soon as the serpents hear the music, they creep quietly out of their holes, and are easily taken." In like manner young persons are sometimes attracted to scenes of dissipation and vice, step by step, until they meet their final fate.

How unlike this is the voice, when under the influence of the Holy Spirit. The social prayer meeting is a place of resort which leads to joys unspeakable and full of glory; a happiness unending. The voice is a talent committed to us by God, demanding our attention and preference, instead of man's inventions; because it is the work of our Creator.

A distinguished author, in one of our late musical works, admits that "if singers are thoroughly trained, no instrument can add to the sweetness or effect of their music." Of all the musical sounds in the world, that individuals are competent to produce, the voice seems to demand a preference. And what can be more beautiful and becoming than to honor God in employing those faculties which he has placed in us for the noble purpose of praise, rather than attempt to invent something ourselves to supersede the work of the Almighty.

If half the labor and expense lavished on musical instruments, were appropriated to the cultivation of the human voice, for the purpose of praising the Lord, and assistance and encouragement extended to all to participate in this delightful and important exercise, what an assemblage of living, created agencies would be found in every assembly of worshippers. But such a course would at once put an end to all choir singing, in its select form, as it now exists, and break the bonds of a popular musical slavery; and congregational singing be universally adopted by all the christian world. This would be a great and good attainment. It would be only adopting at all religious gatherings, what is now almost everywhere regarded as a proper course for christians, or converts, in times of revival and prayer meetings; and certainly, what is proper and conducive to spirituality in one religious meeting, as it regards singing praise to God, ought not to be objectionable in another. If the christian may have the privilege of singing praise to God in a prayer meeting, why can he not do it as acceptably in the great congregation? In the sight of God he can, but not in the sight of men.

Is it right to please God or man? Does not God as truly preside in the prayer meeting as in the great congregation? And if he can look with approbation on the performances of his humble worshipers in one place, he will as well in another.

The truth is this: much of the choir singing is performed more to please men than it is to please God. We must have something that the people will like, the great men and nobles of the world; the gay and vicious; practically saying that God is inferior; that it will do to sing to him in prayer and conference meetings, but not in the great assembly. A religious performance, the supreme object of which is to please men, will have but little effect, from its very nature. The author of the late work referred to above, also says:—"In every part of the United States, even where new music is sung in the public congregation because it is fashionable, let any one mingle with the devout worshipers of God in their social meetings, and he will hear, not the scientific jingle of imported discord, but the simple harmony of old 'Turner,' 'Northfield,' the 'Union Hymn,' or something that moves the hearts of good men, if it does not tickle the fastidious fancy of infidels."

What is done to tickle and charm the fancy of the gay and fashionable, and satisfy the scrutiny of lofty critics, can never be acceptable in the sight of God. The fallacious idea has been often broached by nominal professors, worldly-wise men, or those least distinguished for piety, that we ought to present inducements, by keeping up with the times, following the fashions of the world, and we might add with equal propriety, the flesh and the devil also, to get persons out to meeting, that they might get good thereby; but all such superficial efforts are vain and unproductive of any lasting good. They tend in the most powerful manner to degenerate the christian world back to heathenism. If individuals wish to draw sinners to Christ, is it not the most proper course to speak to God by prayer, or likewise by a prayerful spirit exhibit the truth either publicly or privately to the person, face to face, with an upright deportment? Does the manner in which the public services of the Sabbath are conducted at the present day, in most places, furnish the means of a complete remedy to lost men? Every intelligent christian knows there is something more wanting, and that it is a truth that no purely spiritual revival was ever enjoyed without resorting to the means we have suggested. Observation everywhere teaches it; for where do we find a revival of pure religion commenced, or in progress, without prayer and vocal songs of praise? Do the present popular forms or exercises of the Sabbath promote a revival, where no social meetings are held, no prayers or vocal praises? No, never; but there must be a turning away from this monotony of the Sabbath, at least at intervals, or no revival can live.

Is it not a matter of vast importance, that the leaders and conductors of public worship take an important stand in favor of a just and laudable liberty; such as is becoming to worshipers of God, and calculated to promote devotional feeling? for we cannot see why it is not equally important that praise should be spiritual as well as prayer, preaching, or or the duties of a deacon. And is it not important, also, that all be instructed and encouraged to exercise their voices, who can, in praising the Lord? For, to let those natural faculties for music remain inactive, and prefer the work of human invention, is not honoring our Creator. Every one who regards independence, or individuality, as being important in the performance of duties to God or men, should exhibit the truth by precept and example, so far as practicable, regardless of the frowns and sneers of a wicked world, who have no real regard for the worship of God, only for a form, or name to live while they are dead; as we read, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." It is truly disgusting and is vain for persons to exhibit a regard for religion, and at the same time cultivate, encourage, and support customs which tend directly to lead men into vice, and to ultimate destruction; such as military marches, balls, picnics, levees, fairs, and the like, which are always interspersed with some kind of instrumental music, which does not fit the soul for the work of the Lord, but may be truly termed "the unfruitful works of darkness;" the pleasure and delight of wicked men, through all past ages of the world.

WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?

Reader, are you waiting for any thing before you become a decided christian? Many, I am sorry to say, are waiting. Are you one?

Many are to be found in our churches who know the truth. They like the gospel. They approve of sound doctrine. They mean one day to be decided followers of Christ. But at present something hinders them. Reader, is this your state of soul?

Listen to me while I press upon your conscience a simple question. Do not turn away from it. Sit down and answer it if you can. What are you waiting for?

Are you waiting till you are sick and unwell? Surely you will not tell me that is a convenient season. When your body is racked with pain,—when your mind is distracted with all kinds of anxious thoughts,—when calm reflection is almost impossible,—is this a time for beginning the mighty work of acquaintance with God? Do not talk so.

Are you waiting till you are old? Surely, you have not considered what you say. You will serve Christ when your members are worn out and decayed, and your hands unfit to work. You will go to him when your mind is weak, and your memory failing. You will give up the world when you cannot keep it. You will set your affections on things above, when you find nothing to set them on in things below. Is this your plan? Beware, lest you insult God.

Are you waiting till you have leisure? And when do you expect to have more time than you have now? Every year you live seems shorter than the last. You find more to think of, or to do, and less power and opportunity to do it. And, after all, you know not whether you may live to see another year. Boast not yourself of to-morrow,—now is the time.

Are you waiting till your heart is perfectly fit and ready? That will never be. It will always be corrupt and sinful,—a bubbling fountain, full of evil. You will never make it like a pure white sheet of paper, that you can take to Jesus, and say, "Here I am, Lord, ready to have thy law written on my heart." Delay not. Better begin as you are.

Are you waiting till the devil will let you come to Christ without trouble? That will never be. Satan never gives up a single soul without a struggle. If you would be saved, you must fight for it. Stand not another day. Arise, and go forward at once.

Are you waiting till there is no cross to be borne? That will never be. So long as sin is our enemy, and our own bodies weak and clogged by it, so long we must endure hardness, if we would be good soldiers of Jesus Christ. Go in the strength of the Lord God, and you shall overcome. If there is no cross, there will be no crown.

Are you waiting till all around you become decided? That will never be. Heaven only is the place where all are saints. Earth is the place where sin reigns, and God's people are a little flock. You must be content to journey alone, and swim against the stream. "Narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Tarry not for friends and neighbors,—see that you are among the few.

Are you waiting till the gate is wide? That will never be. It will not alter,—it is not elastic,—it will not stretch. It is wide enough for the chief of sinners, if he comes in a humble and self-abased spirit. But if there is any thing you are resolved not to give up, you will never, with all your struggling, get in. Lay aside every weight,—enter before the door is shut for ever.

Are you waiting because some few christians are inconsistent, and some professors fall away? Their folly is no excuse for you. Their sin will not justify your delay. Hear the word of the Lord Jesus, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me."

Oh! lingering reader, are not your excuses broken reeds,—webs that will not cover you, wood, hay and stubble, that will not abide the fire? Are not your reasonings and defences unprofitable and vain? Be honest, confess the truth. You have no good reason for waiting!

Turn not away from good advice. I fear lest the time should come when you will seek to enter in and not be able. This day I charge you throw away indecision,—wait no longer, —become decided for Christ.

FLOWERS AMONG BRIERS AND THISTLES.

Kind reader, did you ever see beautiful flowers growing among briers and thistles? I think I have seen such a sight; but it was a disagreeable one, to see a beautiful flower surrounded by briers and thistles, for this reason: that if you undertook to approach the flowers, in order to enjoy their sweet perfume and gaze upon their beauty, you were in danger of having your garments torn and your flesh wounded; and furthermore, the briers and thistles would obscure the sight of the beautiful flowers; because the briers and thistles grow more lofty, while the flowers are of a more lowly nature.

But what has this to do with us, kind reader? Can we make use of the above as a figure to gain some very important instruction in a moral point of view? We think we can; for we read in Solomon's writings, where he speaks of a garden of spices, of myrrh, and of pomegranates, and of sweet flowers, and of lilies, among thorns; of beds of spices, and of the gathering of lilies; of vines and tender grapes; and of the little foxes spoiling the vines. Dear reader, how is it? are there not many tares among the wheat? and do they not grow so closely to the wheat as to injure it many times? and is it not often the case that the tares choke the wheat, and cause it to wither and die, or prevent it from bearing fruit, or cause it to blast? And if briers, or thorns, or thistles grow up so high as to shade the precious fruit of the garden (the church of God), would it not be a great injury, and spoil the fruit? and is it not the case that the little foxes often spoil the vines? or, in other words, are there not many persons, who are numbered with the people of God, and bear the name of christian, who are like the little foxes that spoil the vines? and yet they do not intend to do wrong, but seem to manifest in all their movements a disposition to keep above all the rest, and in some instances will go so far as to hinder others from doing their duty, for fear they themselves will have to step back one or two steps, and some one else will get a little ahead of them.

Now, dear reader, you know that such a disposition would be very wrong, although there may be no wrong intended. You know it would not answer for you, or me, or any other person, to cherish a disposition to do like the dog in the manger, who would not eat the hay, nor let the ox eat it.

Dear brethren, I would not say one unkind word to say of the dear saints of God; for I expect soon to be called to an account for every word I say, and every movement I make; and I feel as though I had no right to lay a straw in the way of any child of God, to hinder him from the full performance of every duty in these last hours of time. But it is my imperative duty to do all I possibly can to help and encourage every person to do what God requires of them. If any one is the means of hindering me from doing my duty in the church of the living God, I will bear it with humble patience and with a forgiving spirit, and let the good Lord settle it at the final day of accounts.

It becomes us, and every true and sincere follower of the dear and lovely Redeemer, to strive to be the most humble, instead of trying to get up a little above our dear brethren. Let us also be very careful not to offend one of these little ones. Jesus says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Dear lambs of the flock, let us be truly honest in all our dealings with each other, and also with all the world; and never try to evade the truth for the sake of a little money, or a little worldly fame or honor; but let us at all times walk in the integrity of the gospel. May the good Lord help us all to be faithful unto the end, that we may receive a crown of life when Jesus comes. Amen.

AN INQUIRY.

Are we improving the talent God has given us for his glory? Have we, as a people who profess to love the Lord, and expect him soon to come, thought seriously upon this subject? Have we inquired diligently of the Lord, what he would have us do? and having become sensible of duty, are we willing to do it, leaving the consequences with him? When we, as stewards of God, are called to render his "own with usury," what answer will be given? If we have failed through pride, or neglect, to use what he bestowed upon us, shall we then find fault with God, because he gave us no more? Nay! but rather stand speechless—condemned. The command is, "Occupy till I come;" not in vainly sighing, and wishing for some one else's gift, but simply to do what we can.

Have we given all for Christ? If so, we hear, "Go work to-day in my vineyard." We answer, Yes, Lord, but what shall I do? Ofttimes, when the Spirit impresses the answer, we start back and exclaim, O not that, Lord, my talent is so small. Which, think you, is the best judge, the Lord or yourself? Would he bid us do any thing we could not do? No! 'tis not like him. And has he not promised us grace for every need? Ah, yes! and we shall have it, if we trust him wholly, and are willing to obey him in all things. God help us to be faithful, that when Jesus comes, we may hear the, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

THE HAPPY CHANGE.

As we look around we see and feel changes continually going on. The summer is ended, and now the autumn with its blessings comes to reward the toil of the husbandman. But this will pass away, O how quickly! There is a change which brings a blessing that will not pass away. That is the change from natural darkness to the light of life, the hope of glory. What a happy change when we give up all for Christ. We cannot tell all our joy. We cast our burden on the Lord, and rejoice with great joy in hope of being delivered from all our sorrows and trials when he comes.

Beloved friends, I thank you for your words of cheer. Every week the Crisis brings words of love, from the editor, and other writers, and I feel thankful to you all, and wish to tell you how much you add to my happiness. And I do desire to be useful. How glad I should be, to be the means of saving even one, and leading one poor sinner to Jesus. I have met with many trials and disappointments, but now I can thank God for them all, for they all work for my good. Remember me in your prayers, that I may be faithful and endure to the end, and meet you where there will be no more sorrow, but joy and peace forever.

A Human Smile.—Nothing on earth can smile but human beings. Gems may flash reflected light, but what is a diamond flash compared with an eye flash and mirth flash? A face that cannot smile is like a bud that cannot blossom, and dries up on the stalk. Laughter is day, and sobriety is night, and a smile is the twilight that hovers gently between both, and more bewitching than either.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

Since my last article was written, we have received several letters containing money for our mission work, in all $13.00. A portion of this sum has been acknowledged by letter, and the remainder we acknowledge through the Crisis, as follows: "A friend to the poor," New Haven, $1.00; M. B. Sampson, $1.00; L. C. Johnson, $1.00. All these friends have our heartfelt thanks for their donations to the cause in this place. May grace, mercy and peace abide with them.

This morning, through the grace of God, I have the blessed privilege of reporting the conversion of one of our mission girls. For several weeks she had been in an awakened state. Recently she attended the campmeeting conducted by Sister Anna Smith, of New York, at Peekskill, N. Y. While there, the Lord was pleased to use Sr. Boide as an instrument to lead her to Christ, and one week ago to-day she found peace in believing on a crucified Redeemer. At the time her conviction was the greatest, she fell prostrate and helpless to the earth, and was carried to one of the tents, where she remained all night calling on Jesus for mercy. The next day, the sweet messenger of God, the Holy Spirit, assured her of her adoption into the family of God. Our hearts are filled with praise and thanksgiving to God for this blessed token of his favor to us in this branch of our missionary labors.

This is the girl I took with me last summer to New Haven, Worcester, Westboro, Salem, Portsmouth, Kennebunkport, and other cities and towns. No one that has been given to me has been in such peril as she has been in. She has always been a good girl, but if she had remained at her home on Bedford street until this time, she would have been ruined forever. She is quite prepossessing in her appearance, and would have been forced into sin, if the Lord had not sent me to her home to rescue her. The locality where she lived is perfectly horrible in its character. Licentiousness, drunken and otherwise depraved beings, white and black, old and young, abound there. I did by her just what I would do for any other good girl that I should find in such a terrible locality. The Lord gave her to me in answer to prayer, and I am endeavoring to bring her up in the fear of the Lord. She is like a timid lamb rescued from a den of wild beasts. I have witnessed disgusting and awful scenes in the house from which she was taken.

Some of our brethren, who look for the Lord this year or next, have intimated that "The Little Wanderers' Home" was not needed, as the Lord was so nigh. Suppose I had let little Maria alone, as they advised. Doubtless, by this time, she would have been a ruined girl, in body and spirit. But she has been taken from Sodom, and a new song has been put into her mouth. She now looks for the appearing of her Savior from heaven to receive her unto himself. While seated on a rock, looking at the mountains near the Hudson river, she said to me, "Mr. Burbank, soon, when the Lord comes, all those mountains will be broken and melted." Thus I found that she had not listened idly to the truth of the soon coming of Jesus.

The truth that "Jesus will come soon," should never have the effect to make us do less for Christ, but rather it should prompt us to do more. My cares are increasing, but I praise the Lord that he gives me grace to get along with them cheerfully. God has put his love in my heart; hence I love to work for him. If I knew that the Lord would come this year or next, I would do all that I am now trying to accomplish through his grace, and as much more as possible. In regard to the date of the appearing of Christ, I have ever felt, that if God's servants were to know it, those rich, precious jewels, who make but little noise in the world, but who endure much affliction, and who live in the highways and hedges, will, Simeon-like, be instructed by the Spirit of the Lord; while human calculations, which have ever failed, and may yet ever fail, will be counted but dross, however honestly these calculations may have been made.

The Word declares that Christ will come in "a little while, . . . and will not tarry." This is the cry that I sound out in these dark places of earth. Many have heard and believed the joyful sound. We will point to "the signs of the times," and say, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." We have given all for Christ, and expect in the day of his appearing to enter into that rest that remains for the people of God. Yours, etc., waiting for redemption, F. H. BURBANK.

"Stories for Young Pilgrims."

Elder John M. Sncok, of Michigan, writes: "Those Stories for the Young Pilgrims I have used to good advantage. I think they are a good thing, and hope the Board will publish more of them, as well as a greater variety. They are just such works as we need for the children and youth. Our people do not realize as they ought the importance of caring for the young."

Elder W. H. Mitchell, of Maine, writes:—"The articles are very choice, and almost every one important for booking. I think, if we get a library compiled from such choice selections as these, we shall have no fears to recommend the books to Sunday Schools anywhere and everywhere. The reading will be wholesome, and produce a healthy effect upon the mind, very much unlike one half of the Sunday School Library books now extant."

END OF PAPAL POWER.

This year, 1866, is the one to which many able writers on prophecy have been looking for the termination of the temporal power of the Pope; and events show that they were not far out of the way in their expectations. Why did they look to this year? Because they believed that the 1260 years, during which the "times and laws" (Dan. 7: 25) were to be in the hands of the "little horn," would end this year. But why did they think they would end this year? Because they understood that they began with the grant of Phocas in A. D. 606 (correctly 607,—see article headed, "Decree of Phocas"), by which he made Pope Boniface III. the "UNIVERSAL BISHOP OF ROME," and decreed "that the WHOLE WORLD should be his diocese."

If that act of Phocas, in 607, did not give the "times and laws" into the hands of the "little horn," we are unable to find any other decree that did. But if that decree marks the commencement, then the 1260 years of its continuation would run out in 1867, when the "times and laws," or the temporal power of the "little horn," would end.

We have now arrived at a point where all admit that the Pope's political power is nearly ended, and cannot be revived again.

It will be observed that the pronoun "they," in Dan. 7: 25, does not stand for "saints," but "times and laws." The verse reads as follows:—"And he [the 'little horn'] shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they [the 'times and laws'] shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the dividing of time"; the same period that is allotted to the leopard beast of Rev. 13: 5, where the time is said to be "forty-two months," which equals 1260 days, each of which is understood to represent a year, and the whole period 1260 years.

We do not see any necessity for having the 1260 and 1335 days begin at the same time. The Bible does not say that they begin or end together. But it does seem to be a fact that we have come about to the end of the 1260 years of Papal supremacy; and that, consequently, we are very near the end of the present dispensation, and the glorious appearing of our Savior. Let us all keep upon our watch-towers, waiting for the dawn of the morning of glory.

MEMPHIS.

We learn that since the school was given up in Memphis, Bro. Leslie has so far gained his health as to be able to hold meetings every evening in the week, and the Lord has greatly blessed his efforts. Some eighty are seeking the Savior. The people are anxious to hear about the coming of Jesus. There is a wide door open in the South, among the whites as well as the colored people, for the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom. Who else will go and help sound the alarm?

Should this reach any in the South, who are interested to hear on the subject, and could keep a pilgrim preacher over night, or longer, while he was sounding the alarm, we wish they would send us a note, giving their address, and express their wishes on the subject, that we may know how to act.

Never, in our day, has there been such a rich missionary field opened for us, as is now all ready in the South for the faithful laborers. If one goes there to do the work of an evangelist, he can hardly fail of success. The truth takes strong hold of the people there, and produces immediate results. Now is the time for action. We inquire again, who will go?

SR. BUTLER.—We are sorry to learn that Sr. Butler, our missionary teacher at Memphis, is still very feeble, and that she has no prospect of being any better so long as she remains there; and yet her health is so poor, she is scarcely able to come home. If able to leave, she is probably on her way now. We hope to hear from Bro. Leslie again in a few days. Let earnest prayer be offered up in behalf of these faithful missionaries, who have made great sacrifices for the welfare of the freedmen.

AFFAIRS AT ROME.

Affairs at Rome are continually becoming more and more critical. All eyes are directed to that huge antichristian monster, that has for many centuries held the control of "times and laws," in the city on "the seven hills," and exercised sway over hundreds of millions of people upon this planet. All admit that the "woman" must soon give up her keys of power, and lose all control over "times and laws," which we think have now been in her hands a little over 1259 years. We believe that one year more will complete her work, when she will be tumbled from the Roman hills as a dead carcass.

The following is from the Boston Pilot of Sept. 29th, one of the principal Catholic papers in this country:—

"The French occupation is approaching its close. Count de Sartiges has officially disclosed to the Pope's Government that the Roman States would be entirely empty of French troops by the 15th of next December, the day fixed by the convention.

The publication of the Encyclical, which had been looked for with so much impatience, had been indefinitely postponed. The Holy Father, in his wisdom, has probably considered that the opportune moment for lifting up his voice has not come. It is, however, expected that the Pope will pronounce an allocution at the Consistory which will be held shortly; or, at all events, that either by Encyclical or in an Allocution, the Pope will give some intimation of the line of conduct he intends to adopt under impending circumstances. I do not think the Pope will do anything of the kind. The resolutions of his Holiness must depend entirely on the course of events, and it is impossible to say beforehand what that may be. One may be just as wrong in saying that he will quit Rome as in asserting that he will remain. I am assured by those whose statements are worthy of attention, that the Pope will stay in Rome after the evacuation, until open attempts on his authority or his life shall force him to seek a foreign asylum. Others, very possibly extremely well informed, believe that on the retirement of the French troops, he will depart at once to London or to Malta. It is even stated that the object of Cardinal de Reisach's late visit to England was to pave the way for the reception of his Holiness."

WORTH READING.—Those who read the article in the hygienic columns, headed "Eating and Drinking," will find it will pay for reading. It is high time that more attention should be paid to the laws of health.

DECREE OF PHOCAS.

It is well known to our readers that it has been believed quite generally by Protestant writers that the decree of Phocas, making Pope Boniface III. "UNIVERSAL BISHOP," and the giving to him of the "whole world for a diocese," marked the time for the commencement of the 1260 years, during which "the times and laws" should be in the hand of the "little horn," mentioned in Dan. 7: 25. This decree has been dated in A. D. 606; and if the 1260 years began there, they would end in 1866.

Within a few days we have been giving the history of Pope Boniface III. and the decree of Phocas a careful examination, according to the best authority on this subject,—"Bower's History of the Popes," and we find that the decree of Phocas was in 607 instead of 606.

At this point it may be well to say a word concerning the great value of "Bower's History of the Popes." Says Dr. Samuel H. Cox, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, N. Y., "The work of Bower is every way a great one, with no equal or rival in the English language, or any other in the world." The author was employed nearly fifty years in its preparation. He began it "an ardent Romanist, and ended it a most zealous Protestant." Twenty-five distinguished ministers in the different evangelical churches in New York and Brooklyn, subscribe to the following statement: "There is no other work in the world like it or to compare with it."

Mr. Bower was born near Dundee, in Scotland, Jan. 17th, 1685, and died Sept. 2nd, 1766, aged 80. He was educated at Douay, in France, went to Rome about A. D. 1700, and became a Jesuit. He renounced Catholicism, fled to England in 1726, and passed through great dangers on the way, on account of the hot pursuit of the Catholics, who were determined he should not escape alive; for he had become familiar with "the best historical documents" at Rome, and all the operations of the "mother of harlots." As all the records relating to the election, reign, and death of the Popes, as well as the emperors, are very accurately kept at Rome; and as Mr. Bower had full access to them, and as said of him by the American editor, in the introduction to the work, "He seems in his great work to be sincere, and consistent, and scrupulously honest, from beginning to end;" it follows, as declared by the twenty-five distinguished ministers of New York and Brooklyn, that "there is no other work in the world like it, or to compare with it." Its records and dates are of the most reliable character.

We will now let Mr. Bower speak in relation to the date of the decree of Phocas, and the results. Sabinian, the Pope preceding Boniface III., died Feb. 22nd, A. D. 606, having "held the See but one year, five months, and nine days."—Bower, Vol. I., p. 425. Mr. Bower then proceeds as follows:—

"[Year of Christ 607.] The death of Sabinian was followed by a vacancy that lasted (and yet no writer accounts for it), eleven months and twenty-six days; that is, from the 22nd of February, 606, to the 19th of the same month, 607, when Boniface, the third of that name, was ordained, and placed in the chair. He too was a deacon of the Roman church; was a native of Rome, and was sent by Gregory, in the year 603, to Constantinople, with the character of his nuncio, to congratulate, in his name, Phocas and Leontia, on their accession to the imperial crown. His having been chosen by so great a Pope to discharge that office, at so critical a juncture, leaves no room to question his address and abilities. Upon the death of Gregory, he returned to Rome; and Sabinian dying soon after his return, he was chosen to succeed him, as one who was not only known to Phocas, but greatly favored both by him and his wife; for, by flattering the usurper, as Gregory had done, and conniving at his cruelties, if not applauding him in them, while the rest of mankind exclaimed against him as an outrageous tyrant, he had so insinuated himself into his good graces, as to become one of his chief favorites, or, as Sigebert writes, his only favorite, being the only person in the whole city of Constantinople who approved, or could so dissemble as to make the tyrant believe he approved of his conduct. For that merit alone he was chosen; and though he enjoyed his new dignity but a very short time (for he did not even live to the end of the year in which he was raised to it), yet it may truly be said, that to him alone the Roman see owes more than to all his predecessors together. For he no sooner found himself vested with the papal dignity, than, taking advantage of the partiality and favor of Phocas to him, and his aversion and hatred to the patriarch Cyriacus, he not only prevailed on the tyrant to revoke the decree settling the title of 'universal bishop' on the bishop of the imperial city; but obtained, what no man would believe could have ever come into the thoughts of a successor of Gregory to demand, were it not vouched by all the historians to a man; but obtained, I say, a new decree, settling on himself and his successors that very title which his immediate predecessor but one, and, of all his predecessors, the best and the greatest, had so often condemned in any bishop whatever, and rejected, with the utmost abhorrence, when offered to himself, as 'vain, proud, profane, impious, execrable, blasphemous, anti-christian, heretical, diabolical.'

Boniface could not but know that the controverted title had been thus stigmatized over and over again by two of his predecessors successively, Pelagius II. and Gregory; that whoever should give it to, or approve it in another, was declared by Gregory a heretic; and that whoever should presume, in the pride of his heart, to take it to himself, was by the same great pope declared a 'follower of satan, a rival of satan in pride, and the forerunner of antichrist.' All this Boniface well knew; but so inconceivably great was his ambition, so utterly unbridled was his desire of exalting his see, that, rather than to let slip the favorable opportunity that now offered, and might never offer again, of raising it higher than it had ever yet been, or, in the opinion of his own predecessors, ought ever to be, he chose to stand condemned, out of their mouths, as a 'heretic,' as a 'follower of satan,' as 'a rival of satan in pride,' as the 'forerunner of antichrist.' Had Gregory been allowed to return from the dead, how great would his surprise have been, how great his indignation, to find 'the badge of pride' thus become, so soon after his death, the peculiar badge of his see, and 'the mark of antichrist' the peculiar mark of his successors. I say, of his successors; for by them that 'badge of pride,' that 'mark of antichrist,' is borne to this day, in spite of all the names of reproach and ignominy with which it was branded by the most renowned and revered of all their predecessors.

As for the edict issued by Phocas on this occasion, it has not indeed reached our times. But that thereby the decree of the council of Constantinople in 588, entailing the title of universal bishop on the bishop of Constantinople, and his successors, was revoked and annulled; that the said title was transferred from them to Boniface and his successors, and the bishop of Rome declared the 'head of the whole catholic church,' is what all the historians, whom I have quoted above, unanimously vouch. In the bishop of Constantinople the title of universal bishop is generally thought to have been no more than a badge of honor, or an honorary title, without any accession of power. And indeed it does not appear, as I observed above, that in virtue of that title he ever exercised or claimed any. But Boniface had scarce obtained it, when he took upon him to exercise an unanswerable jurisdiction and power to that time unknown and unheard of in the catholic church. For no sooner was the imperial edict, vesting him with the title of universal bishop, and declaring him 'head of the church,' brought to Rome, than, assembling a council in the basilic of St. Peter, consisting of seventy-two bishops, thirty-four presbyters, and all the deacons and inferior clergy of that city, he acted there as if he had not been vested with the title alone, though Phocas probably meant to grant him no more, but with all the power of an universal bishop, with all the authority of a supreme head, or rather absolute monarch of the church. For by a decree which he issued in that council, it was pronounced, declared, and defined, that no election of a bishop should thenceforth be deemed lawful and good, unless made by the people and clergy, approved by the prince, or lord of the city, and confirmed by the pope interposing his authority in the following terms: 'we will and command, volumus et jubemus.'

The imperial edict, therefore, if we may so call the edict of an usurper, and a tyrant, was not, as the popish writers pretend, a bare confirmation of the primacy of the see of Rome; but the grant of a new title, which the pope immediately improved into a power, answering that title. And thus was the power of the pope as universal bishop, as 'head of the church,' or, in other words, the papal supremacy, first introduced. It owed its original to the worst of men; was procured by the basest means, by flattering a tyrant in his wickedness and tyranny; and was in itself, if we stand to the judgment of Gregory the Great, 'anti-christian, heretical, blasphemous, diabolical.'. . . .

To return to Boniface: he died on the 10th of November of the present year [607], having enjoyed his dignity only eight months and twenty-two days."

It will be seen from the foregoing that the decree of Phocas was between Feb. 18th 607, and the 10th of Nov. of the same year, which marks the time that Boniface was Pope, a period as Bower says of "only eight months and twenty-two days."

Now please observe what Mr. Bower says about this important grant of power by Phocas to Pope Boniface III., 607: "To him alone the Roman See owes more than to all his predecessors together." "He . . . obtained what no man would believe could have ever come into the thoughts of a successor of Gregory to demand, were it not vouched by all the historians to a man."

When Boniface, and his successors at Rome, had thus been made "UNIVERSAL BISHOP," and Phocas had decreed "that the WHOLE WORLD should be his diocese" (See Brightman on "Revelation Revealed," p. 205,) it looks more like giving the "times and laws" into the hands of the "little horn," than any other event we can find in the history of that power.

Observe, Mr. Bower says, "Boniface had scarce obtained it [the title of 'universal Bishop'], when he took upon him to exercise an unanswerable jurisdiction and power, to that time unknown and unheard of in the Catholic church . . . He acted . . . as if he had not been vested with the title alone, . . . but with all the power of an universal bishop, with all the authority of a supreme head, or rather absolute monarch of the church."

He issued a decree that "no Bishop should be lawfully elected from that time forward, unless 'confirmed by the Pope.'" Then Mr. Bower says, "Thus was the power of the Pope, as universal bishop, as 'head of the church,' or in other words the Papal supremacy FIRST introduced."

THE HAPPY LAND.

ISA. 62: 4, 5. Thou shalt not any more be called forsaken; nor of thy land shall it be said, It is desolate. But thou shalt be called MY DELIGHT, and thy land THE MARRIED LAND. For Jehovah shall delight in thee, and thy land shall be joined in marriage. For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as a bridegroom rejoiceth in his bride, so shall thy God rejoice in thee.—Boothroyd's Bible.

We take this glowing prediction as having reference to the epoch of the saints possessing the Canaan of rest, the new earth, the eternal kingdom of God and of Christ. Just as the holy and perpetual union between Jesus and his church, which commences on his personal return from heaven, is denominated the "Marriage of the Lamb," so the taking possession of the whole earth, and the residence therein of the redeemed forever, is, by the sublime Isaiah, styled a holy union—a wedlock. This is and must be the sense, and we can see room for no other. And it is fitting that it should be so. Earth is the theatre of man's origin, his history, his death-sleep and resurrection,—why not also of his destiny? "Establish the earth," "inherit the earth," "reign on the earth," "recompensed in the earth," "dwell in the earth," and "the earth abideth forever," etc., are Scripture phrases. Here in the place of suffering and trial will be the land of peace and joy. And this wedded soil, once accursed, but now robed like a bride, shall sing for very gladness. The mountains and trees will find a voice, and pour out one perpetual psalm of praise. All the sweet joy of a bridal day, all the rich glories of a festival such as God only can prepare,—all the splendor of a royal banquet will wait upon that happy marriage. This, and this only, of all the planets, is the saints' eternal home. We shall not be primates of the universe, nor roam from star to star, but "inherit the land (eh-rets, earth), and dwell therein forever."—Psa. 37: 29. Happy art thou, O land, for the Lord God is thy king. Happy will be thy sons, for the Bridegroom, Jesus, is in the midst forevermore. Out of the womb of this creation, in the days of her desolateness and ruin, they came forth; now when nature's pangs are healed, and Eden blooms no more to fade, they—thy saved sons—shall rest on mother earth's bosom through the long, glad ages. Then death and hades will be far away. Wondrous compliment; God says this new world shall be "My Delight." Hence like the first Paradise, which he seven times over pronounced "good," the restored kingdom will comprehend Jehovah's beau-ideal of a perfect world. O it stirs the heart with mighty joy to think of it!

> Go, earth! go wipe thy falling tears,
> Forget thy heavy wo;
> Hope died not with thy first-born sons,
> Six thousand years ago' D. T. T.

"ALL IS VANITY."

If any one covets a crown, or a sceptre, or a presidential chair, or a millionaire's fortune, or a post of honor among men, or a queen's jewels, or a pleasure seeker's bubbles, let him first read what they say, and how they feel and fare. Lord Chesterfield, the prince of fashion, with Solomon said of his gay, golden life, "All is vanity." Alexander the Great conquered all the world, and died, aged but thirty-two, in a fit of drunkenness,—perhaps poisoned to death. Julius Cæsar conquered Europe, and won royal honor, but at the last was assassinated by a supposed friend. The impious and proud Voltaire said, The world was full of wretches, and he "the most wretched of all." One of the Spanish emperors (Abderrahman III.) reigned in splendor fifty years, but declared he could count up in that half century "only fourteen days of unalloyed happiness." Hannibal, the renowned African hero, died of poison administered by his own hand, unlamented and unwept. Charles V. resigned his throne and crown in despair of finding happiness as an emperor. Of the great Roman emperors, history informs us that no less than nine in succession were slain by the Prætorian Guards. The infamous empress Catherine, of Russia, could get no sleep, so did her guilty conscience torment her.

Lincoln, the ruler of thirty millions, was shot dead in an instant. Some of the sovereigns of Great Britain were assassinated, or beheaded. Queen Elizabeth died saying she would give "millions of money for an inch of time," in which to get ready. Louis Napoleon has lived in constant fear of the assassin's bullet. Of sixty-seven queens, who have sat on the throne of France, eleven were divorced, two were executed, nine died young, seven were widowed early, three cruelly treated, three exiled, the rest being either poisoned or broken-hearted. Napoleon Bonaparte, the arbiter of Europe, declared he had been as fortunate as any man on earth, but "had not enjoyed one hour of real happiness in all his life." Truly—"Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown."

The great Hume rested his hope in philosophy, and as the result declared he was "affrighted and confounded at the forlorn solitude" in which it placed him. Goethe, who was so much admired in high circles, said at the age of eighty-four he "had scarcely tasted twenty-four hours solid comfort in all his life." George Brummell, with a most princely fortune, spent £800 a year on dress alone, and died at last in a lunatic asylum. The Duke of Marlborough had a million of money, and vast estates; but looking around upon them as far as his vision could extend, exclaimed to a friend, "I do not believe that there is in all this vast circuit a more unhappy man than myself." Robert Clive became the conqueror of all India, and had the treasures of the East poured at his feet, but died disappointed and a suicide. Christopher Columbus discovered a new world, but was robbed of the honor of naming it, became an object of hatred and abuse, and died poor and sorrowful. William Beckford, of England, had an income of £100-000 a year, and finally died in want and misery.

The wretched life and unhappy death of Lord Byron are well known. William Pitt possessed the rarest intellectual gift in England, but lived in misery and unhappiness, and died of a broken heart. The last words of the great orator Sheridan were, "I am absolutely undone." Sir Walter Scott, who received the honors of an empire, died in sadness and sorrow, and without hope. The celebrated poet Campbell affirmed that "his fame was only bitter," and died in grief and weariness. Gibbon, the great historian and infidel, died saying, "All is dark and doubtful." The eloquent John Randolph's last word was, "Remorse." William C. Johnson and T. F. Johnson were a few years ago the most brilliant orators in Congress; one died an outcast and pauper, the other became diseased, and sunk down in ignominy and misery,—all through intemperance. Bulwer, the great novelist, said in his last days, "I am gloomy and unhappy." The delirious, dying hours of John Jacob Astor, who was worth twenty-five millions, were—"Money, money, bring me money." Ebenezer Francis, of Boston, who died leaving four millions of dollars, was in the panic of 1857 reduced almost to despair by the abundance of his money. Stephen Girard, the great millionaire of Philadelphia, said that with all his wealth he "lived like a galley slave, passed sleepless nights, and was worn out with care."

A great American capitalist, when asked why he did not have his life written, replied in these sad words, "My life has been a failure." The four brothers Rothschild are the bankers of Europe, the wealthiest men in the world. Their united income is $1000 an hour. But when some one said to the Baron at Paris, "I should think you would be happy with such a kingly fortune," his quick, reproving, negative reply was,—"Happy! me happy!"

Reader, is not this sad record a striking commentary on the vanity of all earthly riches and greatness? Which would you prefer, to be ranked in this high but wretched company, and, like Abner, die "as the fool dieth"; or be an humble, faithful christian, and one day inherit immortal life in a glorious and endless kingdom? Which? D. T. T.

WHICH: ANGEL, OR MAN?

Was it an angel, or a man, who gave John the Revelation? Or was it that undefinable, invisible, and intangible thing, the so-called spirit of a man? Or was it an angel-man, i. e., a man, or his spirit, turned into an angel? We suppose we may lawfully inquire into the nature of this glorious revealing agent, and we would observe, first, that he is five times called "an angel," "the angel," "his angel." And in not a single instance is he called a man. Neither is he once called a spirit. Still the common version of Rev. 22: 9 seems to many readers to teach that he was one of the prophets,—hence a man. Now as Enoch and Elijah had not died and so could not exist disembodied (such disembodied existence being impossible even on the popular hypothesis if they were not dead), should the text compel us to regard this celestial agent as a man, might it not have been one of these translated worthies? Admitting this, then there would be no necessity of considering him as a mere spiritual or ghostly presence, as some do Moses in the transfiguration on Mount Tabor. And so the spiritual human theory of this "angel" is fairly tipped over by the exercise of a little common sense thinking, leaving out the absurdity and bad theology of this notion. Furthermore, we think it was not either Enoch or Elijah in bodily person. For first, men, personal single men, are nowhere in the Bible called angels, save in the sense of a human agent or messenger, as God in Matt. 11: 10. Mark 1: 2 and Luke 7: 27 call John "my (angelos) messenger." But never in the sense of a divine being or celestial visitant is man denominated an (angelos) angel. And nowhere in the sacred word is man ever said to be "equal to the angels," until the resurrection and world to come, as our Lord informs us in Luke 20: 35, 36. Even of Christ, who took a man's nature and form, it is said, "Thou (Lord) didst make him for a little while inferior to angels." See Marginal reading, and Diaglott of Heb. 2: 7. And the passage in Luke 20: 35 would preclude even Enoch and Elijah from equality with the angels until the dead are resurrected.

Still it is claimed that the rendering of Rev. 22: 9 compels us to believe this holy messenger to have been a transfigured human being. And on this idea, Spiritualism, which strangely confounds the human and angelic, builds its chimeras concerning angel-men, or men metamorphosed by death into angels. And some who kick at Spiritualism as the work of Satan do no better with the passage. But the following translations make all plain. The sense of the angel's words it will be seen is not, "I am one of thy brethren, the prophets," but rather, "I am a fellow-servant of the prophets," etc. "I am a fellow-servant of thee, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them that keep the sayings of this book: worship God."—American Bible Union Trans. "I am thy fellow-servant, and the fellow-servant of thy brethren the prophets," etc.—Coverdale's Bible. So, too, read the versions of Tyndale, Cranmer, and Geneva; making him a real angel who had formerly served or waited upon the prophet Daniel and others of the ancient seers, and who had come at the command of Christ to serve the seer of Patmos and through him the whole church. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."—Psalms 34: 7. Hence he is the waiting-angel on all who keep the sayings of Revelation. "I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches." "He sent and signified it by his angel." And so the glorious one who gave us all so much light, and who refused to be worshiped, but deferred all the honor to his great Master, was neither a ghost nor a man, but "the angel of the Lord." And some day not far distant, you and I, my dear reader, may be summoned to lock arms with this holy and bright one for a flight skyward to see the King. How would you like it? Have you read 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17, and Matt. 24: 31 lately? If not, read again with care, and—THINK. D. T. T.

THE PROPOSED TRACT.

BRO. GRANT:—I was very glad to see an article from Bro. Taylor about publishing a condensed tract, giving the main arguments upon the Advent faith,—the great truth and glorious hope of the church of God in all ages. I think most all would read and investigate a tract of that kind, while a large book would be hardly glanced at; and if it was, would not be so likely to be understood as a tract of thirty or forty pages, as proposed. Such a work might do great good, and awaken an interest in many minds on the nearness of the judgment. I do hope there will be no delay in having it published. Time is short, and what is done must be done soon, for the Master is about to rise up and shut to the door; no chance for poor sinners then. I cheerfully add my mite for this object. I will send $25, and I do hope that our brethren who have this world's goods will give liberally, as the Lord has prospered them.

If all would give what they could, and not miss what they give, what an immense amount of tracts would it send broadcast all over the land, warning our fellowmen, giving them no excuse in the day of judgment, that they did not know these things in time to get ready. God bless this noble enterprise. What we do let us do quickly. God's great clock of time is surely about to give its final stroke. In an hour when this wicked world think not, the Son of man cometh "as the lightning,"—"as a thief,"—"as it was in the days of Noah," while this busy world is overcharged with the cares of this life; eating, drinking, etc. How plain the Master described the state the world would be in when he came back to earth again.

But, thank God, another class is described, who are to witness the glorious coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. They are the ones upon whom that day shall not come unawares. They are the ones that Paul said would receive a crown with him; and they will exclaim, Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and can lift up our heads, knowing our redemption draweth nigh.—Earth's dark night of weeping, sorrowing, mourning and death is about over, and the blessed immortal state about to be ushered in; and the curse, which has been so heavily upon the earth, removed. Let us work while it is day, for the night cometh,—a dark night for a wicked world, but a morning of joy to the righteous. Blessed day, haste thy dawning. Yours striving for the better world,

Landoff, N. H. MARY W. EASTMAN.

A DIME APIECE.

"I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."—ACTS 20: 35.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—Our beloved Bro. in Christ, Elder Wm. A. Fenn, having sustained a severe loss in the death of a valuable horse, he being, like most of God's people, poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, and heir of the kingdom, we trust; and, as we are exhorted by the apostle to bear "one another's burdens," you are hereby informed that you can greatly encourage his heart as he goes forth in his labor of love to publish the gospel of a soon coming kingdom to a perishing world, by sending in your mite as you may each be blessed of the Lord. A dime apiece, sent in by the brethren and sisters, would never be felt by any, and would enable him immediately to purchase another horse, and send him on his way rejoicing.

Those who feel disposed to aid our dear brother, may send in their mites to the undersigned, all of which will be thankfully received, duly acknowledged, and promptly delivered to Bro. Fenn.

Your Sister in Christ, MARY ALBRIGHT.

HOME AGAIN.

BRO. GRANT:—I arrived home with my daughter Tuesday. She suffered no injury by moving, and is able to get about on crutches. I was obliged to leave my appointments west, and trust that I shall be pardoned by my brethren when they understand the reasons. Our heavenly Father has gladdened our hearts with a speedy recovery of health and strength to our daughter, which has enabled us to return many weeks sooner than we or the physicians expected. Our pilgrimage west has been one of much experience and profit to ourselves, and we trust benefit to others. We have found kind friends and christian sympathy, which are appreciated much; and will be numbered as tokens of divine appointment, till He comes who regardeth the afflicted, and will bring every work into judgment.

I am now ready to resume my labors east, as the Lord may direct; and as soon as I can make some necessary arrangements at home, shall be prepared to go where duty calls. H. PRATT.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

Since my last article was written, we have received several letters containing money for our mission work, in all $13.00. A portion of this sum has been acknowledged by letter, and the remainder we acknowledge through the Crisis, as follows: "A friend to the poor," New Haven, $1.00; M. B. Sampson, $1.00; L. C. Johnson, $1.00. All these friends have our heartfelt thanks for their donations to the cause in this place. May grace, mercy and peace abide with them.

This morning, through the grace of God, I have the blessed privilege of reporting the conversion of one of our mission girls. For several weeks she had been in an awakened state. Recently she attended the campmeeting conducted by Sister Anna Smith, of New York, at Peekskill, N. Y. While there, the Lord was pleased to use Sr. Boide as an instrument to lead her to Christ, and one week ago to-day she found peace in believing on a crucified Redeemer. At the time her conviction was the greatest, she fell prostrate and helpless to the earth, and was carried to one of the tents, where she remained all night calling on Jesus for mercy. The next day, the sweet messenger of God, the Holy Spirit, assured her of her adoption into the family of God. Our hearts are filled with praise and thanksgiving to God for this blessed token of his favor to us in this branch of our missionary labors.

This is the girl I took with me last summer to New Haven, Worcester, Westboro, Salem, Portsmouth, Kennebunkport, and other cities and towns. No one that has been given to me has been in such peril as she has been in. She has always been a good girl, but if she had remained at her home on Bedford street until this time, she would have been ruined forever. She is quite prepossessing in her appearance, and would have been forced into sin, if the Lord had not sent me to her home to rescue her. The locality where she lived is perfectly horrible in its character. Licentiousness, drunken and otherwise depraved beings, white and black, old and young, abound there. I did by her just what I would do for any other good girl that I should find in such a terrible locality. The Lord gave her to me in answer to prayer, and I am endeavoring to bring her up in the fear of the Lord. She is like a timid lamb rescued from a den of wild beasts. I have witnessed disgusting and awful scenes in the house from which she was taken.

Some of our brethren, who look for the Lord this year or next, have intimated that "The Little Wanderers' Home" was not needed, as the Lord was so nigh. Suppose I had let little Maria alone, as they advised. Doubtless, by this time, she would have been a ruined girl, in body and spirit. But she has been taken from Sodom, and a new song has been put into her mouth. She now looks for the appearing of her Savior from heaven to receive her unto himself. While seated on a rock, looking at the mountains near the Hudson river, she said to me, "Mr. Burbank, soon, when the Lord comes, all those mountains will be broken and melted." Thus I found that she had not listened idly to the truth of the soon coming of Jesus.

The truth that "Jesus will come soon," should never have the effect to make us do less for Christ, but rather it should prompt us to do more. My cares are increasing, but I praise the Lord that he gives me grace to get along with them cheerfully. God has put his love in my heart; hence I love to work for him. If I knew that the Lord would come this year or next, I would do all that I am now trying to accomplish through his grace, and as much more as possible. In regard to the date of the appearing of Christ, I have ever felt, that if God's servants were to know it, those rich, precious jewels, who make but little noise in the world, but who endure much affliction, and who live in the highways and hedges, will, Simeon-like, be instructed by the Spirit of the Lord; while human calculations, which have ever failed, and may yet ever fail, will be counted but dross, however honestly these calculations may have been made.

The Word declares that Christ will come in "a little while, . . . and will not tarry." This is the cry that I sound out in these dark places of earth. Many have heard and believed the joyful sound. We will point to "the signs of the times," and say, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." We have given all for Christ, and expect in the day of his appearing to enter into that rest that remains for the people of God. Yours, etc., waiting for redemption, F. H. BURBANK.

"Stories for Young Pilgrims."

Elder John M. Snook, of Michigan, writes: "Those Stories for the Young Pilgrims I have used to good advantage. I think they are a good thing, and hope the Board will publish more of them, as well as a greater variety. They are just such works as we need for the children and youth. Our people do not realize as they ought the importance of caring for the young."

Elder W. H. Mitchell, of Maine, writes:—"The articles are very choice, and almost every one important for booking. I think, if we get a library compiled from such choice selections as these, we shall have no fears to recommend the books to Sunday Schools anywhere and everywhere. The reading will be wholesome, and produce a healthy effect upon the mind, very much unlike one half of the Sunday School Library books now extant."

END OF PAPAL POWER.

This year, 1866, is the one to which many able writers on prophecy have been looking for the termination of the temporal power of the Pope; and events show that they were not far out of the way in their expectations. Why did they look to this year? Because they believed that the 1260 years, during which the "times and laws" (Dan. 7: 25) were to be in the hands of the "little horn," would end this year. But why did they think they would end this year? Because they understood that they began with the grant of Phocas in A. D. 606 (correctly 607,—see article headed, "Decree of Phocas"), by which he made Pope Boniface III. the "UNIVERSAL BISHOP OF ROME," and decreed "that the WHOLE WORLD should be his diocese."

If that act of Phocas, in 607, did not give the "times and laws" into the hands of the "little horn," we are unable to find any other decree that did. But if that decree marks the commencement, then the 1260 years of its continuation would run out in 1867, when the "times and laws," or the temporal power of the "little horn," would end.

We have now arrived at a point where all admit that the Pope's political power is nearly ended, and cannot be revived again.

It will be observed that the pronoun "they," in Dan. 7: 25, does not stand for "saints," but "times and laws." The verse reads as follows:—"And he [the 'little horn'] shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they [the 'times and laws'] shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the dividing of time"; the same period that is allotted to the leopard beast of Rev. 13: 5, where the time is said to be "forty-two months," which equals 1260 days, each of which is understood to represent a year, and the whole period 1260 years.

We do not see any necessity for having the 1260 and 1335 days begin at the same time. The Bible does not say that they begin or end together. But it does seem to be a fact that we have come about to the end of the 1260 years of Papal supremacy; and that, consequently, we are very near the end of the present dispensation, and the glorious appearing of our Savior. Let us all keep upon our watch-towers, waiting for the dawn of the morning of glory.

MEMPHIS.

We learn that since the school was given up in Memphis, Bro. Leslie has so far gained his health as to be able to hold meetings every evening in the week, and the Lord has greatly blessed his efforts. Some eighty are seeking the Savior. The people are anxious to hear about the coming of Jesus. There is a wide door open in the South, among the whites as well as the colored people, for the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom. Who else will go and help sound the alarm?

Should this reach any in the South, who are interested to hear on the subject, and could keep a pilgrim preacher over night, or longer, while he was sounding the alarm, we wish they would send us a note, giving their address, and express their wishes on the subject, that we may know how to act.

Never, in our day, has there been such a rich missionary field opened for us, as is now all ready in the South for the faithful laborers. If one goes there to do the work of an evangelist, he can hardly fail of success. The truth takes strong hold of the people there, and produces immediate results. Now is the time for action. We inquire again, who will go?

SR. BUTLER.—We are sorry to learn that Sr. Butler, our missionary teacher at Memphis, is still very feeble, and that she has no prospect of being any better so long as she remains there; and yet her health is so poor, she is scarcely able to come home. If able to leave, she is probably on her way now. We hope to hear from Bro. Leslie again in a few days. Let earnest prayer be offered up in behalf of these faithful missionaries, who have made great sacrifices for the welfare of the freedmen.

AFFAIRS AT ROME.

Affairs at Rome are continually becoming more and more critical. All eyes are directed to that huge antichristian monster, that has for many centuries held the control of "times and laws," in the city on "the seven hills," and exercised sway over hundreds of millions of people upon this planet. All admit that the "woman" must soon give up her keys of power, and lose all control over "times and laws," which we think have now been in her hands a little over 1259 years. We believe that one year more will complete her work, when she will be tumbled from the Roman hills as a dead carcase.

The following is from the Boston Pilot of Sept. 29th, one of the principal Catholic papers in this country:—

"The French occupation is approaching its close. Count de Sartiges has officially disclosed to the Pope's Government that the Roman States would be entirely empty of French troops by the 15th of next December, the day fixed by the convention.

The publication of the Encyclical, which had been looked for with so much impatience, had been indefinitely postponed. The Holy Father, in his wisdom, has probably considered that the opportune moment for lifting up his voice has not come. It is, however, expected that the Pope will pronounce an allocution at the Consistory which will be held shortly; or, at all events, that either by Encyclical or in an Allocution, the Pope will give some intimation of the line of conduct he intends to adopt under impending circumstances. I do not think the Pope will do anything of the kind. The resolutions of his Holiness must depend entirely on the course of events, and it is impossible to say beforehand what that may be. One may be just as wrong in saying that he will quit Rome as in asserting that he will remain. I am assured by those whose statements are worthy of attention, that the Pope will stay in Rome after the evacuation, until open attempts on his authority or his life shall force him to seek a foreign asylum. Others, very possibly extremely well informed, believe that on the retirement of the French troops, he will depart at once to London or to Malta. It is even stated that the object of Cardinal de Reisach's late visit to England was to pave the way for the reception of his Holiness."

WORTH READING.—Those who read the article in the hygienic columns, headed "Eating and Drinking," will find it will pay for reading. It is high time that more attention should be paid to the laws of health.

DECREE OF PHOCAS.

It is well known to our readers that it has been believed quite generally by Protestant writers that the decree of Phocas, making Pope Boniface III. "UNIVERSAL BISHOP," and the giving to him of the "whole world for a diocese," marked the time for the commencement of the 1260 years, during which "the times and laws" should be in the hand of the "little horn," mentioned in Dan. 7: 25. This decree has been dated in A. D. 606; and if the 1260 years began there, they would end in 1866.

Within a few days we have been giving the history of Pope Boniface III. and the decree of Phocas a careful examination, according to the best authority on this subject,—"Bower's History of the Popes," and we find that the decree of Phocas was in 607 instead of 606.

At this point it may be well to say a word concerning the great value of "Bower's History of the Popes." Says Dr. Samuel H. Cox, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, N. Y., "The work of Bower is every way a great one, with no equal or rival in the English language, or any other in the world." The author was employed nearly fifty years in its preparation. He began it "an ardent Romanist, and ended it a most zealous Protestant." Twenty-five distinguished ministers in the different evangelical churches in New York and Brooklyn, subscribe to the following statement: "There is no other work in the world like it or to compare with it."

Mr. Bower was born near Dundee, in Scotland, Jan. 17th, 1685, and died Sept, 2nd, 1766, aged 80. He was educated at Douay, in France, went to Rome about A. D. 1700, and became a Jesuit. He renounced Catholicism, fled to England in 1726, and passed through great dangers on the way, on account of the hot pursuit of the Catholics, who were determined he should not escape alive; for he had become familiar with "the best historical documents" at Rome, and all the operations of the "mother of harlots." As all the records relating to the election, reign, and death of the Popes, as well as the emperors, are very accurately kept at Rome; and as Mr. Bower had full access to them, and as said of him by the American editor, in the introduction to the work, "He seems in his great work to be sincere, and consistent, and scrupulously honest, from beginning to end;" it follows, as declared by the twenty-five distinguished ministers of New York and Brooklyn, that "there is no other work in the world like it, or to compare with it." Its records and dates are of the most reliable character.

We will now let Mr. Bower speak in relation to the date of the decree of Phocas, and the results. Sabinian, the Pope preceding Boniface III., died Feb. 22nd, A. D. 606, having "held the See but one year, five months, and nine days."—Bower, Vol. I., p. 425. Mr. Bower then proceeds as follows:—

"[Year of Christ 607.] The death of Sabinian was followed by a vacancy that lasted (and yet no writer accounts for it), eleven months and twenty-six days; that is, from the 22nd of February, 606, to the 19th of the same month, 607, when Boniface, the third of that name, was ordained, and placed in the chair. He too was a deacon of the Roman church; was a native of Rome, and was sent by Gregory, in the year 603, to Constantinople, with the character of his nuncio, to congratulate, in his name, Phocas and Leontia, on their accession to the imperial crown. His having been chosen by so great a Pope to discharge that office, at so critical a juncture, leaves no room to question his address and abilities. Upon the death of Gregory, he returned to Rome; and Sabinian dying soon after his return, he was chosen to succeed him, as one who was not only well known to Phocas, but greatly favored both by him and his wife; for, by flattering the usurper, as Gregory had done, and conniving at his cruelties, if not applauding him in them, while the rest of mankind exclaimed against him as an outrageous tyrant, he had so insinuated himself into his good graces, as to become one of his chief favorites, or, as Sigebert writes, his only favorite, being the only person in the whole city of Constantinople who approved, or could so dissemble as to make the tyrant believe he approved of his conduct. For that merit alone he was chosen; and though he enjoyed his new dignity but a very short time (for he did not even live to the end of the year in which he was raised to it), yet it may truly be said, that to him alone the Roman see owes more than to all his predecessors together. For he no sooner found himself vested with the papal dignity, than, taking advantage of the partiality and favor of Phocas to him, and his aversion and hatred to the patriarch Cyriacus, he not only prevailed on the tyrant to revoke the decree settling the title of 'universal bishop' on the bishop of the imperial city; but obtained, what no man would believe could have ever come into the thoughts of a successor of Gregory to demand, were it not vouched by all the historians to a man; but obtained, I say, a new decree, settling on himself and his successors that very title which his immediate predecessor but one, and, of all his predecessors, the best and the greatest, had so often condemned in any bishop whatever, and rejected, with the utmost abhorrence, when offered to himself, as 'vain, proud, profane, impious, execrable, blasphemous, anti-christian, heretical, diabolical.'

Boniface could not but know that the controverted title had been thus stigmatized over and over again by two of his predecessors successively, Pelagius II. and Gregory; that whoever should give it to, or approve it in another, was declared by Gregory a heretic; and that whoever should presume, in the pride of his heart, to take it to himself, was by the same great pope declared a 'follower of satan, a rival of satan in pride, and the forerunner of antichrist.' All this Boniface well knew; but so inconceivably great was his ambition, so utterly unbridled was his desire of exalting his see, that, rather than to let slip the favorable opportunity that now offered, and might never offer again, of raising it higher than it had ever yet been, or, in the opinion of his own predecessors, ought ever to be, he chose to stand condemned, out of their mouths, as a 'heretic,' as a 'follower of satan,' as 'a rival of satan in pride,' as 'the forerunner of antichrist.' Had Gregory been allowed to return from the dead, how great would his surprise have been, how great his indignation, to find 'the badge of pride' thus become, so soon after his death, the peculiar badge of his see, and 'the mark of antichrist' the peculiar mark of his successors. I say, of his successors; for by them that 'badge of pride,' that 'mark of antichrist,' is borne to this day, in spite of all the names of reproach and ignominy with which it was branded by the most renowned and revered of all their predecessors.

As for the edict issued by Phocas on this occasion, it has not indeed reached our times. But that thereby the decree of the council of Constantinople in 588, entailing the title of universal bishop on the bishop of Constantinople, and his successors, was revoked and annulled; that the said title was transferred from them to Boniface and his successors, and the bishop of Rome declared the 'head of the whole catholic church,' is what all the historians, whom I have quoted above, unanimously vouch. In the bishop of Constantinople the title of universal bishop is generally thought to have been no more than a badge of honor, or an honorary title, without any accession of power. And indeed it does not appear, as I observed above, that in virtue of that title he ever exercised or claimed any. But Boniface had scarce obtained it, when he took upon him to exercise an unanswerable jurisdiction and power to that time unknown and unheard of in the catholic church. For no sooner was the imperial edict, vesting him with the title of universal bishop, and declaring him 'head of the church,' brought to Rome, than, assembling a council in the basilic of St. Peter, consisting of seventy-two bishops, thirty-four presbyters, and all the deacons and inferior clergy of that city, he acted there as if he had not been vested with the title alone, though Phocas probably meant to grant him no more, but with all the power of an universal bishop, with all the authority of a supreme head, or rather absolute monarch of the church. For by a decree which he issued in that council, it was pronounced, declared, and defined, that no election of a bishop should thenceforth be deemed lawful and good, unless made by the people and clergy, approved by the prince, or lord of the city, and confirmed by the pope interposing his authority in the following terms: 'we will and command, volumus et jubemus.'

The imperial edict, therefore, if we may so call the edict of an usurper, and a tyrant, was not, as the popish writers pretend, a bare confirmation of the primacy of the see of Rome; but the grant of a new title, which the pope immediately improved into a power, answering that title. And thus was the power of the pope as universal bishop, as 'head of the church,' or, in other words, the papal supremacy, first introduced. It owed its original to the worst of men; was procured by the basest means, by flattering a tyrant in his wickedness and tyranny; and was in itself, if we stand to the judgment of Gregory the Great, 'anti-christian, heretical, blasphemous, diabolical.'". . . .

To return to Boniface: he died on the 10th of November of the present year [607], having enjoyed his dignity only eight months and twenty-two days."

It will be seen from the foregoing that the decree of Phocas was between Feb. 18th 607, and the 10th of Nov. of the same year, which marks the time that Boniface was Pope, a period as Bower says of "only eight months and twenty-two days."

Now please observe what Mr. Bower says about this important grant of power by Phocas to Pope Boniface III., 607: "To him alone the Roman See owes more than to all his predecessors together." "He . . . obtained what no man would believe could have ever come into the thoughts of a successor of Gregory to demand, were it not vouched by all the historians to a man."

When Boniface, and his successors at Rome, had thus been made "UNIVERSAL BISHOP," and Phocas had decreed "that the WHOLE WORLD should be his diocese" (See Brightman on "Revelation Revealed," p. 205,) it looks more like giving the "times and laws" into the hands of the "little horn," than any other event we can find in the history of that power.

Observe, Mr. Bower says, "Boniface had scarce obtained it [the title of 'universal Bishop'], when he took upon him to exercise an unanswerable jurisdiction and power, to that time unknown and unheard of in the Catholic church . . . He acted . . . as if he had not been vested with the title alone, . . . but with all the power of an universal bishop, with all the authority of a supreme head, or rather absolute monarch of the church."

He issued a decree that no bishop should be lawfully elected from that time forward, unless "confirmed by the Pope." Then Mr. Bower says, "Thus was the power of the Pope, as universal bishop, as 'head of the church,' or in other words the Papal supremacy FIRST introduced."

THE HAPPY LAND.

ISA. 42: 4, 5. Thou shalt not any more be called forsaken; nor of thy land shall it be said, It is desolate. But thou shalt be called MY DELIGHT, and thy land THE MARRIED LAND. For Jehovah shall delight in thee, and thy land shall be joined in marriage. For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as a bridegroom rejoiceth in his bride, so shall thy God rejoice in thee.—Boothroyd's Bible.

We take this glowing prediction as having reference to the epoch of the saints possessing the Canaan of rest, the new earth, the eternal kingdom of God and of Christ. Just as the holy and perpetual union between Jesus and his church, which commences on his personal return from heaven, is denominated the "Marriage of the Lamb," so the taking possession of the whole earth, and the residence therein of the redeemed forever, is, by the sublime Isaiah styled a holy union—a wedlock. This is and must be the sense, and we can see room for no other. And it is fitting that it should be so. Earth is the theatre of man's origin, his history, his death-sleep and resurrection,—why not also of his destiny? "Establish the earth," "inherit the earth," "reign on the earth," "recompensed in the earth," "dwell in the earth," and "the earth abideth forever," etc., are Scripture phrases. Here in the place of suffering and trial will be the land of peace and joy. And this wedded soil, once accursed, but now robed like a bride, shall sing for very gladness. The mountains and trees will find a voice, and pour out one perpetual psalm of praise. All the sweet joy of a bridal day, all the rich glories of a festival such as God only can prepare,—all the splendor of a royal banquet will wait upon that happy marriage. This, and this only, of all the planets, is the saints' eternal home. We shall not be primates of the universe, nor roam from star to star, but "inherit the land (eh-retz, earth), and dwell therein forever."—Psa. 37: 29. Happy art thou, O land, for the Lord God is thy king. Happy will be thy sons, for the Bridegroom, Jesus, is in the midst forevermore. Out of the womb of this creation, in the days of her desolateness and ruin, they came forth; now when nature's pangs are healed, and Eden blooms no more to fade, they—thy saved sons—shall rest on mother earth's bosom through the long, glad ages. Then death and hades will be far away. Wondrous compliment; God says this new world shall be "My Delight." Hence like the first Paradise, which he seven times over pronounced "good," the restored kingdom will comprehend Jehovah's beau-ideal of a perfect world. O it stirs the heart with mighty joy to think of it!

Go, earth! go wipe thy falling tears,
Forget thy heavy wo;
Hope died not with thy first-born sons,
Six thousand years ago! D. T. T.

"ALL IS VANITY."

If any one covets a crown, or a sceptre, or a presidential chair, or a millionaire's fortune, or a post of honor among men, or a queen's jewels, or a pleasure seeker's bubbles, let him first read what they say, and how they feel and fare. Lord Chesterfield, the prince of fashion, with Solomon said of his gay, golden life, "All is vanity." Alexander the Great conquered all the world, and died, aged but thirty-two, in a fit of drunkenness,—perhaps poisoned to death. Julius Cæsar conquered Europe, and won royal honor, but at the last was assassinated by a supposed friend. The impious and proud Voltaire said, The world was full of wretches, and he "the most wretched of all." One of the Spanish emperors (Abderrahman III.) reigned in splendor fifty years, but declared he could count up in that half century "only fourteen days of unalloyed happiness." Hannibal, the renowned African hero, died of poison administered by his own hand, unlamented and unwept. Charles V. resigned his throne and crown in despair of finding happiness as an emperor. Of the great Roman emperors, history informs us that no less than nine in succession were slain by the Prætorian Guards. The infamous empress Catherine, of Russia, could get no sleep, so did her guilty conscience torment her.

Lincoln, the ruler of thirty millions, was shot dead in an instant. Some of the sovereigns of Great Britain were assassinated, or beheaded. Queen Elizabeth died saying she would give "millions of money for an inch of time," in which to get ready. Louis Napoleon has lived in constant fear of the assassin's bullet. Of sixty-seven queens, who have sat on the throne of France, eleven were divorced, two were executed, nine died young, seven were widowed early, three cruelly treated, three exiled, the rest being either poisoned or broken-hearted. Napoleon Bonaparte, the arbiter of Europe, declared he had been as fortunate as any man on earth, but "had not enjoyed one hour of real happiness in all his life." Truly—"Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown."

The great Hume rested his hope in philosophy, and as the result declared he was "affrighted and confounded at the forlorn solitude" in which it placed him. Goethe, who was so much admired in high circles, said at the age of eighty-four he "had scarcely tasted twenty-four hours solid comfort in all his life." George Brummell, with a most princely fortune, spent £800 a year on dress alone, and died at last in a lunatic asylum. The Duke of Marlborough had a million of money, and vast estates; but looking around upon them as far as his vision could extend, exclaimed to a friend, "I do not believe that there is in all this vast circuit a more unhappy man than myself." Robert Clive became the conqueror of all India, and had the treasures of the East poured at his feet, but died disappointed and a suicide. Christopher Columbus discovered a new world, but was robbed of the honor of naming it, became an object of hatred and abuse, and died poor and sorrowful. William Beckford, of England, had an income of £100-000 a year, and finally died in want and misery.

The wretched life and unhappy death of Lord Byron are well known. William Pitt possessed the rarest intellectual gift in England, but lived in misery and unhappiness, and died of a broken heart. The last words of the great orator Sheridan were, "I am absolutely undone." Sir Walter Scott, who received the honors of an empire, died in sadness and sorrow, and without hope. The celebrated poet Campbell affirmed that "his fame was only bitter," and died in grief and solitariness. Gibbon, the great historian and infidel, died saying, "All is dark and doubtful." The eloquent John Randolph's last word was, "Remorse." William C. Johnson and T. F. Johnson were a few years ago the most brilliant orators in Congress; one died an outcast and pauper, the other became diseased, and sunk down in ignominy and misery,—all through intemperance. Bulwer, the great novelist, said in his last days, "I am gloomy and unhappy." The delirious, dying hours of John Jacob Astor, who was worth twenty-five millions, were—"Money, money, bring me money." Ebenezer Francis, of Boston, who died leaving four millions of dollars, was in the panic of 1857 reduced almost to despair by the abundance of his money. Stephen Girard, the great millionaire of Philadelphia, said that with all his wealth he "lived like a galley slave, passed sleepless nights, and was worn out with care."

A great American capitalist, when asked why he did not have his life written, replied in these sad words, "My life has been a failure." The four brothers Rothschild are the bankers of Europe, the wealthiest men in the world. Their united income is $1000 an hour. But when some one said to the Baron at Paris, "I should think you would be happy with such a kingly fortune," his quick, reproving, negative reply was,—"Happy! me happy!"

Reader, is not this sad record a striking commentary on the vanity of all earthly riches and greatness? Which would you prefer, to be ranked in this high but wretched company, and, like Abner, die "as the fool dieth"; or be an humble, faithful christian, and one day inherit immortal life in a glorious and endless kingdom? Which? D. T. T.

WHICH: ANGEL, OR MAN?

Was it an angel, or a man, who gave John the Revelation? Or was it that undefinable, invisible, and intangible thing, the so-called spirit of a man? Or was it an angel-man, i. e., a man, or his spirit, turned into an angel? We suppose we may lawfully inquire into the nature of this glorious revealing agent, and we would observe, first, that he is five times called "an angel," "the angel," "his angel." And in not a single instance is he called a man. Neither is he once called a spirit. Still the common version of Rev. 22: 9 seems to many readers to teach that he was one of the prophets,—hence a man. Now as Enoch and Elijah had not died and so could not exist disembodied (such disembodied existence being impossible even on the popular hypothesis if they were not dead), should the text compel us to regard this celestial agent as a man, might it not have been one of these translated worthies? Admitting this, then there would be no necessity of considering him as a mere spiritual or ghostly presence, as some do Moses in the transfiguration on Mount Tabor. And so the spiritual human theory of this "angel" is fairly tipped over by the exercise of a little common sense thinking, leaving out the absurdity and bad theology of this notion. Furthermore, we think it was not either Enoch or Elijah in bodily person. For first, men, personal single men, are nowhere in the Bible called angels, save in the sense of a human agent or messenger, as God in Matt. 11: 10. Mark 1: 2 and Luke 7: 27 call John "my (angelos) messenger." But never in the sense of a divine being or celestial visitant is man denominated an (angelos) angel. And nowhere in the sacred word is man ever said to be "equal to the angels," until the resurrection and world to come, as our Lord informs us in Luke 20: 35, 36. Even of Christ, who took a man's nature and form, it is said, "Thou (Lord) didst make him for a little while inferior to angels." See Marginal reading, and Diaglott of Heb. 2: 7. And the passage in Luke 20: 35 would preclude even Enoch and Elijah from equality with the angels until the dead are resurrected.

Still it is claimed that the rendering of Rev. 22: 9 compels us to believe this holy messenger to have been a transfigured human being. And on this idea, Spiritualism, which strangely confounds the human and angelic, builds its chimeras concerning angel-men, or men metamorphosed by death into angels. And some who kick at Spiritualism as the work of Satan do no better with the passage. But the following translations make all plain. The sense of the angel's words it will be seen is not, "I am one of thy brethren, the prophets," but rather, "I am a fellow-servant of the prophets," etc. "I am a fellow-servant of thee, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them that keep the sayings of this book: worship God."—American Bible Union Trans. "I am thy fellow-servant, and the fellow-servant of thy brethren the prophets," etc.—Coverdale's Bible. So, too, read the versions of Tyndale, Cranmer, and Geneva; making him a real angel who had formerly served or waited upon the prophet Daniel and others of the ancient seers, and who had come at the command of Christ to serve the seer of Patmos and through him the whole church. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."—Psalms 34: 7. Hence he is the waiting-angel on all who keep the sayings of Revelation. "I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches." "He sent and signified it by his angel." And so the glorious one who gave us all so much light, and who refused to be worshiped, but deferred all the honor to his great Master, was neither a ghost nor a man, but "the angel of the Lord." And some day not far distant, you and I, my dear reader, may be summoned to lock arms with this holy and bright one for a flight skyward to see the King. How would you like it? Have you read 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17, and Matt. 24: 31 lately? If not, read again with care, and—THINK. D. T. T.

THE PROPOSED TRACT.

BRO. GRANT:—I was very glad to see an article from Bro. Taylor about publishing a condensed tract, giving the main arguments upon the Advent faith,—the great truth and glorious hope of the church of God in all ages. I think most all would read and investigate a tract of that kind, while a large book would be hardly glanced at; and if it was, would not be so likely to be understood as a tract of thirty or forty pages, as proposed. Such a work might do great good, and awaken an interest in many minds on the nearness of the judgment. I do hope there will be no delay in having it published. Time is short, and what is done must be done soon, for the Master is about to rise up and shut to the door; no chance for poor sinners then. I cheerfully add my mite for this object. I will send $25, and I do hope that our brethren who have this world's goods will give liberally, as the Lord has prospered them.

If all would give what they could, and not miss what they give, what an immense amount of tracts would it send broadcast all over the land, warning our fellowmen, giving them no excuse in the day of judgment, that they did not know these things in time to get ready. God bless this noble enterprise. What we do let us do quickly. God's great clock of time is surely about to give its final stroke. In an hour when this wicked world think not, the Son of man cometh "as the lightning,"—"as a thief,"—"as it was in the days of Noah," while this busy world is overcharged with the cares of this life; eating, drinking, etc. How plain the Master described the state the world would be in when he came back to earth again.

But, thank God, another class is described, who are to witness the glorious coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. They are the ones upon whom that day shall not come unawares. They are the ones that Paul said would receive a crown with him; and they will exclaim, Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and can lift up our heads, knowing our redemption draweth nigh.—Earth's dark night of weeping, sorrowing, mourning and death is about over, and the blessed immortal state about to be ushered in; and the curse, which has been so heavily upon the earth, removed. Let us work while it is day, for the night cometh,—a dark night for a wicked world, but a morning of joy to the righteous. Blessed day, haste thy dawning. Yours striving for the better world,

Landoff, N. H. MARY W. EASTMAN.

A DIME APIECE.

"I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."—ACTS 20: 35.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—Our beloved Bro. in Christ, Elder Wm. A. Fenn, having sustained a severe loss in the death of a valuable horse, he being, like most of God's people, poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, and heir of the kingdom, we trust; and, as we are exhorted by the apostle to bear "one another's burdens," you are hereby informed that you can greatly encourage his heart as he goes forth in his labor of love to publish the gospel of a soon coming kingdom to a perishing world, by sending in your mite as you may each be blessed of the Lord. A dime apiece, sent in by the brethren and sisters, would never be felt by any, and would enable him immediately to purchase another horse, and send him on his way rejoicing.

Those who feel disposed to aid our dear brother, may send in their mites to the undersigned, all of which will be thankfully received, duly acknowledged, and promptly delivered to Bro. Fenn.

Your Sister in Christ, MARY ALBRIGHT.

HOME AGAIN.

BRO. GRANT:—I arrived home with my daughter Tuesday. She suffered no injury by moving, and is able to get about on crutches. I was obliged to leave my appointments west, and trust that I shall be pardoned by my brethren when they understand the reasons. Our heavenly Father has gladdened our hearts with a speedy recovery of health and strength to our daughter, which has enabled us to return many weeks sooner than we or the physicians expected. Our pilgrimage west has been one of much experience and profit to ourselves, and we trust benefit to others. We have found kind friends and christian sympathy, which are appreciated much; and will be numbered as tokens of divine appointment, till He comes who regardeth the afflicted, and will bring every work into judgment.

I am now ready to resume my labors east, as the Lord may direct; and as soon as I can make some necessary arrangements at home, shall be prepared to go where duty calls. H. PRATT.

Correspondence.

From Sr. L. B. Davis.

Bro. Grant, and the dear saints we met at Wilbraham: how oft my heart has been cheered since I returned from that consecrated spot, when thinking of the dear ones I met there, and by reading their words of cheer in our beloved paper. Did you know the comfort it gives me, while alone with my family in this cold region, you would oftener contribute to our beloved messenger of peace and love. It is all the true preaching we have here; but God is so good to give it to us from week to week, that we ought not to complain. But I do so miss the society of those of like precious faith.

Now, dear Brn. and Srs., don't forget to put in your mites to help sustain our paper in its purity of the gospel. Comfort our leaders in their noble work. What are we preserved for, while others are numbered with the dead, if not to comfort one another, and lead poor sinners to Christ. I would willingly spend my last breath warn[in]g sinners of the judgment soon to come. I believe without a doubt we shall very soon see Jesus coming in the clouds of heaven, to take vengeance on this wicked world, and save his dear ones who will be sighing and crying for deliverance. Are we doing all we can to save poor sinners? We have them all around us, whom we may instruct in the way of life, if we will. Will we do it, dear ones? You who have the living faith, will you take hold with us to save souls ere mercy closes? The present is all we have.

> "Jesus soon is coming,
> This is my song;
> It cheers my heart when joys depart,
> And foes are pressing strong."

How comforting these words are to me in my sad hours of loneliness. But I have many hours of happiness and peace, thinking of the dear ones who are looking for and loving our Savior's return, and the blessed inheritance which we are to enjoy for ever. Is this not an incentive to urge us on in our Master's service?

Now to the dear ones I met at campmeeting; those who are young in the way of holiness, seek to live very near Christ. He will keep you from the evils that beset your paths from day to day. I ask Father every day to guide your steps aright. Consecrate anew yourselves; watch closely unto prayer; take up your cross when and wherever the way opens. The Holy Spirit will guide into all truth, if you cherish it in your bosoms. Do not grieve it! Praise my precious Father for the gift of the Holy Comforter, that will lead us into all truth.

To the dear ones who said, "Pray for us," when we parted: Precious ones, we always remember each other; it cannot be otherwise. We all belong to the Head, which is Christ. Every member of our body is cherished. O how blessed this oneness in Christ. There is no separation of the members. Let all members of the vine draw nourishment from day to day. Then how closely connected we shall be.

To the sick and afflicted ones, who were not able to meet us at the tented grove, I would say: we do not forget you in our prayers. Although we may never have seen your dear faces in this life, we hope to greet you on the other shore, where sickness and pain will never enter. Be comforted with the precious words of Jesus, "My peace I give unto you."

To you who are giving the church and world the last message,—be faithful, be kind, that you may win many precious souls to Christ.

And to you, my dear sisters, who are proclaiming the coming of our blessed King,—the Lord bless your labors abundantly, giving you wisdom and grace to endure the scorn that may be heaped upon you by some. The Lord will sustain, if you keep humble.

"Now unto Him that is able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy; to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever, Amen." Your Sister in Christ,

Fitzwilliam, N. H. Lizzie B. Davis.

From Bro. H. Pratt.

Bro. Grant:—Yours was duly received and appreciated, and I hasten to reply. In the providence of God I have seen much of his salvation in this region. In S. Dansville, the good work of the Lord has been in progress since the 5th of July, and the interest was greater when I left last Sunday than at any time previous. I was informed that service in the two churches were suspended after the morning, as the members wanted to hear me. One lady, after hearing on Bible politics, being somewhat discomfited, attested her loyalty to this government, which drew forth the following testimony from a weak young sister, who had recently been baptized:

"A lady said to me, in returning from meeting this afternoon, that if she had a dozen sons, she would have given them all up for the war. To which I replied, if I had a dozen hearts I would give them all to Jesus."

The most influential men in the place see that I have a place for meetings, and that I go not away empty. Most of the people for three miles around call this preaching the gospel, and scores have fully adopted it. Universalists say their foundation is all gone. One very intelligent lady of that faith said, "Bro. Pratt, I don't know where I shall come out, but having studied the Scriptures carefully for the last few weeks, I must confess that your views seem wholly scriptural." A Baptist lady said, "I have belonged to the church nine years, and never knew what the life in Christ was till now." Bro. Grant, this is worth a life-time service. Blessed be God,

H. Pratt.

City Hospital, Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 26.

From Sr. S. Fowler.

Dear Friends:—It is through the columns of that good paper, "The World's Crisis," that I would address you. I would tell you and "the world around of the precious Savior I have found." Dear friends, I wish to do something for Jesus, who has done so much for me—for us, as I hope I am talking to many christians. All may be christians if they will. All who will may come and drink freely of the waters of life. Jesus, dear Jesus, died that all might be saved,—might have life everlasting. All who will may come to Christ, ask and receive forgiveness. The Bible says, "Ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find." It does not say and ye may find.

A dear young lady friend is visiting me today. She has lately found peace in believing—that peace that passes all understanding; that which the world knows nothing of, which the world cannot give, and, thank God, cannot take away. She is sitting by the melodeon, singing "God is love." This is truth. He so loved the world that he gave his only and well-beloved Son Jesus to die on the cross, that all who believed on him might be saved. Yes, God is love, and how ought we to thank him for the salvation so freely offered. How we ought to love Jesus, who died on the cross for us. How willing we ought to be to take up our cross for his sake, letting the world say what they will of us, remembering this, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, . . . and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."

I did intend to stop writing here, but it does not seem as if I had, or ever could say enough for our Savior—for our dear friend, who, when on earth, was so kind to the poor and friendless; and who will be as kind now, if we will only allow him to be. Truthfully he is called the "Friend of the friendless." None are so poor, and by this world so despised, but they may have Jesus for an ever-present, all-sufficient friend and Savior. Jesus is my dearest, truest, and best friend; and he will be yours if you will let him. Only come to him. Christ is calling you now. "The Spirit and the bride say, come; and let him that heareth say, come." Yes, come. Come and drink and live. Do not crucify Jesus afresh, but repent and believe. He says, Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest;" and a sweet rest it is, too. In my heart I pray that every sinner that reads this may come immediately to the throne of grace, and ask forgiveness of God,—ask in faith, believing. Ask and ye shall receive. From your young friend in Christ, Susie Fowler.

From Bro. Geo. A. Streeter.

[The following letter was mislaid, which prevented its early appearance.]

Bro. Grant:—I have just been in the most glorious revival of God's work that I ever saw or heard of in so short time. The 21st of last Jan., I commenced meetings at the North Branch school-house, in Bridgewater, Vt., and continued them for three weeks and over four Sundays. The result was, one hundred and eight were converted and reclaimed, and twenty-four were baptized. The work began with children, and such heart-work I never saw.

Whole families have been converted or reclaimed. The school-teacher came out in his school and confessed to his scholars; and now teacher and scholars are rejoicing in the Lord. Glory to God. Men who have stood out long have been brought out, and are now praising God.

One girl of fifteen years, when she was baptized, came out of the water and went with open arms to her ungodly father, who was looking on, and threw them around his neck and kissed him. It had the desired effect. That night he came forward for prayers, and has been converted and baptized, and is now rejoicing in God. How my heart did rejoice at the sight.

Saturday afternoon, Feb. 10th, we met for meeting and to eat the Lord's Supper. About seventy-five partook. We had a heavenly season. Glory to God.

Sunday, Feb. 11th, we met in the morning for a love-feast. Seventy-five spoke in thirty-five minutes, besides singing ten verses. It was truly a heavenly place to be in. Sunday eve we bade them farewell. It was hard parting, but my heart is rejoicing to know that Jesus is soon coming, to gather all of the dear ones.

It seemed as though I could not leave them, but duty called me away, and with many prayers and tears I left them in the hands of the Good Shepherd, who has promised to care for the sheep; and with the aid of Brn. Hubbard and Harding, I think they will go on.

I believe with all my heart that the world is having the last call. The Master will soon come. Supper will soon be ready. Glory to God. I never felt so small in my life, and so much like doing all of the will of God. Brn. and Srs., be faithful. God bless you all. Pray for me. Thy Bro. in Christ,

Geo. A. Streeter.

From Sr. L. Becraft.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say to the brethren and sisters, through the Crisis, that our meetings at Jackson, the 16th and 17th of August, were interesting. How good it is to meet with a company of fellow-pilgrims, and enjoy the sweetness of the christian alliance, the unity of love. It serves to encourage the weak, like myself, to find those that are strong in the Lord and in the power of his might.

I think at this meeting we could all say we had a feast of love, of fat things,—of wine on the lees, well refined. May the Lord bless his word, and bless those who preach it. May I so live that I may meet those loved ones in the kingdom, is the prayer of your unworthy sister, Lois Becraft.

From Bro. J. G. Kelly.

Dear brother in the Lord: Although I belong to the Methodist church, I love to read your paper, for I think with you that we are in the last days; and I cannot see how any follower of the blessed Lord should object to his speedy coming; for do we not want to see our best friend? I think if your church here had a good, persevering, godly preacher, he would gather many into the fold; for many of the church members begin to think and feel that we are near the end; and many think your doctrine about future punishment more consistent, and in accord with the Bible, that the wicked shall be destroyed and the saints inherit the new earth. Why not send a good preacher, and establish a post here?

Chicago, Ill. John G. Kelly.

Damp Walls.—The Builder gives the following remedy for damp walls: Three quarters of a pound of mottled soap to one gallon of water. This composition to be laid over the brickwork steadily and carefully with a large flat brush, so as not to form a froth or lather on the surface. The wash to remain twenty-four hours, to become dry. Mix half a pound of alum with four gallons of water; leave it to stand for twenty-four hours, and then apply it in the same manner over the coating of soap. Let this be done in dry weather.

Progress of Romanism.—It is not generally known that there are more than four millions of Roman Catholics in the United States. Since 1808 there has been an increase from eighty to two thousand five hundred churches; from sixty-eight to twenty-three hundred priests; from two to forty-five bishops; and from one to forty-eighty dioceses. Besides these, the Catholics have 102 orphan asylums, where they educate some 7000 orphans, and have over 100 benevolent and charitable societies, and 28 hospitals. They have also 97 library institutes for young men; 212 female academies, and 304 free schools for 27,040 males, and 327 schools for 29,671 females.

Obituaries.

Wentworth. Died in Hope, Me., June 16th, of billious fever, Mrs. Sarah N., wife of Lewis Wentworth, aged sixty-nine years, ten months, and fourteen days.

Sister Wentworth has been a professor of religion for many years, and always lived an exemplary life. A woman possessed of rare qualities of mind and heart, an affectionate wife and beloved mother, we are left to mourn her loss; yet we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we believe them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

Sermon by Elder Read, from 1 Cor. 15: 32.

> "With heavenly weapons I have fought
> The battles of the Lord;
> Finished my course and kept the faith,
> And wait the sure reward." s. e. w.

Badgeley. Died in Youngstown, Niagara Co., N. Y., Sept. 19th, 1866, suddenly, of hemorrhage of the lungs, Julia H., wife of Joseph Badgeley, and daughter of Bro. Joel Tyron, aged twenty-nine years.

Sister B. died in full faith of the soon coming of the son of God, and of the glory that will follow. She fell asleep with a bright hope of a better resurrection to a better life. Father and mother, sisters and brother, husband and little son will miss her, and their sorrow and affliction will be great; but Julia rests in peace, through faith in Jesus' blood. She has been taken from the evil to come, and is preserved by the power of God for the glory that is to be revealed. C. W. Low.

Streeter. Died in Southbridge, Mass., July 31st, of congestion of the brain, Clara A., youngest child and only daughter of Nathan J. and Jane T. Streeter, aged six months.

While we mourn the loss of our loved one, we mourn not as those who have no hope; for "we believe that as Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

> "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
> From which none ever wake to weep."

Words of comfort and consolation were administered to a large circle of sympathizing friends, on the occasion of her funeral, by Bro. Daniel Pratt.

Nathan J. Streeter.

Andrus. Died in New Britain, June 27th, after a short illness, Sister Nancy Andrus, aged sixty-five years.

On the funeral occasion words of comfort were spoken by Bro. Piper. Our sister who has gone to sleep in the grave for a little while, has met with us in this place who are looking for Jesus to return since 1843. We miss her in the house of prayer on the Lord's day. Notwithstanding she was quite infirm from being lame, yet she would often come leaning on her staff to meet with those she loved. We hope to meet her with all the church of Christ in our happy Eden home.

E. Burt.

Holcomb. Fell asleep in Jesus, Aug. 13th, after an illness of nearly three weeks, Charlie J., only son of Henry and Aggie Holcomb, aged one year, one month, and six days.

His parents deeply mourn his loss, but they mourn not as those who have no hope; for they believe "that Jesus died and rose again" from the dead; and that "even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Mattie Beeem.

Hooper. Died at Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 8th, Willie H., only child of Bro. Henry M., and Sr. Hannah A. Hooper, aged eight years and eight months.

Willie was a darling child, and the loss is severe; but, thank God, our brother and sister mourn not as those that have no hope, but expect to meet their loved one on that "shining shore," where are no parting scenes.

A few words of comfort and prayer by the writer. Joseph W. White.

Hale. Died in Milton, N. H., Sept. 19th, 1866, Barzilla, son of Simeon B. Hale, aged twenty-four years and seven months.

He sought and found the Savior to the joy of his soul. He has left a father and mother, two brothers and two sisters to mourn their great loss. His funeral was attended by the writer. Text, Heb. 11: 16. L. A. Lang.

Thayer. Died in Springfield, Mass., Aug. 31st, 1866, Marietta, daughter of Bro. David Thayer, aged thirteen years and two months.

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Florence, Oct. 4. A treaty of peace between Austria and Italy has been finally signed.

Corfu, Sept. 19. An official dispatch received here states that the Cretan insurgents, led by Greek officers, had attacked the Turco-Egyptian army whom they had completely routed with the loss of 3000 men. The Turkish Pasha, and the troops under his command, who fell into the hands of the Candians, obtained their release by concluding a convention with the leaders of the insurrection. The Governor General of Candia has ordered a general arming of all the Turks on the Island.

Athens, Sep. 15. Public excitement in connection with the events in Candia is increasing. The latest reports from the Island state that the Egyptian troops became separated from the Turkish army and were hemmed in by the insurgents.

Florence, Sept. 22. The Royal troops entered Palermo yesterday without meeting serious resistance and without sustaining any losses. The insurrectionary movement is subdued.

Accounts from Athens, dated Sept. 13th, state that advices from Candia to the 9th inst. say that massacres of unarmed Christians by the Turks have been perpetrated upon a considerable scale.

On the night of the 3d, a false report being spread that the Christians had killed two Mussulmen at the village of Senia, the Turks of Rethymnos congregated at a place called Grande Tarta, intending to sally out of the town and take vengeance. The Sub-Governor succeeded in preventing this, and left the same evening for Conea, delegating his functions to the commandant of the place. The next morning this officer placed sentinels at the gates to prevent the Mussulmen from leaving; but about one hundred and twenty succeeded in leaving over the lower parts of the ramparts, and dispersing about the neighborhood, massacred all the Christians they encountered. Upon the 5th, notwithstanding the return of the Sub-Governor, the Mussulmen broke out to the number of 1500 and the massacres were recommenced. A Turkish battalion sent by the sub-governor to put an end to the disturbances, made common cause with the assailants. The number of killed is stated at 150, consisting mostly of old men, women and children, the men capable of bearing arms being absent in the insurgent camps. The villages have been pillaged and destroyed and the plunder publicly sold in the Christian cemetery. In the towns the Christian inhabitants are taking refuge at the houses of the various consuls. Protests against these acts of violence have been made by the consular agents of Greece, England, France and Prussia. The Greek Consul has informed his government that he does not believe himself safe in remaining at Rethymnos.

The Siecle, an Athens paper, usually well informed, announced recently that the cession of Candia to Greece might be considered as being agreed upon in principle by the European Governments.

A Messina telegram of the 22d states that a private dispatch from Corfu describes the recent engagement in Candia as a glorious victory for the Cretans. The battle is said to have taken place at Selino. The Cretans captured a considerable quantity of munitions of war, several flags and four guns.

The Famine in India.—The following facts concerning the terrible famine now prevailing in certain districts of India are gathered from our last foreign papers:

"The distress is most prevalent and most dire in Bengal, and it exists in varying degree over the whole presidency. In Orissa, Nuddea, Beerbhoom, the Cuttack, and other districts, the scarcity has been intensified to a degree that is simply devastation; thousands have died and are dying in abject want. The starving poor have crowded into Calcutta, and the streets are full of distressing scenes and incidents. It has been estimated that no fewer than 20,000 to 25,000 starving people are wandering about the capital. Disease adds want to this the crowd with horrible rapidity; but the multitude grows notwithstanding, recruiting continually. To cope with this distress effectually is hardly possible; the government action is complained of as sluggish; individual efforts, although they do much, are comparatively powerless to stem the tide. The native rich classes, however, are conspicuous by the exertions they make. At Mullick's Ghat the Bombay merchants have raised a fund, and they distribute food. The crowd of famishing men and women who come to this part for the scanty meal has constantly increased, till at the time the mail left, 7000 applicants crowded up. They were described as placed in order upon an open space, waiting for the distribution. On one side nearly 3000 Hindoos, each with a leaf platter before him, were scattered on the ground, hastily partaking of the scanty dole they received. On the other side were thousands of famishing Mussulmen ranged in like manner, and watching with silent and greedy eagerness the meal of their Hindoo brethren, and counting with bitter longings the minutes till their turn should come. Under shelter of the Ghat crouched the women, girls and children. Outside the gates were hundreds and hundreds who had lost their chance till the next distribution. But over all a horrible dead silence. No chattering or converse; hardly a sound, excepting when at intervals some wretch threw up his arms with an ejaculation to Heaven, wrung from him by the unappeasable pangs of hunger. A stranger passing near would have no intimation that within a yard of the road 7000 starving creatures had assembled to snatch a meal.

Calcutta dates to Aug. 8th, give further details of the famine in India. The mortality continues to be frightful. In four villages, there were not ten houses that did not contain one or more dead bodies.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Oct. 2. A New Orleans special says: "I had an interview to-day with a prominent officer of the Knights of the Golden Circle, whose chief object is peaceable colonization of the fertile lands of Mexico. He informed me that the organization of sub-circles is all over the West, and now numbers over 50,000 members, who propose, as soon as Mexican affairs justify it, to emigrate and become citizens of Mexico. They have two envoys in that country, one at the court of Maximilian and the other with Juarez, arranging terms of emigration and settlement. They will attach themselves to that government which is most likely to be the permanent one, and will have a military organization, which they will throw with the support of the government to which they give their allegiance.

An envoy, who left Maximilian five days after the report reached here that he contemplated abdication, declares he has no such intention and will fight for his throne to the bitter end.

Advices from the Mexican capital to the 17th have been received, stating that the guerrillas were continually worsted by the Imperial forces.

At the celebration of Mexican Independence on the 10th, Maximilian made a speech, saying that he was still firm in the seat, notwithstanding all his difficulties, which the votes of the nation had caused him to occupy, and that it was not in troublous times that a true Hapsburg would abandon his post; and as a majority of the nation had called upon him to defend their sacred rights, the Almighty ought to protect him.

The Estafette asserts that his Majesty is resolved to put himself at the head of the National army to fight the Liberals.

New York, Oct. 2. A special dispatch from New Orleans, to the Tribune, dated yesterday, says some important disclosures will soon be officially made public in reference to secret rebel societies which permeate the entire South. These organizations have branch circles in New York city and at the West. That in New York is said to number 50,000, principally composed of men who served in the rebel army. Each circle has a different name. Some are known as "The True Sons of the South," others as "The Sons of Arabia," and all are well armed with the most improved weapons, ready at a moment's notice, should a favorable opportunity arise, to renew the struggle for their lost cause. One of the chief members of the organization, who is now in prison, is said to have made important disclosures.

Gen. Sheridan is concentrating troops in this city for important purposes, which will soon be made apparent.

Nine cases of the whipping of negroes have recently been officially reported in the parish of Bienville. One old woman, seventy years of age, received four hundred lashes.

The French Circular.—The text of the French Circular explanatory of the recent changes on the Continent has been substantially anticipated by telegraph. It is a very ingenious document, evidently prepared by Louis Napoleon himself. Its object is to put the best face possible on the position of France since the German war, and it does it. Moreover, there is great truth in its argument that the nations of Europe have been gradually coming to rest on better and more national foundations than were assigned arbitrarily by the Holy Alliance. In spite, also, of the wounding of the military pride of France through the course of Prussia, the people of the Empire have no reason to feel dissatisfied with the national prospect, for France, as the Circular points out, "will soon number 40,000,000 inhabitants, Germany 37,000,000, Austria 35,000,000, Italy 26,000,000, Spain 18,000,000." Thus France will continue to rank all these powers in population, and much more in other national resources."

The Fenians.—A Montreal dispatch says that N. F. Belleau, Premier, has said to a friend that the state of things in regard to a Fenian attack is alarming—that the danger now threatening the Province is greater than that of 1812–14. It is generally admitted in Canada that the Fenian hostility is England's quarrel, and a party argue that the imperial authorities should undertake the defence of Canada in the present case.

To Brethren in Conn.

The cause of God seems to demand that a conference be held in Central or Western Conn. After prayer and consultation, it is decided that such a conference be held in Yalesville, Ct., to commence Wednesday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, Oct. 24th, and continue over Sunday, the 28th. At which time the new Advent Chapel will be dedicated. If it should be stormy on Wednesday, it will take place Thursday.

Yalesville is situated on the Hartford and New Haven Rail Road, thirteen miles from N. H., and about fifteen from Hartford. We hope the Brn. and Srs. will make an extra effort to attend this meeting, as it is expected then to organise a permanent conference to meet in different localities until the Lord comes. For time is very short, and we ought to do all we can to enlighten our fellow men upon the great truths we hold so dear. We hope that every Advent minister in the State, and as many out of it as possibly can, will be present. Call on W. S. Chandler, George A. Marble, and Henry Mix. B. Hitchcock.

For the World's Crisis.

COME.

AIR.—Tyrolese Eve. Hymn, "Come to the sunset tree."

Come, come, come;
Come to the Savior's arms;
There find sweet rest and peace,
Viewing his matchless charms,
From guilt find sweet release.
Think of the harvest past,
The star of hope away,
And you unmoved at last;
Sinner, be wise to-day.

Seek, seek, seek,
The pearl of greatest price;
Be found among the meek,
In the future Paradise,
Safe from the tempest bleak,
On the wicked soon to fall;
Then turn from sin away,
Refuse not Jesus' call,
But listen and obey.

Find, find, find,
For mourning, the oil of joy;
For heaviness, a robe of praise,
Future bliss without alloy,
Shared by him who Christ obeys.
A blessed hope to cheer
The pilgrim all his way,
Until our sojourn here
Cease for eternal day.

Trust, trust, trust;
Trust in the mighty arm,
That moves the spacious world;
Still every false alarm,
Let all thy fears be hurled
Into oblivion's sea.
Who heeds the sparrow's fall,
Will surely care for thee;
God is thy all in all.

Soon, soon, soon,
Jesus will come again,
Who, to redeem our race,
On Calvary was slain.
Saints will behold his face,
And hail their glorious King;
In final union sweet,
With grateful joy they sing,
Salvation all complete.

THE PRINCIPLES OF PEACE EXEMPLIFIED.

The following is from a tract published by a Tract Association of Friends, No. 60 North Fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Every one should have a copy of the tract.—ED.

It is generally known, that an objection to take part in war, in any shape, forms one of the tenets of the Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers. This objection is purely religious, and is founded upon what they conceive to be the spirit of the Gospel Dispensation, as it is illustrated in the precepts of Christ and his apostles, and exemplified in their practice. They consider that it must follow, as a necessary consequence, that a religion breathing peace and good will to men, cannot, in any case, be supported by the spirit of war. They believe that, on the contrary, the practice of this evil among the professors of christianity, has tended more than any other circumstance, to prevent its propagation in the world, to tarnish its excellency in the eyes of Jews and Pagans, and to confirm their speculative and practical errors. As it was not by the secular arm, but in direct opposition to the sword, that it obtained an entrance in the minds of men, and was first promulgated, so they believe that its final establishment in the nations of the earth will be effected through the medium of the softening influence of its pacific spirit, and by the glorious example of peace and concord among its followers.

In the year 1798, the rebellion in Ireland afforded a striking occasion to the members of this society, who are scattered abroad in different parts of that kingdom, to put the efficacy of their peaceful principles to the test. It is, however, to be presumed, that even if outward preservation had not been experienced, they who conscientiously take the maxims of peace for the rule of their conduct, would hold it not less their duty to conform to these principles, because the reward of such as endeavor to act in obedience to their divine Master's will, is not always to be looked for in the present life. Long before the awful period arrived, they had seen a spirit of contention working in the minds of the people, and it appeared obvious that, as deep-seated animosity was concentrating its forces on either side, nothing short of a dreadful conflict could extinguish their mutual hatred in mutual slaughter.

A considerable time previous to the breaking out of the rebellion, the society recommended to its members, that all who had guns or other weapons in their possession, should destroy them; in order, as was stated by the Yearly Meeting, "to prevent their being made use of to the destruction of any of our fellow-creatures, and more fully and clearly to support our peaceable and christian testimony in these perilous times." A little after this, when the government ordered all arms to be given up to the magistrates, it was a source of satisfaction to many, that in a general way, the members of the society were found to be without any such in their possession.

As the state of public affairs was drawing nearer to a crisis, the situation of the society, especially of those who resided in the vicinity of the contending parties, was a subject of deep and awful solicitude to its feeling members; and many individuals had the efficacy of their religious principles against war put in various ways to a severe proof. A Friend residing in the village of Ferns, in the county of Wexford, observing that on the eve of the insurrection a melancholy silence prevailed, inquired of a person if there was anything more than usual in prospect, and was told the country people were collecting in large bodies. At this intelligence, a cloud of darkness, as he described it, overspread his mind, and he was brought into a state of unutterable distress. He knew, indeed, that he had endeavored to place his dependence upon an Almighty protector; but the feelings natural to every human being possessed of a christian, peaceable disposition, at the prospect of the gulf that was opening to thousands of his misguided fellow-creatures, of the ruin and desolation about to fall upon his country, and of imminent danger to himself and his family, produced for some hours a conflict of which he found it impossible to convey an adequate idea, and almost beyond what he seemed able to endure. At midnight the town was filled with consternation; guards and divisions of the army were placed in different quarters, and the protestant inhabitants were in continual terror. He prevailed upon his family to retire to bed, but they could not sleep; yet they endeavored to attain that solemn retirement of soul, in which it is best prepared to meet the calamities of life, and to rely on the mercy and power of Omnipotence. In the morning the scene was very awful; the houses and stacks of corn were in flames in every direction around them, some being set on fire by the yeomanry, and some by their enemies, so that, between the two parties, total devastation seemed to be at hand. The Protestant inhabitants were fleeing into the towns and villages for safety; some of them wounded, and bringing the news of others that were slain. Property was then of little account, for it was every one's concern to escape with his life. The military left the town in the evening, and with them the Protestants, both those who came in for safety, and those who resided there.

The next morning it was filled with an ungovernable multitude of many thousands of United Irishmen, in pursuit of the army. The Friend's house was soon filled with them, when, to his astonishment and humbling admiration, instead of the massacre he and his family had dreaded, they were met by caresses and marks of friendship; the insurgents declaring that they intended them no injury, but would fight for and protect them. Several of the poor Protestants, mostly women, returning homeward to the villages which they had deserted when the army left, came to the Friend's door as persons who had no dwelling-place. They stood in the street, looking up and down in all the eloquence of silent distress. Though he had but small accommodations, his heart and house were both open to the afflicted, and notwithstanding the severe threatenings of the then ruling party, for entertaining those to whom they were hostile, he and his family endeavored to accommodate all they could, without distinction. This was also the case in the houses of most other members of the society in any way exposed to the contending parties.

During the continuance of the struggle, their houses appeared to be marked out for places of entertainment. They were almost constantly full day and night; and it was matter of surprise that their provisions held out as they did, to the end of the conflict. The members of the society, and some of the then oppressed party, conveyed provisions to one another privately. The United men sometimes offered part of their own stock, but when it was known to be plunder, or, as it was called, "the spoils of war," the Friends declined to accept it; and it was evident that such refusal was mostly taken in the light of an offence. From the number of United men who came to lodge almost every night in Friends' houses, they were in continual danger of falling a prey to the king's army, if it should make an attack on the town; and on the other hand, the Friends were continually threatened by the pikemen, for not turning out the poor fugitive Protestant women and their children, who had taken shelter under their roof.

But though they appeared to be in danger, according to human apprehension, from both parties, they were in fact alternately protected by both. Some of them came one morning to a Friend, and told him his house was to be burned that day in consequence of his refusal to turn out the Protestant women that were in it. He replied, that if they did so, he could not help it, but that as long as he had a house he would keep it open to succor the distressed, and if they burned it for that reason, he must only turn out along with them, and share their affliction. It so happened that this was the regular day on which the meeting for worship of the society in that quarter was to be held, about a mile from Ferns; and notwithstanding the alarming denunciation, he considered it his duty to take his family with him to meeting, leaving his home with a heavy heart, as he expected soon to be without a habitation, as well as the means of present support. On his return to Ferns, however, he was rejoiced to see his dwelling entire, and his heart was filled with praises and thankfulness to the good Providence that had preserved it. Whatever might have been the reason that prevented them from executing the threat, their evil disposition towards him on that account seemed to be changed, for they did not make any requisition of the kind afterwards. Throughout the calamity, it was his uniform experience, that the more he attended to what he conceived to be right, in his own conduct, the more he seemed to be respected by them. Even when he remonstrated with them on account of the cruelties committed by their party, they quietly listened, and frequently acknowledged the wrong.

A party of the king's army came to Ferns, to disperse the United Irishmen who held possession of the place. On hearing that they were coming in, the Friend stood at his own door, lest he should be suspected of being an enemy. When the military came near, one of the soldiers stepping out of the ranks, presented a gun to his breast, and was on the point of drawing the trigger, when the Friend called to him to "desist from murder." The soldier, like one struck with amazement, immediately let the gun fall from his shoulder, and presently his officers interfered for the Friend's protection, whose life was thus preserved as on the right hand and on the left.

Notwithstanding Friends belonging to the same meeting were in some instances several miles distant from each other, they did not suffer their perplexities at home to interfere with the sacred duty of religious worship abroad, or to prevent them from traversing the country filled with armed men, amidst dangers if possible still greater than those they had left, in order that they might assemble together for this solemn purpose. Consequently, in going to and returning from their meetings, they had to encounter many difficulties, besides the struggle between their faith and their natural fears in leaving their houses and property, a prey, perhaps, to pillage or to flames, during their absence. Human prudence it is likely would have induced them in such an awful extremity to remain at home, and to look after their outward affairs; but the sense of what they owed to their Maker, and to the society of which they were members, in many instances overbalanced these selfish considerations, and it appears that, in most cases, they left behind them a better guardian than human prudence.

On one occasion, a family received notice that, unless they gave up the attendance of meetings, and united in the Roman Catholic form of worship, they should individually be put to death, and their houses should be burned. As the following was to be their day of public worship, the heads of the family were brought under deep mental exercise, accompanied with fervent prayers that they might be enabled to come to a right determination in the conflict between their religious duty on one side, and apprehensions for the safety of their family on the other. On collecting the individuals together, with a degree of humble confidence that the best direction would be afforded, after a little solemn retirement, they laid the matter before their children. The noble and intrepid language of their eldest son, then a young man, on this occasion, is worthy of being recorded. "Father," said he, "rejoice that we are found worthy to suffer." His parents were much affected, and their minds so much strengthened in consequence, that they immediately concluded to attend their meeting next day. In the morning they proceeded to their place of worship accordingly, without seeking to avoid the armed insurgents by going into the fields; but keeping the public high-road, they were permitted to accomplish their purpose in safety, and expressed the satisfaction they felt in having thus fulfilled what they considered to be their duty. They were not then apprised of the circumstance which in the mean time had occurred, that the king's army had entered into that part of the country, and it so disconcerted the plans of the insurgents, that they were prevented from carrying their wicked designs into execution.

A signal preservation was also experienced by another Friend. His house, which was situated in rather a lonely part of the country, was ransacked and stripped of every thing valuable by a party of insurgents. Some hours after the depredation, another party entered for the same purpose, and the captain, discrediting the Friend's simple statement of what had already occurred, or irritated at the disappointment, raised his sword to murder him; when his wife, rising from her seat, with much emotion and firmness exclaimed, "Thou canst not touch a hair of my husband's head unless Divine Providence permit thee." The man was so struck by her christian fortitude, that he let the sword drop from his hand, and stooping to pick it up, without uttering a word he turned away, and quietly withdrew his men.

HAS THE SEVENTH ANGEL BEGUN TO SOUND?

I propose to briefly notice a few very prominent and fatal objections to the theory, that we are now living, and have been since 1844, under the sounding of the seventh angel. In the first place, I remark, that the first event that marks the sounding of this seventh angel is, "great voices" are heard in heaven, saying, "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever."—Rev. 11: 15. Our first inquiry is, when does that event take place? When do the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ? The answer is found in the following two verses: "And the four and twenty elders which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshiped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned." Here we learn that the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ, when the Lord takes to himself his great power and reigns; and not before. The prophet Daniel, in speaking on this point, says, "I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—Dan. 7: 13, 14. From the above testimony, we learn that the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ, when he comes in the clouds of heaven, and not before.

Those who claim that we are now living under the sounding of the seventh angel, try to make it appear (as necessarily they must) that this event has already taken place; that the kingdoms of this world have already become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ. But for my own part, I choose not to adopt a theory that leads to such erroneous and unscriptural conclusions. Those who hold this theory, in speaking of the events that follow the sounding of this angel, always begin with, "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come," etc. Why is this? Why not give the events in their chronological order, as given by inspiration? Why commence with the second instead of the first event? Inspiration has placed the events that were to occur under the sounding of this angel in perfect chronological order; just as they were to be fulfilled; and the first event that follows is, "great voices in heaven" are heard saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ." This event, as we have already shown, does not take place until the Lord takes to himself his great power and reigns.

It is claimed that the fourth event,—"the time of the dead, that they should be judged," —is now being fulfilled. But this view does not harmonize with the order of events as here given. The third event, as penned by inspiration, is, "And thy wrath is come" (or, in other words, the time has come for God's wrath to be poured out). As this event is yet future, we conclude that "the time of the dead, that they should be judged," is future also.

Another fatal objection to the view that we are living under the sounding of the seventh angel, is found in the fact, that when this angel begins to sound, the mystery of God is finished. "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets."—Rev. 10: 7. I am aware that great stress is laid upon the word "days,"—"in the days of the voice of the seventh angel," etc., showing that days or years are employed in its sounding. This may be all strictly true, and yet be no evidence to prove that this angel is now sounding, or will begin to sound while probation lasts; as days or years may be employed in its sounding in the future, as well as in the past.

But there is another word that demands equal stress, namely, "begin,"—"when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished." Mark, it does not say after this angel has been sounding ten, twenty, or fifty years, the mystery of God shall be finished; but when he shall begin to sound, then "the mystery of God should be finished." It is said that the mystery of God, as here brought to view, is the gospel to the Gentiles. Whether this be true or not, we will not stop to argue. We think, however, that proof is wanting. The apostle says, "Great is the mystery of godliness." But, for argument's sake, we will admit that it is the gospel to the Gentiles. Now let us read the text in this light: "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound," the gospel to the Gentiles shall be finished; or, in other words, the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled. Now if the gospel to the Gentiles was to be finished, or the times of the Gentiles fulfilled when the seventh angel began to sound, and he began to sound in 1844, then I ask what has been all this preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles for, for the past thirty years?

As the seventh seal is not opened during probation, so we conclude the seventh trumpet will not sound while probation lasts; but when it begins to sound, the work of our great High Priest for fallen man will be finished. May the Lord help the reader and writer to be ready for that momentous day.

"PULLING AT BOTH ENDS OF THE ROPE."

BRO. GRANT:—Your editorial of the 19th ult., ought to be read and re-read, and read a third time. The remarks are worth more than their weight in gold, as they expose an evil that has long retarded the work of God among us. I refer to your remarks about the work of Satan, when he sees that we are in earnest to spread the light on the coming of Christ, and finds that we are "determined to work, then he will try to divide our strength, by persuading a part of the laborers to separate, and pull in opposition to the rest." You say by this "pull" "nothing is gained." O yes, there is something; we have gained to ourselves the derision and contempt of the thinking and intelligent by-stander, who looks on, and is at once brought to the conclusion that there is nothing in the whole affair; and thus the most majestic cause under the whole heaven is made to stink in their nostrils. But there have been, and are still among us, those who, if they cannot be allowed to hold both ends of the rope, and the middle too, would sink the building to the bottom of the ocean. Under a very sanctimonious garb, they think it no disparagement to put forth every effort of body, mind and circumstances, to pull a well-working church to pieces, under different pretexts; such as "the coming of the Lord is not made sufficiently prominent; that 1868 places it too far off, for 1866 or 1867 is the time beyond successful contradiction;" and there are others who are equally opposed to all time, for fear of having to gather up the broken pieces; and yet another class, who, if you will only sit down with them and receive at their hand the bread and wine, on every first day of the week, though you should use a little freedom with an unoffending neighbor's character, it will not be taken to account.

Again, it may be that the pastor of the flock, who has toiled and worked late and early in the cause of his Master, and borne the burden while these were slumbering in the dark, is not as talented, and as "spiritually minded" as one person who seldom sees a superior. These, and the like, are sufficient causes from which to start off and lay the foundation of a "secesh" church. And Milton makes Satan say, "It is better to be king in hell, than an abject slave in heaven." And thus they give no sleep to their eyes, nor slumber to their eyelids, if they can only pull to pieces that which cost the money and toil and care of good men for years. If such can by any means prevail upon a half dozen of the restless and discontented, which may be found at this day in some churches, to follow them, then they will trumpet it through the length and breadth of the land, telling the editor of some paper of like precious faith with themselves, about this church collected under their godly management, and how "God is blessing them," and how they can perceive an increasing interest manifested in their meetings, and what a good is being done among them, and what an overwhelming degree of the Holy Spirit they enjoy in this pulling enterprise. "Man, vain man, patched up in a little brief authority, plays such frantic tricks before high heaven as to make even angels weep."

It is a marvel that God has committed so much into our hands. Had we been as jealous of the honor of his truth, as some among us have been of the honor of poor little self, we would long ago have met the enemy with an invulnerable front. But alas! alas! our day for work is about over, and we have not managed as well as we might have done.

EARLY EXPERIENCE.

From the time I was seven years old, I was often under the special influence of that Spirit that convinceth of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment to come. At that early age, I saw in a dream the prince of darkness, striving to destroy me; but I did not fear him, for I had a Protector, and the Evil One was put to flight. I could relate many of the particulars of that dream, as it seems quite fresh in my memory, but it would take up too much space. About the same time I saw the Man of Nazareth (also in a dream), but he did not speak to me, but gave directions concerning me to those who had the care of me. I was living at that time in Essex Co., Vt. Sometimes I was very happy and often prayed. I had to go some distance through the woods to school; and I remember kneeling down by the wayside, and pouring out my heart in prayer, and sometimes I felt so happy that I could hardly refrain from shouting aloud; and as I went on my way, it seemed that my feet scarcely touched the ground, I was so lifted up in ecstasy of joy.

When I was eight years old, we moved from Vermont to Massachusetts. In the beginning of the year 1843, we were living in Northbridge. Sinners were anxiously seeking the way of life, and about thirty were thought to be converted. On Sunday evening, the 12th of February, as I was on my way to an evening meeting, I was talking with a young man named Richardson. He said that he had been serious and anxious, but all those feelings were gone, and he did not want religion now. I replied that I was as anxious as ever, and desired to be still more so. An "inquiry meeting" was appointed for Monday evening, and I set out alone to go. I had nearly a mile to go over a lonely road, and as I was on my way I was met by the enemy. He told me that my convictions were all good, and I had no business in such a meeting as that. And it did seem then as though I was entirely destitute of interest or feeling. But I went forward. After I got there, and saw numbers in tears, my feelings of anxiety returned, and I was soon weeping with those who wept. But I left the place without finding relief. I sought and found my Sabbath school teacher, and he tried his best to help me. Late at night he went a little distance with me on my way home, and before leaving me he knelt down and prayed for me. Then I had a long and lonesome road to travel over, and I went on alone.

On the way I was stopped by a still small voice, which told me if I took another step before I solemnly resolved to serve the Lord, I should certainly be lost. I thought this was the last offer of mercy. I did not dare to take another step. I prayed earnestly for help, and resolved to live henceforth for God. How long I stood there I cannot tell. It was a dark and cloudy winter's night, far away from human habitation, and there in that place I stood and promised to serve and obey the Lord. At last I ventured to move towards home. I had obeyed that command, but had not yet found peace. The burden was crushing me, and I felt a foretaste of the wrath to come. I could say with one of old, "Thy wrath lieth hard upon me."—Ps. 88: 7. I knelt down by my bed and prayed, but still all was dark—no hope, no mercy, no way of escape could I see.

By and by a gentle voice said to me, "You can do no more; now just give up all to Jesus. Yield entirely to him." I obeyed immediately, and all my sorrow and darkness disappeared. I was filled with peace and love and light and joy. I did not shout very loud, for fear of disturbing the people in the house, but I felt like shouting; and these words,—"The Lord hath triumphed gloriously, the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea," were continually in my mouth. O how I did love Jesus. How glorious he did then appear. Blessed be his name. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

LINES

To Sister Lathera B. Weaver.

Dearest sister, art thou weary,
Lying on thy bed of pain?
With no ray of hope to cheer thee,
That thou mayst be well again?
Precious sister, I am thinking
With o'erflowing eyes of you;
Counting o'er the bitter trials
Jesus calls you to pass through.

Days of deepest pain and anguish
All thy years of life have been;
Weary years of sad affliction,
Dearest sister, I have seen.
Yet I humbly bless our Father,
Thank him both for you and me,
That his tender, loving mercy,
In affliction we may see.

Cheer up, sister, sad and weary,
Time is speeding swiftly by;
Long we've sighed for light of morning,
Dawn of day eternal's nigh.
Soon our nights of lonely weeping,
Days of anguish will be o'er;
Robes of light and crowns unfading,
Wait us on fair Eden's shore.

Soon in clouds of brightest glory,
Lo! our King to earth comes down;
They who love their Lord's appearing,
Soon shall wear the promised crown.
Soon no pain nor death can reach us,
Gathered in our Savior's fold,
In our Father's "many mansions"—
Gates of pearl and streets of gold.

A CHURCH PROSPER?—WHEN?—HOW LONG?

"What is a church? Let truth and reason speak;
They would reply: the faithful, pure and meek
From christian folds; the one collected race
Of all professions, and in every place."

Did the church of Ephesus prosper when she had left her first love? How long? "Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent."—Rev. 2: 5.

Did the church in Pergamos prosper while she retained them in her bosom who held "the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication"? and retained in her embrace them also that hold on to "the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing" the Lord hated? See Rev. 2: 14, 15. How long did she prosper?

How was it with the church at Thyatira? Did she prosper, while suffering "that woman Jezebel," who called "herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce" the servants of the Lord "to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols? . . . and she repented not." How long did this church prosper in this wickedness? Search and see. Instance the church in Sardis. Did prosperity attend her while having a name to live when she was dead? How long?

Take the church of the Laodiceans for example, that was "neither cold nor hot"; and because she was "lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot," the Lord said, "I will spew thee out of my mouth."—Rev. 3: 16, 17. Did this church prosper which said, "I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing," and knew not that she was "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked"? How long did she prosper? Mark the history of her downfall, her utter extinction.

How can churches prosper at the present day, grow in grace, be light-houses, cities on hills, the salt of the earth, looking "forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," when they depart from the simplicity and purity of the gospel, hew out to themselves "cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water"? How can that church be a soul-saving church, unless she obey God, come out from the world, be separate, and touch not the unclean thing? How can any church prosper so long as she imitates Popery in her splendid, gay, pompous temples, costly adornments, fashionable and ungodly church music?

How can any church prosper while disobeying God in accumulating debts to gratify pride and ambition in splendid, ostentatious houses of worship? How many religious societies are well nigh bankrupt, pressed down crushingly with enormous debts, by vieing with each other in gorgeous temples and high steeples, having begun to build and were not able to finish? "Owe no man any thing but . . . love."

Again, how can a church prosper spiritually, that contracts debts to gratify a spirit of ungodly emulation in high-steepled, fashionable churches, costly adornments, and then resort to worldly policy to liquidate these debts, extricate herself from the intolerable burden,—resort to fancy fairs, lotteries, grab-boxes, post-office gambling, festivals, and oyster suppers;—"sit down to eat and rise up to play."

"The church and world amalgamate,
A union worse than with the State,
Though motives are the same.
The love of pleasure and of gold,
On some professors have such hold,
They oft forget their name."

How can churches prosper in spiritual things, so long as Achans are in the camp, idolaters in dress, the covetous, the proud; lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God? Distillers, rum-sellers, wine-bibbers, tobacco-sellers, chewers, smokers, dancers, frolickers, theatre-goers, novel-readers, defrauders, Sabbath-desecrators?—those having a name to live while dead, professing godliness, meanwhile denying the power thereof? How is it possible for a church to prosper when "the whole head is sick and the whole heart faint"?

How can churches prosper who "heap to themselves teachers having itching ears,"—men-pleasers, time-servers, who keep back part of the price, prophesy smooth things, cry peace, peace, when there is no peace; refuse to open their lips for the dumb, and those appointed unto death? Instead of prosperity, is it not a marvel the Lord does not come in his wrath, quickly, and fight against them with "the sword of his mouth."

Again, how can churches prosper when one-half, or two-thirds of their members are covenant-breakers—backsliders, not in a preparation of heart to receive a blessing—in league with the devil, or, to use softer language, are aiders and abettors of that wicked and demoralizing institution, slavery.

Another reason why some churches are in an unprosperous condition is, that some of the most influential of their members are members of secret, oath-bound societies, which are not recognized in the inspired volume, and the tendency of which is to make men worse instead of better.

Again, there are some that have a name and a standing in the christian church, who are in heart half infidels; they do not admit the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth of the Bible. There are some portions of the sacred Scriptures which, because they cannot lower them down to the false standard of human reason, they throw out, thereby making the word of God of none effect, and are hindering instead of helping onward the cause of truth.

Again, no church can prosper that is divided against itself—a part for the Lord and part for Baal. A church that is built upon the foundation of Dr. A., or Dr. B., or upon any other than the apostles and prophets, having Jesus for its chief corner-stone, is any thing but a true gospel church, and therefore cannot prosper. "This is for your health."—Paul.

EATING AND DRINKING.

"Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—1 Cor. 10: 31.

In order that it may be said that we eat to the glory of God, we should, as far as possible, eat sanitary food, eat properly, and temperately. And,

1. We should, as far as practicable, eat sanitary or healthy food. Under this head we will first refer to the most healthy food. And we claim that that food is the best which was originally selected for man's use. And what was this food? Was it flesh meats? No. We find no permission from God to eat flesh meats for more than sixteen hundred years after the creation. The Creator originally selected a vegetable diet for man. Thus reads the sacred record: "And God said, Behold I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed, to you it shall be for meat." Gen. 1: 29.

When man was in his state of innocency, the kind Creator must have selected that kind of food for his use which was best adapted to his nature and wants: and any material deviation from God's original selection, must necessarily affect man in various ways.

It must be apparent to every enlightened and reflective mind, that the permission to eat flesh meats must have grown out of the fall. God's original design could not have been that man should subsist on flesh meats; that he should have to destroy the lives of other creatures equally tenacious of life, and adverse to suffering, as himself, to prolong his own life. There is something deeply affecting to any one whose heart vibrates in tenderness for all God's creatures, to see any of them suffering and dying to save our lives. The tendency of this must be to remind us that man has fallen,—that by the fall the beautiful creation is marred, and that there must be a penalty attached to sin. And how appropriate it was for the Creator to institute sacrifices to keep the idea of the fall and the curse, fresh to the human family, and to point their minds to the great sacrifice that was to be offered up that they might be saved from sin and death.

The advantages of a vegetable diet over flesh meats are numerous and worthy of our candid attention.

1. A farinaceous and vegetable diet contains all the nutritive properties that can be derived from food, and we can partake of it without feeling that we are eating that which has had to suffer and die.

2. It is a cheaper diet than that which consists of flesh meats. Let those who eat flesh meats take the grain that they feed out to the creatures they eat, or the means they use in buying meat, and they will see that it will be cheaper for them to eat the grain, or to use their means in buying grains, fruits, and vegetables. It is a fact easy of demonstration, that the grains, fruits, and vegetables which will grow on a certain piece of land, will go much further in sustaining life when eaten by man, than they will if you first feed them to swine, cattle, or any other creature, and then eat the meat into which a portion of these articles has been converted.

3. You can get a greater and better variety in a vegetable diet than in a meat diet. The variety in a vegetable diet is almost infinite, and such a diet is used with great gustatory pleasure, as those have found who have adapted their taste to it. Desserts are considered as the best part of a meal, and are usually composed of grains and fruits. Now the vegetarian lives chiefly on desserts, and partakes of his food with the greatest possible relish.

4. A farinaceous diet is more nutritious than a flesh diet. It has been frequently proved by chemical experiments that one pound of bread contains more nourishment than two pounds of the best meat.

5. A vegetable diet is freer from disease, and consequently can be used with more safety, than a flesh diet; and it is easier to detect disease in grains, fruits, and vegetables, than in flesh meats.

6. Inasmuch as those beasts which subsist on animal food are characterized by ferocity and rapacity, a flesh diet, eaten largely by man, naturally and necessarily developes fierceness and rapaciousness in him also; whereas a vegetable diet is constitutionally adapted to foster docility.

The reader needs only to compare the ferocity of the eagle, the lion, the tiger, the hyena, the wolf, etc., with the docility of the dove, the lamb, the deer, the ox, etc., to convince himself of the truthfulness of this point. Compare also the ferocity of the savage with the docility of the Japanese. You have also noticed that those dogs that live at the slaughter house, and subsist wholly on raw meat, are more ferocious and ugly than the common domestic dogs. The ancients in preparing fighters for their bloody arenas in which ferocity was required, fed them exclusively on raw flesh.

7. In order that health may be promoted, it is necessary that our various faculties be equally exercised and developed; but a flesh diet excites and unduly developes the feelings and animal propensities to the prejudice and deterioration of the moral and intellectual faculties. This is equally true of intoxicating drinks, tea, coffee, and tobacco, and highly stimulating food of any kind. By these stimulants, the animal organs are unduly excited and developed, the blood and vitality are withdrawn from the moral and intellectual organs, and they are blunted and weakened. And thus it is that so many are swayed by feeling, appetite and passion, instead of being led by enlightened reason. Thus it is that so few are prepared to appreciate religious principles, and to be religiously inclined. But not so with a plain vegetable diet, which reduces the inflammation of the blood, keeps the system cool, promotes clearness of thought, equally develops all the organs, and opens the way for moral and religious pursuits.

8. A plain vegetable diet is more conducive to longevity than flesh meats. It is not so stimulating in its nature as animal food. A flesh diet, especially if it is diseased and of a coarse and scrofulous nature, stimulates the system to undue action—beyond the strength that it imparts, draws from the general fund of vitality, from the oil and stamina of the system, causes the wheel of life to roll faster, and consequently shortens life.

Animal food tends to corruption more than vegetable food. It has been ascertained that chyme and blood formed of flesh, will corrupt sooner when extracted from the system and exposed to the atmosphere, than when formed of a vegetable diet. The same is true of the flesh that is formed of animal food.

Again it is more difficult for sores or wounds to heal in those who eat largely and promiscuously of animal food, than it is in those who live on a vegetable diet. This has been proved on various occasions; but especially was it illustrated during the late war between the Russians and the allied powers. It was ascertained that wounds which would prove fatal in French and English soldiers, would heal up rapidly in Russian soldiers. This difference was inquired into, and was easily traced to the difference in the diet of the two armies. The French and English soldiers ate largely of animal food, while the Russian soldiers subsisted chiefly on a vegetable diet.—Health Reformer.

THE EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.

"It is supposed that alcoholic drink gives force. It is called nerve force, and it is said that it tides a person over a difficulty until he can get stronger; but I say that nothing as a drug or medicine will give force unless it assimilates with the blood, and alcohol will not do that. If you were riding a horse at a race, and coming round toward the winning post and found your horse spent and blown, what would you do? You want to give more force. You give it a stimulant by pushing your spur into it. Off he goes, and you win. Was there any force in that spur that the horse had not before starting? Did that spur contain any force? It did not create any more force than the horse had at starting, but it evoked the force he had. And so it is with stimulants. For if they created force, why do you not go on spurring? If you did, you would soon find that your horse would fall dead. You would call a man a simpleton if if he went into his stable and gave his horse a bellyfull of spur before starting. That would not be the way to get force into him. It would be the way to get force out of him. So when persons have been dying from collapse in cases of fever or cholera. They have had brandy or wine given to them. It is like burning a candle at both ends; you burn it up. We cannot create force; we can only evoke it."

This is a portion of a speech lately delivered by an eminent physician of London, Eng., Dr. Monroe, at a temperance gathering; and it is precisely the argument and illustration which I have heard Dr. Jackson frequently use to show the injurious effects of medicines. People have been taught to suppose that they are made stronger by the use of some sorts of medicines because they feel stronger immediately after taking them. The ultimate effect of this treatment is well shown in this extract which I have given.—Laws of Life.

EFFECT OF LIGHT.

Dr. Moore, the metaphysician, thus speaks of the effect of light on body and mind:

A tadpole confined in darkness would never become a frog; and an infant deprived of heaven's free light will grow up a shapeless idiot instead of a beautiful and responsible being. Hence in the deep, dark gorges of the Swiss Valois, where the direct sunshine never reaches, the hideous prevalence of idiocy startles the traveler. It is a strange, melancholy idiocy. Many are incapable of any articulate speech; some are deaf, some blind, some labor under all these privations, and are all misshapen in some part of the body. I believe there is in all places a marked difference in the healthiness of houses according to their aspect with regard to the sun; and those are decidedly the healthiest, other things being equal, in which all the rooms are during some part of the day fully exposed to the direct light. Epidemics attack inhabitants on the shady side of the street, and exempt those on the other side; and even in epidemics, such as ague, the morbid influence is often thus partial in its labors."

CURE FOR A BURN.—By laying a piece of charcoal on a burn, the pain subsides immediately. By leaving the charcoal on one hour, the wound is healed.

MARCH AWAY.

Tune.—Minnie Minton.

Blessed Savior, in the shadow — 1 Cor. 13: 12.
I have waited here alone,
On the battle's gory meadow, — Matt. 13. 38.
Which the scythe of death hath mown.
I have listened for thy coming, — Isa. 26; 8.
Till the dreary dawn of day;
The day-star now is shining, — 2 Pet. 1: 19.
Let the armies march away.

Chorus.—O Savior, dear Savior,
I have heard the angels calling,
I have seen the golden shores;
O take me in the morning,
Where the shadows come no more,
Never more, never more.

Blessed Savior, I was wounded, — James 1: 15.
And I knew that I must die;
By the love of God surrounded, — John 3: 16.
And beloved ones kneeling nigh;
Then I fain did hear the whisper, — Prov. 23: 26.
When I gave my heart away,
Thy sins are all forgiven, — Rom. 8: 16.
Go, be marching in the way.

Blessed Savior, I am weary, — Isa. 26: 9.

OUR LOSS IN ADAM OUR GAIN IN CHRIST.

BY H. F. CARPENTER.

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Cor. 15: 22.

Reader, may we invite your attention to the Scripture given above? It will lead us to examine the foundation of that hope which teaches us that all men shall finally be holy, happy, and saved. It will explain to us the atoning work of Christ, and exhibit the necessity for his sufferings and his death. It will, we trust, set forth not only the justice, but the goodness of God, and make us to love and adore him more.

If only part of this text had been given, if we could only read "in Adam all die," and this were the whole truth, we might defend the justice, but could not easily make the goodness to appear. For how could God love our race, and yet suffer one man, by a single act, to bring death upon us and all our woe, with no gleam of hope that death should be vanquished and his sceptre be gone? But this is not the whole truth. If we read "in Adam all die," we may also read, "in Christ shall all be made alive"; so that it appears that God loved us too well to permit one man to plunge us into death, until he had provided another to deliver us therefrom. Here the simplest lesson of the text is, that our loss, as a race, in Adam, is gained again in Jesus Christ. Indeed, God has solemnly pledged himself to deliver man from all evil entailed upon him by his first parent Adam, and to make good to him all loss actually sustained by his transgression.

Man has had, and still has, occasion to use the old Jewish proverb, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." The sour grape eaten by father Adam, in the garden of Eden, which brought upon himself and us, his posterity, death, sets our teeth on edge, as friend after friend departs. But saith the Lord God, "As I live . . . ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel."—Ezek. 18: 2, 3. Thus, with the solemnity of an oath, God pledges himself to take man beyond the effects of his ancestral sins, which, of course, involves the act of restoring to man whatever he lost in his parent Adam.

With the point thus fortified, that God will make good to all their loss in Adam, let us not fail to notice the ground upon which he will do so. It is not that he may be just, nor because man has any claim upon him for such an act. He would have been just had he left man and his posterity in death, whither his sin had brought him. Were not the conditions proposed to man in paradise just? Were they not clearly understood and accepted by man? Then the execution of those conditions is just. But you ask if God permits a man to bring evil upon his posterity, is he not bound to deliver them from that evil? I reply, God permits men to steal. Is he bound to restore their plunder? God permits man to murder. Is he bound to restore life thus destroyed? He permits men to sell virtue for nought. Is he bound to restore virtue thus abandoned? How, then, is he bound in justice to restore what the first man was permitted to take from his posterity? He does it not because he must, but because he wills to do it. Not because of necessity, but of grace. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish." Therefore, we read, "As by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation (of death); even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."—Rev. 5: 16.

Now God having of his own free gift promised to restore to us all, whatever we have lost in Adam, it becomes us thoughtfully to consider what our losses were. More than our actual loss we cannot hope to receive unconditionally from God. If our desires exceed our loss in Adam, we can only hope to realize them "by patient continuance in well doing." What then constitutes our loss as a race in Adam? In estimating our loss, we must be cautious lest we claim too much. He whose baggage is lost by railroad accident, when traveling, needs to be careful lest he over-estimate his loss, and claim too much recompense from the corporation. I fear man may be detected in extravagant demands upon his Maker, who has, as we have seen, so willingly offered to repair our loss in Adam. "We have lost every thing," say some, and hence they hastily conclude that God will freely bestow every thing desirable upon them, both in this world and in that which is to come, without any anxiety on their part. But is it true that all men have lost all in Adam, and have a right thus to demand and expect all in Christ? By no means. Man, as a race, did not lose in Adam holiness. Adam could not lose for us, his posterity, any thing he did not possess, even as I could not lose a man's gold that I never saw.

Holiness was something that Adam never possessed, so far as we can learn from the record of his life. He once possessed innocence, it is true; but innocence is not holiness. Innocence is often found where there is no accountability; holiness, as a moral attribute, never. Innocence is the blank sheet prepared for characters good or evil; holiness is that sheet well written with wholesome words. Innocence is the unaccountable babe, prepared by future growth and action to develop a character holy or otherwise. Holiness is the mature man, with character developed according to divine pleasure. So God made man innocent, upright: and it was for him to develope a character of holiness, or its opposite. Look at Adam as he appears in Eden a stranger. Can you decide at once what the character of a stranger is? You know him not till some fit circumstance unfolds his heart to you. We wait not long before character develops itself in Adam. Surrounded by all that is beautiful; wanting nothing to feast his mental or bodily senses; having received all that paradise could afford of good from the hand of his beneficent Creator; yet, with so much to wed his heart to God, almost his first act was an act of transgression. He listened to the tempter's first appeal. Are these the indications of a holy heart? Does holiness thus easily transgress? Nay, holiness was not there. Adam did not lose it. He had it not to lose. Hence holiness is not among the things lost unconditionally in Adam, and consequently not among the things to be given to all unconditionally in Christ.

Another thing that we did not lose in Adam is perfect happiness. This, like happiness, was not in his possession to lose. We judge hastily, if we think Adam to have been perfectly happy even in Paradise. If what surrounds a man could make him perfectly happy, then Adam must have tasted unsullied bliss. But alas! happiness must spring up from within. How many mistake here. Seeking for and depending upon things without for joy, while true enjoyment comes from within, and depends upon a pure heart. From the time that that one tree, with its fair and tempting fruit, was denied to Adam, there seems to have been a conflict raging in his breast between right and wrong, obedience and disobedience, between God's mind expressed, and his own will struggling for the ascendancy. Is such a conflict consistent with perfect happiness? The soldier may shout amid the battle's roar, but it is not till victory is won that his joy rises full. Such a victory Adam never knew. His was defeat. Therefore fullness of joy was denied to him, and never being in his possession, he could not have lost it. It must not, therefore, be reckoned among our losses in Adam, nor claimed for all our race as an unconditional gift in Christ.

A third thing that we must not reckon among our losses in Adam is eternal life. Two views are entertained as to the life given of God to man, when he "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." One is, that the life then given was an endless one; the other, that it was a temporal life only. Either view renders it impossible for man (Adam) to have lost eternal life. If the life given him was an endless one, it was one which in its very nature could not be lost. If, on the other hand, the life given him was merely a temporal one (and this beyond controversy is true), then he had no eternal life in his possession to lose. Hence eternal live is not among our losses in Adam, and must not be claimed unconditionally in Christ.

What becomes, then, of the hope which persuades men that all shall at last become holy, happy and saved? What becomes of the foundation of such a hope? What if, as is often vulgarly said, "the plaster is as big as the wound," or, in other words, what if Christ will restore to all men their loss in Adam, and thus become the Savior of all men from Adamic sin and its effects? Holiness, perfect happiness, and eternal life, as we have seen, cannot be embraced in such a restitution, but lie beyond this work, and must be sought for by faith in Jesus Christ, and by "patient continuance in well doing," if ever enjoyed by man. Rom. 2: 7.

But what did we lose in Adam that we shall all get back again in Christ, whether we are good or bad?

1. We lost physical strength. God declared to Adam plainly the penalty for his transgression,—"In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," or, as the Hebrew is more literally rendered, "dying thou shalt surely die." (See margin.) Others translate the penalty thus:—"Thou shalt be mortal."—(Greek of Symmachus, also the Syriac, which is approved by Jerome and Grotius,—See Hudson's Debt and Grace, p. 169.) The Arabic renders it, "Thou shalt deserve to die." The Torgum of Jonathan, "Thou shalt be subject to death." No sooner, therefore, had he sinned, than mortality with all its exhausting processes fastened itself upon him, and debarred him from the use of life. He then had no means of repairing his physical energies as they gradually wasted by toil and age. In this consumptive condition of body, he begat us, his posterity; and it is not difficult to understand that man inherited physical weakness from his first parent, and that we are not born with strong and healthful constitutions, such as we might and should have enjoyed, had not Adam fallen. Here, then, was our first loss in Adam. May we not all, then, without respect to character, expect this loss repaired in Christ? Who will say that, in the resurrection, when "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good, . . . and they that have done evil," the wicked even will not come forth free from all the physical infirmities entailed upon them by Adamic sin, and stand with bodies that need never to corrupt, if it were not their own personal trangression invited the "hurt of the second death"? Thus Adam stood with a body in a certain sense incorruptible, until sin defiled it. Thus all shall stand, and none have occasion to use the proverb, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge."

But physical strength constitutes but a small part of our loss. We lost as a race the hope of eternal inheritance by any desire, will, or effort of our own. Adam, had his desire been sufficiently intense, and his will fixed, to inherit for ever the incorruptible paradise in which he was placed, by one single continued act of self-denial, might have secured it. But by sin he forfeited that inheritance, fell into the hands of violated law, and brought himself and his posterity under the bands of death, from which neither he nor they could extricate themselves by any desire, will or effort of their own. Here was loss in Adam. Hence Christ, if he would restore our loss, must take all, without regard to character, from the hands of that violated law, and place all where they may, by a desire, will and effort of their own, secure an incorruptible inheritance in the world to come. This he hath done, for he "hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." Gal. 3: 13. "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4: 4, 5.

Let us endeavor to illustrate how he hath redeemed all from under the law. Suppose I enter the service of a Mr. Legality upon these conditions: I am to do his pleasure in all things, or forfeit my life and the life of my posterity. He is to supply all my wants, and guard me from all harm while I do his pleasure, or forfeit his life. Soon after entering his service, I displease Mr. Legality, and my life and that of my posterity are forfeited. I am undone, hopeless, wretched. My elder brother hears of my ruin. He pities me and desires to deliver me from my helpless condition. He comes into the neighborhood, and visits Mr. Legality, and proposes to enter his service upon the same hard conditions that I had accepted. He to please in all things, and Mr. Legality to shield from all harm, each under the forfeiture of life. He does so. In nothing does he offend. But Mr. Legality fails to shield him, and allows wicked hands to slay him. He dies; but, to the astonishment of the world, in a few days rises to life again. Mr. Legality has now forfeited his life for not shielding him from suffering and death. What shall be done? Mr. Legality has a claim upon me and mine for our lives; my brother has a claim upon him for his life. My brother proposes to release Mr. Legality from his forfeiture of life, if he will release me from my forfeiture of life. This proposal is accepted, and the matter is settled. Now in this allegory several things are manifest.

1st. That I was ruined.

2d. That my condition was hopeless; I could not save myself.

3d. That my brother saved me.

4th. That he suffered death in order to save me.

5th. That he could not have saved me unless he had suffered death; for until he suffered he had no claim upon Mr. Legality that could offset his claim on me.

6th. That Mr. Legality still lived. Though he too had forfeited life, he gave up his claim upon me to save the payment of his own forfeiture.

7th. I am delivered from his hands by my brother death, so that I have no more to do with him or he with me.

8th. That I am debtor to my brother. To him I owe my all.

The application of this allegory is scarcely necessary. You have made it already in your mind. Mr. Legality, into whose service I entered, is the law of work, under which man was at first placed. Man was to keep it or die, as it is written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." The law promised to protect those who kept it. "The man that doeth them shall live in them." Man sinned, and thus forfeited his and his posterity's life. He was ruined. Christ, his elder brother, saw and pitied. He came to save. He was made under the law, and thus took man's place. He did no sin. He deserved not to die. His obedience should have saved him the pains of death, yet the law suffered him to die. He rose again. He had a claim for his sufferings and death. He abandoned his claim, that the claim of the law upon man might be abandoned. Thus he hath redeemed "them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."*

The foregoing allegory illustrates to us, first, Our present relation to the law of works. The law may not be abolished absolutely, nor be extinct as a rule of right; for sin now, as ever, is "the transgression of the law." Mr. Legality did not lose his life, but saved it by releasing me. But while the law may have an existence as the rule of right, yet it has lost its power either to condemn or to justify. What power had Mr. Legality either to condemn or to justify me, after my elder brother had forced him to abandon his claim upon me? So now, since Jesus Christ hath redeemed us from under the law, it has no power either to condemn or justify. Look at all nations gathered at the judgment seat of Christ. Some are upon his right hand, and some upon his left. Why does not the law condemn those upon his right hand? They have all transgressed it. Why, then, does it not condemn? It has lost its power either to condemn or to justify. It comes not forward either to justify the good, or to condemn the bad. Their destiny is no longer in the hands of the law, but in the hands of Him who sitteth upon the throne. He decides their destiny, not according to their faithfulness or unfaithfulness to the law, but to himself, who redeemed them. The accepted ones had loved him, visited, fed, and clothed him when needy; but the rejected ones had neglected him, forgotten and despised him. Think of this, all ye that hope to be saved by the deeds of the law. Your legal righteousness will profit you nothing in the day of Christ. For, although you should keep all these from your youth up, the law has no power to plead for you in that day. You have been taken from its hands. Jesus alone can justify or condemn. If you would find a friend in him in that day, you must show yourself friendly now. O, ye that despond because of your sins, take courage. There is hope for you. The law can no longer condemn. There is a refuge in Christ. Flee to him and you are safe.

* Note. Some may declare that if it be true that Christ has redeemed us from the law of works, violated by Adam, then man ought not to have died since the resurrection of Christ. I reply by saying that a man may purchase a slave's freedom from his master, and yet for some wise purpose leave the slave awhile in his old master's possession. The earth's redemption has been purchased (Heb. 9. 12) yet it groans under bondage, travailing in pain until now (Rom. 8: 20, 21, 22.) So Christ has purchased eternal redemption for us from the violated law of works; but, for some wise reason, he chooses to defer taking possession till "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth."

(To be concluded.)

For the World's Crisis.

PRAISE THE LORD.

(Concluded.)

One of the great apostles of revivals hesitates not to acknowledge the fact in a public meeting, that, "if we can get over the Sabbath and not lose a revival spirit, we do pretty well." What does this mean, but that its exercises are not all what they should be? that there is something, to say the least, that does not harmonize with the spirit of the gospel, with true devotion to God? It cannot but be evident to every candid observer, that there is something that bears a resemblance to scenes of fashionable amusements, that contributes more to vanity in pleasing the eye and ear of worldlings and fastidious persons, in a majority of cases, than in promoting spirituality. If in the proclaiming of gospel truth, however faithfully, good impressions are made on the mind, yet, like the darting of a lightning flash, the attention is diverted by the gay performances of the musicians; the truth is forgotten, and men live on like Gallio, caring not for what pertains to their spiritual welfare.

There is such a conformity to customs and habits, that in times of a revival and protracted meetings, all signs of such a movement must be abandoned when the Sabbath comes, in some societies, and both preacher and choir assume a different attitude. It seems that the Sabbath, instead of being made a day of retrograde, ought to be conducted with more spirituality and interest; but the organist and fiddler have come, and they must command superior honors; though many of them may have cared but little about the revival, or of attending prayer meetings in the past week, but now they must have what the devotees of pride and fashion call "good singing." The anxious are not called forth for prayers; and all the old praying christians and young converts must now stop, and look up, and be silent until evening, or Monday comes. If instruments of music have a tendency to promote spirituality of mind, and assist in the conversion of sinners, why don't they do it? why this danger on the Sabbath of losing a revival spirit? Facts are incontrovertible; the truth is too plain to be denied; prayers and vocal songs of praise, as well as preaching gospel truth, and exhortations, would be conceded to by most devoted christians, as being more conducive to spirituality than the drum, fife, fiddle, or all instrumental music whatever; yet they say, "we must conform to the times;" but the Bible says, "Be not conformed to this world."

Have not individuals resorted to instruments and rude company to evade seriousness; but have they ever afforded a healing balm? Where is the devoted christian that resorts to them as a balm in affliction to heal his wounded spirit? Or did Paul and Silas, when in prison, wish to use them to express the ecstatic joys that caused them to sing praises to their God? We nowhere find it recorded in the Bible that Christ commanded his followers to use musical instruments, the inventions of men, in praising him; they seem to be something superfluous, neither demanded or called for by our great Teacher in promoting his praise.

But many of the young, as well as the old, are highly delighted with such amusements, and some think dancing is proper and useful. Whatever custom or habit prevails in a community, most men are ready to adopt, whether good or bad, regardless of the laws of God, of reason, truth or decency: unwilling to inquire into the reason of things, with a view to any reform whatever. "For the most part," says Dr. Watts in his "Improvement of the Mind," p. 188, "people are born to their opinions, and never question the truth of what their family or their party profess. They clothe their minds, as they do their bodies, after the fashion; not one of a hundred ever examines his principles. We shall be suspected of lukewarmness, if we suppose examination necessary; and be charged as tending to apostasy, if we attempt to examine them. Persons are applauded for presuming they are in the right; and, as Mr. Locke says, 'he that considers and inquires into the reasons of things, is counted a foe to orthodoxy, because possibly he may deviate from some of the received doctrines.'"

As with instruments, so with dancing also; we have no hesitation in deciding in the negative; but what is the foundation of our decision? If it be groundless, we would discard it; but if supported by valid reasoning, would abide by it. Our opponents, doubtless, are ready to affirm, that we are not fit to decide in such matters, having never practiced. If, indeed, practice does make perfect, we see not how we have got to practice every thing to find whether it be good or bad. Must we take poison to ascertain whether it will kill us? have we got to commit the crimes of the criminal to know that they are bad? or descend into the bottomless pit to know that such a place exists? May we not know the character of a thing, or a person, by the fruits? "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" If such practices are beneficial to individuals, or communities, they ought to be approbated; but there is not the least substantial benefit derived from them that may not be acquired in a more laudable way. Do I hear one say that dancing and fiddling give exercise to the body and pleasure to the mind? If so, indeed, it is only transient, it can never yield "the peaceable fruit of righteousness." If a person needs exercise, why not engage in some useful labor, that would at the same time contribute to his real necessities, or to the pressing wants of a suffering humanity? O the folly of spending precious time with toys and vain amusements, and neglecting the cultivation of the mind.

But there are those who would object to classing fiddling with dancing. They would say that the violin and instruments in general were a great help to singing; but dancing they think abominable in the highest degree. Others say, "The choir cannot get along without instruments." This is both absurd and untrue; for the same individuals find no difficulty in getting along when a revival spirit prevails in their hearts. Persons lack in a disposition to do right, more than in ability. We doubt not there are voices competent in every congregation, were they properly exercised, to chant the songs of praise, and nothing prevents it but an ungodly devotion to pride and fashion. It remains for our opponents to prove from the Bible, if there is any thing more nefarious or criminal in dancing, than in playing; or if it would be a more heinous profanation or desecration of the Sabbath, for the same individuals to dance in what is called the sanctuary of the Lord, than to play on instruments. It needs only custom to make it appear as proper and right. It is indeed equally as right, as reasonable, and as truly taught by David; no one can deny this, and that he regarded it with equal excellence, and to be as sacred a performance. He says, "Praise him with the timbrel and dance." But no reasonable person will attempt to prove that all David said or did was perfectly right; that he was a perfect pattern; for good men of ancient days were subject to sin and error, as at the present day; and their actions and principles are recorded in history, not always to be imitated, but to be shunned.

We would ask every candid reader, is it justifiable to do any thing upon which the Bible has declared a woe? It is found in the 6th chapter of Amos, that there was a "Woe to them . . . that chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music, like David." And in Isaiah 5th, there is a "woe" to those that have "the harp and viol, the tabret and pipe, and wine . . . in their feasts." The law of God taught that man should "not commit adultery;" yet David, Solomon, and others, were guilty of its violation. The customs and laws of the land might have tolerated the practice, and their minds being swayed by these, as many are at the present day, God's law remained to them, at least in part, a dead letter. The same is the case in regard to the taking of human life, slavery, idolatry, intemperance, and other evils; although God has said, "Thou shalt not kill," yet the majority of the professors of christianity break this command in theory, if not in practice, without the least scruple. Custom, supposed necessities, worldly policies and expediencies, so captivate their minds, that the teachings of Christ are deemed unsafe to follow, relating to peace; and many are ready to adopt without hesitation, whatever may be the prevailing opinion of those around them.

The use of musical instruments has occasioned the expense of much money and time. We doubt not that the interest of what some societies expend in this way would amount to more than they contribute for all objects of charity abroad. And the young are educated to what is worse than idleness,—expensive amusement. Is it right thus to squander our Lord's goods, when a perishing world is pleading with us to lend assistance to their rescue from temporal and eternal death? Such amusements are not the offspring of a pure, undefiled religion. We believe that every sober and pious mind, uncontrolled by custom, would never hesitate to regard both dancing and playing as equally inconsistent, claiming their disapprobation, and would class them among the vain and foolish pleasures of a vain world. A prayer meeting would be craved by the devout christian, and attended with a decided preference to a social party with instrumental performances or dancing. If a person attends these, he is not truly devoted to God; he is devoted in some degree, at least, to fashion and vanity; for, in such amusements, the gay and vicious delight, as in Job 21: 12. "They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ," and we ask, where is the wicked and profligate youth, devoted to fashion and vice, who does not cheer up and exhibit in his countenance a fresh glow of approbation and delight to hear the sound of the viol, or any other musical instrument? But does it fit him for true happiness in the dying hour?

Is it reasonable to suppose the pleasures of the wicked compatible with christianity? Is it likely that those woes would have been pronounced if they were? We find proof from the New Testament, or at least strongly implied, that musical instruments were not to be used in the worship of God. "Neither is worshiped with men's hands." Acts 17: 25. Is it not true that persons employ their hands on instruments in producing sound, and that in this way they profess to worship God? What was the rule of worship recorded in 1 Cor. 14: 29? "When ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath an interpretation," —hath an instrument? O no, not quite so much; yet the people now add this in practice, or rather, make it one of the most prominent features of their professed worship, to the exclusion of other scriptural rules. But why is such a departure from the apostolic rule necessary? Was not christianity as successful on the day of Pentecost, when three thousand were pricked in the heart, as it is now? But we are far from contending that this practice is all the obstacle to success; yet we believe it one among the many conformities to the world which are forbidden to christians. And, indeed, when revivals of pure religion now occur, the most spiritual individuals are inclined to say, come, let us all sing together.

It is said in 1 Cor. 14: 15, "I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also." Paul does not say he will play with the spirit and understanding.—"Singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord."—Eph. 5: 19. Again, in Col. 3: 16, "Singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." No instrument of man's invention is spoken of as concerned in the affair; it does not say singing and playing with melody on instruments. And, surely, every christian is bound by scriptural authority to discard all such conformities to the world. I would ask, is it conforming to Christ to use such things? Did he set the example? Ask the departing saint if any of these "delights of the sons of men" afford him consolation; if they do he must leave them all behind, and have a more "enduring substance," or meet a woful failure.

AUTUMN MUSINGS.

The falling leaf seems particularly friendly to reflective meditation. Perhaps no season of the year has power to present to our mind simultaneously the past, present, and future, and impress our own frailty, like the golden and frosty Autumn. As we stretch our eyes far as the visual line which girts us round, the forests tempt us to believe Flora is exercising her most luxuriant taste and skill; and for the moment we are entranced.

Withdrawing the distant gaze, we look admiringly upon our lordly village maples, whose verdant clothing has protected and cheered us through the scorchings of midsummer, and their deep, beautiful blushes are evidence unmistakable that icy frost has kissed them again and again; but they are not yet disrobed, but retain most of their gorgeous apparel; but a few more like greetings, and these beauties perish.

What feature in nature so calculated to remind man of his mortality! Drop, drop, one by one, so silent and gentle, and withal so common, that but little heed is paid; occasionally a fiercer blast, and a large train are suddenly laid in the dust. Is it not thus with our friends? As one by one they droop and die, little is thought of it. A fearful epidemic, or raging war, as it lays its thousands in the dust at once, may fix longer our attention; yet not long will men pause from their giddy chase after gain.

This lesson of our frailty should impress me that soon (unless our Savior comes) like the grass and leaves will my strength and grace be gone. I may be swept away by the next breath of time, like that fluttering leaf, and then all I have gathered around me to enrich and beautify, no longer serves me; and unless I have a treasure laid up where the change of season can never affect it, I have lived in vain. Yes, worse than in vain.

This decadence of vegetable matter was a comparison befitting both prophets and apostles. If we turn our attention to the man whose lips were prepared by an angel to utter burning eloquence, we hear him exclaim thus: "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field." Then listen to the patient man of Uz, and he corroborates the same: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also like a shadow, and continueth not." Peter and James fully accord with this language.

Again, as the pinching frosts are multiplied, and one garment after another is necessarily added, how strongly we are reminded of the poor who have but few, if indeed any to add; but, pinched and shivering, they look with dread at the approach of "cruel winter." As we see our barns and cellars filling, can we forbear breathing out a fervent petition for those who, with all their judicious frugality, have only been able just to meet the demands of nature? They possess no fields of grain and fruit to gather. Dire disease has robbed them of the use of their limbs, or for ever closed their visual organs, or may be has laid the father and husband in the cold ground, leaving only one pair of delicate hands to provide for helpless innocents. God makes the widow and orphan a special object of his commiseration; and his children, of course, will possess the same characteristic.

This moan of autumnal winds seems to sigh over man's lost innocence, and no marvel if they sometimes produce melancholy. When we realize that these sighing gales are so many testimonies of the curse, we involuntarily turn to Eden lost; but, thank God, we do not long linger here, but rest in the promise of Eden restored; for, as surely as God lives, it will be done. Then I must be there, where perfumed zephyrs shall take the place of these wailing autumnal winds, and all nature shall wear the fresh beauty of summer, and every sight shall please, and every sound shall cheer.

"Hail, ye sighing sons of sorrow,
View with me th' autumnal gloom;
Learn from thence your fate to-morrow,
Dead, perhaps laid in the tomb'

See all nature fading, dying,
Silent, all things seem to mourn;
Life from vegetation flying,
Brings to mind the mould'ring urn."

HOLINESS.

Bro. Grant:—For three years, I have been a constant reader of the Crisis, and from its many valuable communications have derived much instruction. And I have felt, at times, as though it might be my duty, through this medium, to give my humble testimony in favor of Jesus. But, knowing my inability to write for the public eye, the testimony has been withheld. I have at length decided to transmit the following, which you may dispose of as you think proper.

Holiness. There is music in the sound. And when it falls upon my ear, it thrills through my whole soul. To me the subject of holiness is one of deep, all-absorbing interest. And, although unworthy, I feel that it would be a privilege to join the band of witnesses, whose testimony is, that "the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin," and that "he is able also to save them to the uttermost." Glory to God for such a salvation as this. And O, how simple are its conditions. Faith in the willingness and power of Jesus thus to save, springing out of entire consecration to God. Never shall I forget the hour, when, after deep distress on account of my unlikeness to God, and want of conformity to his will, I knew, by happy experience, that Jesus could "save . . . to the uttermost."

The campmeeting at Alton Bay was in progress at the time, and, though I had for years prayed and besought the Lord with tears to sanctify me, yet I sensibly felt that I was not prepared to labor for the Lord as I then was. Thursday morning, I listened to your discourse upon sanctification. And O, how plainly I was shown the way. I at once decided to start in the way which I now saw so clear. Almost as soon as I came to this decision, the powers of darkness were combined against me, to drive me, if possible, from the position I had taken. But they were unavailing, for I was determined, "live or die," I would be the Lord's. I then lost sight of every other object; my eye was fixed on Jesus; and, while steadfastly looking to him, I began to feel the virtue of his blood; my burden rolled off, and love, joy, and gratitude, in a full tide flowed into my soul. I knew the work was accomplished, that I was saved even "to the uttermost." I could adopt the language of the Psalmist, "How sweet are thy words unto my taste; yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth."

I still feel that the sacrifice is bound to the altar that sanctifieth the gift. As I continue to press on, the light beams with increasing brightness on my pathway. But I find it is only when the sacrifice is complete, when all is upon the hallowed altar, that this faith can be exercised. There cannot be perfect faith where there is not perfect submission. O, I love very much to be the Lord's, to offer my little all upon the altar that sanctifieth the gift. I love with implicit confidence to repose on the bosom of Jesus; on him cast all my cares and burdens, knowing that in him I have a present friend and helper, and that "he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him." And I love, too, to feel that I shall soon behold him arrayed in glory and light from above. I can truly say with the poet,—

"Come and reign; come and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne;
And O, it fills my heart with joy
To know we're almost home."

Your sister waiting for Jesus, and seeking "by patient continuance in well doing, . . . for glory and honor and immortality," expecting, as my reward, eternal life,

OUR LOSS IN ADAM OUR GAIN IN CHRIST.

BY H. F. CARPENTER.

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Cor. 15: 22.

Reader, may we invite your attention to the Scripture given above? It will lead us to examine the foundation of that hope which teaches us that all men shall finally be holy, happy, and saved. It will explain to us the atoning work of Christ, and exhibit the necessity for his sufferings and his death. It will, we trust, set forth not only the justice, but the goodness of God, and make us to love and adore him more.

If only part of this text had been given, if we could only read "in Adam all die," and this were the whole truth, we might defend the justice, but could not easily make the goodness to appear. For how could God love our race, and yet suffer one man, by a single act, to bring death upon us and all our woe, with no gleam of hope that death should be vanquished and his sceptre be gone? But this is not the whole truth. If we read "In Adam all die," we may also read, "in Christ shall all be made alive"; so that it appears that God loved us too well to permit one man to plunge us into death, until he had provided another to deliver us therefrom. Here the simplest lesson of the text is, that our loss, as a race, in Adam, is gained again in Jesus Christ. Indeed, God has solemnly pledged himself to deliver man from all evil entailed upon him by his first parent Adam, and to make good to him all loss actually sustained by his transgression.

Man has had, and still has, occasion to use the old Jewish proverb, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." The sour grape eaten by father Adam, in the garden of Eden, which brought upon himself and us, his posterity, death, sets our teeth on edge, as friend after friend departs. But saith the Lord God, "As I live . . . ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel."—Ezek. 18: 2, 3. Thus, with the solemnity of an oath, God pledges himself to take man beyond the effects of his ancestral sins, which, of course, involves the act of restoring to man whatever he lost in his parent Adam.

With the point thus fortified, that God will make good to all their loss in Adam, let us not fail to notice the ground upon which he will do so. It is not that he may be just, nor because man has any claim upon him for such an act. He would have been just had he left man and his posterity in death, whither his sin had brought him. Were not the conditions proposed to man in paradise just? Were they not clearly understood and accepted by man? Then the execution of those conditions is just. But you ask if God permits a man to bring evil upon his posterity, is he not bound to deliver them from that evil? I reply, God permits men to steal. Is he bound to restore their plunder? God permits man to murder. Is he bound to restore life thus destroyed? He permits men to sell virtue for nought. Is he bound to restore virtue thus abandoned? How, then, is he bound in justice to restore what the first man was permitted to take from his posterity? He does it not because he must, but because he wills to do it. Not because of necessity, but of grace. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish." Therefore, we read, "As by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation (of death); even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."—Rev. 5: 18.

Now God having of his own free gift promised to restore to us all, whatever we have lost in Adam, it becomes us thoughtfully to consider what our losses were. More than our actual loss we cannot hope to receive unconditionally from God. If our desires exceed our loss in Adam, we can only hope to realize them "by patient continuance in well doing." What then constitutes our loss as a race in Adam? In estimating our loss, we must be cautious lest we claim too much. He whose baggage is lost by railroad accident, when traveling, needs to be careful lest he over-estimate his loss, and claim too much recompense from the corporation. I fear man may be detected in extravagant demands upon his Maker, who has, as we have seen, so willingly offered to repair our loss in Adam. "We have lost every thing," say some, and hence they hastily conclude that God will freely bestow every thing desirable upon them, both in this world and in that which is to come, without any anxiety on their part. But is it true that all men have lost all in Adam, and have a right thus to demand and expect all in Christ? By no means. Man, as a race, did not lose in Adam holiness. Adam could not lose for us, his posterity, any thing he did not possess, even as I could not lose a man's gold that I never saw.

Holiness was something that Adam never possessed, so far as we can learn from the record of his life. He once possessed innocence, it is true; but innocence is not holiness. Innocence is often found where there is no accountability; holiness, as a moral attribute, never. Innocence is the blank sheet prepared for characters good or evil; holiness is that sheet well written with wholesome words. Innocence is the unaccountable babe, prepared by future growth and action to develop a character holy or otherwise. Holiness is the mature man, with character developed according to divine pleasure. So God made man innocent, upright: and it was for him to develope a character of holiness, or its opposite. Look at Adam as he appears in Eden a stranger. Can you decide at once what the character of a stranger is? You know him not till some fit circumstance unfolds his heart to you. We wait not long before character develops itself in Adam. Surrounded by all that is beautiful; wanting nothing to feast his mental or bodily senses; having received all that paradise could afford of good from the hand of his beneficent Creator; yet, with so much to wed his heart to God, almost his first act was an act of transgression. He listened to the tempter's first appeal. Are these the indications of a holy heart? Does holiness thus easily transgress? Nay, holiness was not there. Adam did not lose it. He had it not to lose. Hence holiness is not among the things lost unconditionally in Adam, and consequently not among the things to be given to all unconditionally in Christ.

Another thing that we did not lose in Adam is perfect happiness. This, like happiness, was not in his possession to lose. We judge hastily, if we think Adam to have been perfectly happy even in Paradise. If what surrounds a man could make him perfectly happy, then Adam must have tasted unsullied bliss. But alas! happiness must spring up from within. How many mistake here. Seeking for and depending upon things without for joy, while true enjoyment comes from within, and depends upon a pure heart. From the time that that one tree, with its fair and tempting fruit, was denied to Adam, there seems to have been a conflict raging in his breast between right and wrong, obedience and disobedience, between God's mind expressed, and his own will struggling for the ascendancy. Is such a conflict consistent with perfect happiness? The soldier may shout amid the battle's roar, but it is not till victory is won that his joy rises full. Such a victory Adam never knew. His was defeat. Therefore fullness of joy was denied to him, and never being in his possession, he could not have lost it. It must not, therefore, be reckoned among our losses in Adam, nor claimed for all our race as an unconditional gift in Christ.

A third thing that we must not reckon among our losses in Adam is eternal life. Two views are entertained as to the life given of God to man, when he "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." One is, that the life then given was an endless one; the other, that it was a temporal life only. Either view renders it impossible for man (Adam) to have lost eternal life. If the life given him was an endless one, it was one which in its very nature could not be lost. If, on the other hand, the life given him was merely a temporal one (and this beyond controversy is true), then he had no eternal life in his possession to lose. Hence eternal live is not among our losses in Adam, and must not be claimed unconditionally in Christ.

What becomes, then, of the hope which persuades men that all shall at last become holy, happy and saved? What becomes of the foundation of such a hope? What if, as is often vulgarly said, "the plaster is as big as the wound," or, in other words, what if Christ will restore to all men their loss in Adam, and thus become the Savior of all men from Adamic sin and its effects? Holiness, perfect happiness, and eternal life, as we have seen, cannot be embraced in such a restitution, but lie beyond this work, and must be sought for by faith in Jesus Christ, and by "patient continuance in well doing," if ever enjoyed by man. Rom. 2: 7.

But what did we lose in Adam that we shall all get back again in Christ, whether we are good or bad?

1. We lost physical strength. God declared to Adam plainly the penalty for his transgression,—"In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," or, as the Hebrew is more literally rendered, "dying thou shalt surely die." (See margin.) Others translate the penalty thus:—"Thou shalt be mortal."—(Greek of Symmachus, also the Syriac, which is approved by Jerome and Grotius,—See Hudson's Debt and Grace, p. 169.) The Arabic renders it, "Thou shalt deserve to die." The Torgum of Jonathan, "Thou shalt be subject to death." No sooner, therefore, had he sinned, than mortality with all its exhausting processes fastened itself upon him, and debarred him from the use of life. He then had no means of repairing his physical energies as they gradually wasted by toil and age. In this consumptive condition of body, he begat us, his posterity; and it is not difficult to understand that man inherited physical weakness from his first parent, and that we are not born with strong and healthful constitutions, such as we might and should have enjoyed, had not Adam fallen. Here, then, was our first loss in Adam. May we not all, then, without respect to character, expect this loss repaired in Christ? Who will say that, in the resurrection, when "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good, . . . and they that have done evil," the wicked even will not come forth free from all the physical infirmities entailed upon them by Adamic sin, and stand with bodies that need never to corrupt, if it were not their own personal trangression invited the "hurt of the second death"? Thus Adam stood with a body in a certain sense incorruptible, until sin defiled it. Thus all shall stand, and none have occasion to use the proverb, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge."

But physical strength constitutes but a small part of our loss. We lost as a race the hope of eternal inheritance by any desire, will, or effort of our own. Adam, had his desire been sufficiently intense, and his will fixed, to inherit for ever the incorruptible paradise in which he was placed, by one single continued act of self-denial, might have secured it. But by sin he forfeited that inheritance, fell into the hands of violated law, and brought himself and his posterity under the bands of death, from which neither he nor they could extricate themselves by any desire, will or effort of their own. Here was loss in Adam. Hence Christ, if he would restore our loss, must take all, without regard to character, from the hands of that violated law, and place all where they may, by a desire, will and effort of their own, secure an incorruptible inheritance in the world to come. This he hath done, for he "hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." Gal. 3: 13. "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4: 4, 5.

Let us endeavor to illustrate how he hath redeemed all from under the law. Suppose I enter the service of a Mr. Legality upon these conditions: I am to do his pleasure in all things, or forfeit my life and the life of my posterity. He is to supply all my wants, and guard me from all harm while I do his pleasure, or forfeit his life. Soon after entering his service, I displease Mr. Legality, and my life and that of my posterity are forfeited. I am undone, hopeless, wretched. My elder brother hears of my ruin. He pities me and desires to deliver me from my helpless condition. He comes into the neighborhood, and visits Mr. Legality, and proposes to enter his service upon the same hard conditions that I had accepted. He to please in all things, and Mr. Legality to shield from all harm, each under the forfeiture of life. He does so. In nothing does he offend. But Mr. Legality fails to shield him, and allows wicked hands to slay him. He dies; but, to the astonishment of the world, in a few days rises to life again. Mr. Legality has now forfeited his life for not shielding him from suffering and death. What shall be done? Mr. Legality has a claim upon me and mine for our lives; my brother has a claim upon him for his life. My brother proposes to release Mr. Legality from his forfeiture of life, if he will release me from my forfeiture of life. This proposal is accepted, and the matter is settled. Now in this allegory several things are manifest.

1st. That I was ruined.

2d. That my condition was hopeless; I could not save myself.

3d. That my brother saved me.

4th. That he suffered death in order to save me.

5th. That he could not have saved me unless he had suffered death; for until he suffered he had no claim upon Mr. Legality that could offset his claim on me.

6th. That Mr. Legality still lived. Though he too had forfeited life, he gave up his claim upon me to save the payment of his own forfeiture.

7th. I am delivered from his hands by my brother death, so that I have no more to do with him or he with me.

8th. That I am debtor to my brother. To him I owe my all.

The application of this allegory is scarely necessary. You have made it already in your mind. Mr. Legality, into whose service I entered, is the law of work, under which man was at first placed. Man was to keep it or die, as it is written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." The law promised to protect those who kept it. "The man that doeth them shall live in them." Man sinned, and thus forfeited his and his posterity's life. He was ruined. Christ, his elder brother, saw and pitied. He came to save. He was made under the law, and thus took man's place. He did no sin. He deserved not to die. His obedience should have saved him the pains of death, yet the law suffered him to die. He rose again. He had a claim for his sufferings and death. He abandoned his claim, that the claim of the law upon man might be abandoned. Thus he hath redeemed "them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."*

The foregoing allegory illustrates to us, first, Our present relation to the law of works. The law may not be abolished absolutely, nor be extinct as a rule of right; for sin now, as ever, is "the transgression of the law." Mr. Legality did not lose his life, but saved it by releasing me. But while the law may have an existence as the rule of right, yet it has lost its power either to condemn or to justify. What power had Mr. Legality either to condemn or to justify me, after my elder brother had forced him to abandon his claim upon me? So now, since Jesus Christ hath redeemed us from under the law, it has no power either to condemn or justify. Look at all nations gathered at the judgment seat of Christ. Some are upon his right hand, and some upon his left. Why does not the law condemn those upon his right hand? They have all transgressed it. Why, then, does it not condemn? It has lost its power either to condemn or to justify. It comes not forward either to justify the good, or to condemn the bad. Their destiny is no longer in the hands of the law, but in the hands of Him who sitteth upon the throne. He decides their destiny, not according to their faithfulness or unfaithfulness to the law, but to himself, who redeemed them. The accepted ones had loved him, visited, fed, and clothed him when needy; but the rejected ones had neglected him, forgotten and despised him. Think of this, all ye that hope to be saved by the deeds of the law. Your legal righteousness will profit you nothing in the day of Christ. For, although you should keep all these from your youth up, the law has no power to plead for you in that day. You have been taken from its hands. Jesus alone can justify or condemn. If you would find a friend in him in that day, you must show yourself friendly now. O, ye that despond because of your sins, take courage. There is hope for you. The law can no longer condemn. There is a refuge in Christ. Flee to him and you are safe.

* Note. Some may declare that if it be true that Christ has redeemed us from the law of works, violated by Adam, then man ought not to have died since the resurrection of Christ. I reply by saying that a man may purchase a slave's freedom from his master, and yet for some wise purpose leave the slave awhile in his old master's possession. The earth's redemption has been purchased (Heb. 9: 12), yet it groans under bondage, travailing in pain until now (Rom. 8: 20, 21, 22.) So Christ has purchased eternal redemption for us from the violated law of works; but, for some wise reason, he chooses to defer taking possession till "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth."

For the World's Crisis.

PRAISE THE LORD.

(Concluded.)

One of the great apostles of revivals hesitates not to acknowledge the fact in a public meeting, that, "if we can get over the Sabbath and not lose a revival spirit, we do pretty well." What does this mean, but that its exercises are not all what they should be? that there is something, to say the least, that does not harmonize with the spirit of the gospel, with true devotion to God? It cannot but be evident to every candid observer, that there is something that bears a resemblance to scenes of fashionable amusements, that contributes more to vanity in pleasing the eye and ear of worldlings and fastidious persons, in a majority of cases, than in promoting spirituality. If in the proclaiming of gospel truth, however faithfully, good impressions are made on the mind, yet, like the darting of a lightning flash, the attention is diverted by the gay performances of the musicians; the truth is forgotten, and men live on like Gallio, caring not for what pertains to their spiritual welfare.

There is such a conformity to customs and habits, that in times of a revival and protracted meetings, all signs of such a movement must be abandoned when the Sabbath comes, in some societies, and both preacher and choir assume a different attitude. It seems that the Sabbath, instead of being made a day of retrograde, ought to be conducted with more spirituality and interest; but the organist and fiddler have come, and they must command superior honors; though many of them may have cared but little about the revival, or of attending prayer meetings in the past week, but now they must have what the devotees of pride and fashion call "good singing." The anxious are not called forth for prayers; and all the old praying christians and young converts must now stop, and look up, and be silent until evening, or Monday comes. If instruments of music have a tendency to promote spirituality of mind, and assist in the conversion of sinners, why don't they do it? why this danger on the Sabbath of losing a revival spirit? Facts are incontrovertible; the truth is too plain to be denied; prayers and vocal songs of praise, as well as preaching gospel truth, and exhortations, would be conceded to by most devoted christians, as being more conducive to spirituality than the drum, fife, fiddle, or all instrumental music whatever; yet they say, "we must conform to the times;" but the Bible says, "Be not conformed to this world."

Have not individuals resorted to instruments and rude company to evade seriousness; but have they ever afforded a healing balm? Where is the devoted christian that resorts to them as a balm in affliction to heal his wounded spirit? Or did Paul and Silas, when in prison, wish to use them to express the ecstatic joys that caused them to sing praises to their God? We nowhere find it recorded in the Bible that Christ commanded his followers to use musical instruments, the inventions of men, in praising him; they seem to be something superfluous, neither demanded or called for by our great Teacher in promoting his praise.

But many of the young, as well as the old, are highly delighted with such amusements, and some think dancing is proper and useful. Whatever custom or habit prevails in a community, most men are ready to adopt, whether good or bad, regardless of the laws of God, of reason, truth or decency: unwilling to inquire into the reason of things, with a view to any reform whatever. "For the most part," says Dr. Watts in his "Improvement of the Mind," p. 188, "people are born to their opinions, and never question the truth of what their family or their party profess. They clothe their minds, as they do their bodies, after the fashion; not one of a hundred ever examines his principles. We shall be suspected of lukewarmness, if we suppose examination necessary; and be charged as tending to apostasy, if we attempt to examine them. Persons are applauded for presuming they are in the right; and, as Mr. Locke says, 'he that considers and inquires into the reasons of things, is counted a foe to orthodoxy, because possibly he may deviate from some of the received doctrines.'"

As with instruments, so with dancing also; we have no hesitation in deciding in the negative; but what is the foundation of our decision? If it be groundless, we would discard it; but if supported by valid reasoning, would abide by it. Our opponents, doubtless, are ready to affirm, that we are not fit to decide in such matters, having never practiced. It, indeed, practice does make perfect, we see not how we have got to practice every thing to find whether it be good or bad. Must we take poison to ascertain whether it will kill us? have we got to commit the crimes of the criminal to know that they are bad? or descend into the bottomless pit to know that such a place exists? May we not know the character of a thing, or a person, by the fruits? "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" If such practices are beneficial to individuals, or communities, they ought to be approbated; but there is not the least substantial benefit derived from them that may not be acquired in a more laudable way. Do I hear one say that dancing and fiddling give exercise to the body and pleasure to the mind? If so, indeed, it is only transient, it can never yield "the peaceable fruit of righteousness." If a person needs exercise, why not engage in some useful labor, that would at the same time contribute to his real necessities, or to the pressing wants of a suffering humanity? O the folly of spending precious time with toys and vain amusements, and neglecting the cultivation of the mind.

But there are those who would object to classing fiddling with dancing. They would say that the violin and instruments in general were a great help to singing; but dancing they think abominable in the highest degree. Others say, "The choir cannot get along without instruments." This is both absurd and untrue; for the same individuals find no difficulty in getting along when a revival spirit prevails in their hearts. Persons lack in a disposition to do right, more than in ability. We doubt not there are voices competent in every congregation, were they properly exercised, to chant the songs of praise, and nothing prevents it but an ungodly devotion to pride and fashion. It remains for our opponents to prove from the Bible, if there is any thing more nefarious or criminal in dancing, than in playing; or if it would be a more heinous profanation or desecration of the Sabbath, for the same individuals to dance in what is called the sanctuary of the Lord, than to play on instruments. It needs only custom to make it appear as proper and right. It is indeed equally as right, as reasonable, and as truly taught by David; no one can deny this, and that be regarded it with equal excellence, and to be as sacred a performance. He says, "Praise him with the timbrel and dance." But no reasonable person will attempt to prove that all David said or did was perfectly right; that he was a perfect pattern; for good men of ancient days were subject to sin and error, as at the present day; and their actions and principles are recorded in history, not always to be imitated, but to be shunned.

We would ask every candid reader, is it justifiable to do any thing upon which the Bible has declared a woe? It is found in the 6th chapter of Amos, that there was a "Woe to them . . . that chant to the sound of the vio', and invent to themselves instruments of music, like David." And in Isaiah 5th, there is a "woe" to those that have "the harp and viol, the tabret and pipe, and wine . . . in their feasts." The law of God taught that man should "not commit adultery;" yet David, Solomon, and others, were guilty of its violation. The customs and laws of the land might have tolerated the practice, and their minds being swayed by these, as many are at the present day, God's law remained to them, at least in part, a dead letter. The same is the case in regard to the taking of human life, slavery, idolatry, intemperance, and other evils; although God has said, "Thou shalt not kill," yet the majority of the professors of christianity break this command in theory, if not in practice, without the least scruple. Custom, supposed necessities, worldly policies and expediencies, so captivate their minds, that the teachings of Christ are deemed unsafe to follow, relating to peace; and many are ready to adopt without hesitation, whatever may be the prevailing opinion of those around them.

The use of musical instruments has occasioned the expense of much money and time. We doubt not that the interest of what some societies expend in this way would amount to more than they contribute for all objects of charity abroad. And the young are educated to what is worse than idleness,—expensive amusement. Is it right thus to squander our Lord's goods, when a perishing world is pleading with us to lend assistance to their rescue from temporal and eternal death? Such amusements are not the offspring of a pure, undefiled religion. We believe that every sober and pious mind, uncontrolled by custom, would never hesitate to regard both dancing and playing as equally inconsistent, claiming their disapprobation, and would class them among the vain and foolish pleasures of a vain world. A prayer meeting would be craved by the devout christian, and attended with a decided preference to a social party with instrumental performances or dancing. If a person attends these, he is not truly devoted to God; he is devoted in some degree, at least, to fashion and vanity; for, in such amusements, the gay and vicious delight, as in Job 21: 12. "They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ," and we ask, where is the wicked and profligate youth, devoted to fashion and vice, who does not cheer up and exhibit in his countenance a fresh glow of approbation and delight to hear the sound of the viol, or any other musical instrument? But does it fit him for true happiness in the dying hour?

Is it reasonable to suppose the pleasures of the wicked compatible with christianity? Is it likely that those woes would have been pronounced if they were? We find proof from the New Testament, or at least strongly implied, that musical instruments were not to be used in the worship of God. "Neither is worshiped with men's hands." Acts 17: 25. Is it not true that persons employ their hands on instruments in producing sound, and that in this way they profess to worship God? What was the rule of worship recorded in 1 Cor. 14: 29? "When ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath an interpretation," —hath an instrument? O no, not quite so much; yet the people now add this in practice, or rather, make it one of the most prominent features of their professed worship, to the exclusion of other scriptural rules. But why is such a departure from the apostolic rule necessary? Was not christianity as successful on the day of Pentecost, when three thousand were pricked in the heart, as it is now? But we are far from contending that this practice is all the obstacle to success; yet we believe it one among the many conformities to the world which are forbidden to christians. And, indeed, when revivals of pure religion now occur, the most spiritual individuals are inclined to say, come, let us all sing together.

It is said in 1 Cor. 14: 15, "I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also." Paul does not say he will play with the spirit and understanding.—"Singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord."—Eph. 5: 19. Again, in Col. 3: 16, "Singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." No instrument of man's invention is spoken of as concerned in the affair; it does not say singing and playing with melody on instruments. And, surely, every christian is bound by scriptural authority to discard all such conformities to the world. I would ask, is it conforming to Christ to use such things? Did he set the example? Ask the departing saint if any of these "delights of the sons of men" afford him consolation; if they do he must leave them all behind, and have a more "enduring substance," or meet a woful failure.

AUTUMN MUSINGS.

The falling leaf seems particularly friendly to reflective meditation. Perhaps no season of the year has power to present to our mind simultaneously the past, present, and future, and impress our own frailty, like the golden and frosty Autumn. As we stretch our eyes far as the visual line which girts us round, the forests tempt us to believe Flora is exercising her most luxuriant taste and skill; and for the moment we are entranced.

Withdrawing the distant gaze, we look admiringly upon our lordly village maples, whose verdant clothing has protected and cheered us through the scorchings of midsummer, and their deep, beautiful blushes are evidence unmistakable that icy frost has kissed them again and again; but they are not yet disrobed, but retain most of their gorgeous apparel; but a few more like greetings, and these beauties perish.

What feature in nature so calculated to remind man of his mortality! Drop, drop, one by one, so silent and gentle, and withal so common, that but little heed is paid; occasionally a fiercer blast, and a large train are suddenly laid in the dust. Is it not thus with our friends? As one by one they droop and die, little is thought of it. A fearful epidemic, or raging war, as it lays its thousands in the dust at once, may fix longer our attention; yet not long will men pause from their giddy chase after gain.

This lesson of our frailty should impress me that soon (unless our Savior comes) like the grass and leaves will my strength and grace be gone. I may be swept away by the next breath of time, like that fluttering leaf, and then all I have gathered around me to enrich and beautify, no longer serves me; and unless I have a treasure laid up where the change of season can never affect it, I have lived in vain. Yes, worse than in vain.

This decadence of vegetable matter was a comparison befitting both prophets and apostles. If we turn our attention to the man whose lips were prepared by an angel to utter burning eloquence, we hear him exclaim thus: "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field." Then listen to the patient man of Uz, and he corroborates the same: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also like a shadow, and continueth not." Peter and James fully accord with this language.

Again, as the pinching frosts are multiplied, and one garment after another is necessarily added, how strongly we are reminded of the poor who have but few, if indeed any to add; but, pinched and shivering, they look with dread at the approach of "cruel winter." As we see our barns and cellars filling, can we forbear breathing out a fervent petition for those who, with all their judicious frugality, have only been able just to meet the demands of nature? They possess no fields of grain and fruit to gather. Dire disease has robbed them of the use of their limbs, or for ever closed their visual organs, or may be has laid the father and husband in the cold ground, leaving only one pair of delicate hands to provide for helpless innocents. God makes the widow and orphan a special object of his commiseration; and his children, of course, will possess the same characteristic.

This moan of autumnal winds seems to sigh over man's lost innocence, and no marvel if they sometimes produce melancholy. When we realize that these sighing gales are so many testimonies of the curse, we involuntarily turn to Eden lost; but, thank God, we do not long linger here, but rest in the promise of Eden restored; for, as surely as God lives, it will be done. Then I must be there, where perfumed zephyrs shall take the place of these wailing autumnal winds, and all nature shall wear the fresh beauty of summer, and every sight shall please, and every sound shall cheer.

"Hail, ye sighing sons of sorrow,
View with me th' autumnal gloom;
Learn from thence your fate to-morrow,
Dead, perhaps laid in the tomb!

See all nature fading, dying,
Silent, all things seem to mourn;
Life from vegetation flying,
Brings to mind the mould'ring urn."

HOLINESS.

Bro. Grant:—For three years, I have been a constant reader of the Crisis, and from its many valuable communications have derived much instruction. And I have felt, at times, as though it might be my duty, through this medium, to give my humble testimony in favor of Jesus. But, knowing my inability to write for the public eye, the testimony has been withheld. I have at length decided to transmit the following, which you may dispose of as you think proper.

Holiness. There is music in the sound. And when it falls upon my ear, it thrills through my whole soul. To me the subject of holiness is one of deep, all-absorbing interest. And, although unworthy, I feel that it would be a privilege to join the band of witnesses, whose testimony is, that "the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin," and that "he is able also to save them to the uttermost." Glory to God for such a salvation as this. And O, how simple are its conditions. Faith in the willingness and power of Jesus thus to save, springing out of entire consecration to God. Never shall I forget the hour, when, after deep distress on account of my unlikeness to God, and want of conformity to his will, I knew, by happy experience, that Jesus could "save . . . to the uttermost."

The campmeeting at Alton Bay was in progress at the time, and, though I had for years prayed and besought the Lord with tears to sanctify me, yet I sensibly felt that I was not prepared to labor for the Lord as I then was. Thursday morning, I listened to your discourse upon sanctification. And O, how plainly I was shown the way. I at once decided to start in the way which I now saw so clear. Almost as soon as I came to this decision, the powers of darkness were combined against me, to drive me, if possible, from the position I had taken. But they were unavailing, for I was determined, "live or die," I would be the Lord's. I then lost sight of every other object; my eye was fixed on Jesus; and, while steadfastly looking to him, I began to feel the virtue of his blood; my burden rolled off, and love, joy, and gratitude, in a full tide flowed into my soul. I knew the work was accomplished, that I was saved even "to the uttermost." I could adopt the language of the Psalmist, "How sweet are thy words unto my taste; yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth."

I still feel that the sacrifice is bound to the altar that sanctifieth the gift. As I continue to press on, the light beams with increasing brightness on my pathway. But I find it is only when the sacrifice is complete, when all is upon the hallowed altar, that this faith can be exercised. There cannot be perfect faith where there is not perfect submission. O, I love very much to be the Lord's, to offer my little all upon the altar that sanctifieth the gift. I love with implicit confidence to repose on the bosom of Jesus; on him cast all my cares and burdens, knowing that in him I have a present friend and helper, and that "he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him." And I love, too, to feel that I shall soon behold him arrayed in glory and light from above. I can truly say with the poet,—

"Come and reign; come and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne;
And O, it fills my heart with joy
To know we're almost home."

Your sister waiting for Jesus, and seeking "by patient continuance in well doing, . . . for glory and honor and immortality," expecting, as my reward, eternal life,

☞ It is a poor relief from sorrow to fly to the distractions of the world; as well might a lost and wearied bird, suspended over the abyss of the tempestuous ocean, seek a resting place on its heaving waves, as the child of trouble seeks a place of repose amid the bustling cares and intoxicating pleasures of earth and time.

TO ADVENT PREACHERS.

Yes, "Advent." I never loved the word as I do now. I used to disown it, but since other people shut out the truth concerning the speedy coming of the Lord, and ridicule those that wait for his appearing (with a few precious exceptions), I have come to this: when any one says "Adventist," I boldly own the name, Second Adventist, and first, too, if they wish.

With the help of good father Rockwell, we commenced meetings in our house; and with five or six saints and the spiritual presence of the Master we have had rich feasts together. At the beginning, one old soldier, who had sort of laid down his armor, roused up, and is again working for the Captain of our salvation. This Bro. and a Methodist class leader have engaged the Town Hall to hold Advent meetings in. Understand, they are Advent meetings. Other denominations have tall steeples to preach under. We would unite with them if they could bear the light shining in our midst. The class leader mentioned knows little about the doctrines we believe, but is dissatisfied with the lack of spirituality among professing christians.

Now, brethren and sisters, whom the Lord has called into the "highways and hedges," will you remember the little band here? Will you not come and preach to us? We cannot promise you large congregations. Various things—prophecy among them, cause people to shun us.

There are some who profess to be looking for the Lord, who stand aloof, letting us work out our own difficulties. We have needed their help in our weakness; in our stronger hours they can be spared to others. The brethren wish me to invite Adventists living in adjoining towns to come and help us now and then. Prayer meetings at our house Tuesday and Friday evenings.

Supposing we "can't get out more than a baker's dozen," as said one man professing to be looking for the Lord. God and his truth are on our side, and how great a privilege for us to be called among those to whom the Lord reveals his doings. If we rightly appreciate this honor, we shall not need much urging to make us meet and "exhort one another, . . . as we see the day approaching."

"O," said he, "in days past I have paid out a good deal of money, but it amounted to nothing." So Noah labored and preached for a hundred and twenty years, building an ark meanwhile, and it didn't amount to much—only eight persons were saved, nobody but his own family. Every one else perished. God grant us SUCH a salvation. It would repay for being unpopular here.

Any one coming to Westfield can find us by inquiring for Stimpson's piano shop. We live first house south of that. Come when God sends; here abide his time, do his will, and have his reward. Your Sister looking for the Lord, MARIA MATHEWS WEAVER.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

WHAT STATE?

It often happens that we receive appointments from preachers, with no state given. Inasmuch as there are the same towns in several different states, we think it would always be well to give the state. We might receive an appointment, for instance, for Bristol. We cannot tell whether it is Bristol in R. I., Ct., N. H., or some other state. Will our preaching Brn. please remember to give the state?

FAMILY HARMONY.—Many who were at the Wilbraham and Alton Bay campmeetings, will recollect those seventeen excellent rules for the regulation of families, which were read from the preacher's stand. A copy ought to be in every family, and most carefully observed. Sr. Emeline T. Hobbs, of Cambridgeport, Mass., has sent us one hundred copies, to be sold for the benefit of the campmeeting debt. Price 5 cts. each. Who will take them?

SCATTER TRACTS.

During the past few years, our brethren and sisters have done nobly in scattering tracts, and great good has resulted from their efforts. Many have become deeply interested in the truth by this means. This should encourage us to do more the coming year. Some have already made an earnest beginning, but let us all do something. There is a real Macedonian cry for help. As there is but little time left to labor for the salvation of our fellowmen, let us enter into the vineyard with more energy than ever. Many stand ready to scatter the light by means of tracts, who cannot pay for them themselves. Shall they be supplied? Investments in this bank receive large dividends—a hundred fold—ten thousand per cent. Who will take some stock? Now is the time. The field is all ready, and the sowers are waiting for the precious seed. Send us the means, that they may sow for an abundant harvest.

Read the following:—

"MAY I BEG YOU, PLEASE, SIR?" "Would you like to know how I became converted?" said a good old man to his minister.

"Yes, do tell me all about it," replied the preacher.

"I was walking out one day, and I met a boy; the little fellow lingered in passing me, and at length stopped. 'May I beg you, please, sir,' said he to me, 'to take a tract? and will you please read it, sir?' Tracts! I hated tracts, and things of that sort, at all times; but that 'May I beg you, please, sir?' moved me. I took the tract, and thanked the little boy, and told him that I would read it; and I did read it, too,; and that reading saved my soul."

You can do good, too. Will you try?—Der Kinderfreund.

The joys of one saved soul will pay for all the efforts ever made to scatter tracts; but, no doubt, thousands will be saved by this means. If so, of course Satan will try to prevent us from doing this work by telling us we have nothing to spare; or that it will not do any good, or that others will give enough without our aid. We say again, let us all do what we can. The work is great, and there is abundance of room for all to lead a helping hand. "Will you try?"

"GIVEN INTO HIS HAND."

When Daniel is speaking of the "little horn" as recorded in Dan. 7: 25, he says he "shall think to change times and laws; and they [the "times and laws"] shall be given into his hands, until a time and times and the dividing of time." The Bishop's Bible reads: "They shall be given under his power, until a time, two times, and half a time." This giving of the "times and laws" "into his hand" cannot mean the saints; neither do we see that it marks the time when "the abomination that maketh desolate" was "set up." The abomination might have been set up at a much earlier period, and the "times and laws" not been given into the hands of the harlot woman till many years afterwards. Facts show that this was the case.

The question arises, Who gave the "times and laws" into the hands of this ecclesiastical power? It must be some one who had previously exercised this power, or else he could not give it to another. From the time of the first marriage of the church and state, in the Greek kingdom, in the early part of the sixth century, till A. D. 607, the husband of the woman, by which we mean the imperial, or dragonic power, was dictator in relation to "times and laws," in political and ecclesiastical matters. During the seventy-five years preceding 607, the Catholic emperors persecuted the saints, and decided who should fill the Bishop's or Pope's chair; but when we arrive at A. D. 607, as shown in another article (see the one headed, "Decree of Phocas,") there is a very important change, as Mr. Bower says, then was "the papal supremacy FIRST introduced." This was accomplished by making the Bishop of Rome "UNIVERSAL BISHOP," and by the declaration of the dragon "that the WHOLE WORLD should be his diocese." That act of the dragonic power that had been persecuting the saints for some seventy-five years before, gave the leopard beast "his power, and his seat, and great authority." We understand the leopard beast, with its mouth speaking great things and blasphemies" (Rev. 13: 5,) represents the same as Daniel's "little horn" that spake "great words against the Most High," which was to have the "times and laws" in his hands for "a time, two times, and half a time" (See Bishop's Bible,) or 1260 years, beginning, as we believe, A. D. 607, by the decree of Phocas.

Of the leopard beast in Rev. 13: 5, 6, it is said, "and POWER was given unto him to continue forty and two months; and he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God." It is said of him, "power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations."—Rev. 13: 7. This was true from the decree of Phocas; but up to that time, the power had been in the hands of the dragon, or the emperors, instead of the hands of the woman. At this time she takes her seat on the beast, and directs him, instead of having him direct her.

It will be observed that the same period of time is allotted to the leopard beast of Revelation, as to the "little horn" of Daniel. In Daniel the time is equal to 1260 years, and in Revelation it is "forty and two months," which, in symbolic time, make 1260 years. We understand that the "little horn" "and the beast . . . like unto a leopard," represent the Roman power from the time it was changed from the state to the church in A. D. 607. If this be true, the church power at Rome must end next year. This being true, we must be very near the second coming of Christ.

"STEERING FOR THE ROCKS."

"Sign's there's no mistaking" proclaim that the American government is passing rapidly to a very critical condition. Men who are best prepared to judge see abundant reason for alarm; but they see no way to avert the coming storm. The perils of the last days are multiplying in church and state in all directions, on both continents; and yet some would-be watchmen still cry "peace and safety," and tell the people that "a good time is coming." They are much like the false prophet who told the Jews if they would gather at a certain place they would not be harmed, at the time when Titus was about to burn their city and destroy the people.

In a late number of the Nation, is an editorial article, headed "Steering for the rocks," in which it is shown that this nation has arrived at an hour of danger, as "is obvious to every person who has had opportunities of knowing what is going on behind the scene of the political theatre."

INFORMATION WANTED.

BRO. GRANT:—Can you tell me how the Justinian edict could have been made under Pope John II. in 532, when that Ecclesiastic was not elected Pope until Dec. 31st of that year, according to Bower's History of the Popes? C. GOODRICH.

We do not think that the "edict" of Justinian was made in A. D. 532, but in 533. We think Mr. Bower, in his noted history of the Popes, shows very plainly that the "edict" was in 533.

It is true, according to Mr. Bower, who is the highest authority in this case, that the "edict" of Justinian was recorded as an event under Pope John II., who did not enter his office till Dec. 31st, 532.

On page 333, of "the history of the Popes," Mr. Bowers gives the closing events of A. D. 532. When speaking of the events connected with the election of Pope John II., he says, "The contest lasted from the 17th of October to the 31st of December [532] when John, surnamed Mercurius, was preferred in the end to all his competitors, merely in consideration of his extraordinary merit." Hence there was but a part of one day in A. D. 532 that could be reckoned in the popedom of John.

We now turn the leaf to page 334 of Mr. Bower's history of the Popes, and on this page, when speaking of the events which took place during the popedom of John II., we find the noted "edict" of Justinian, which reads as follows:

"While the Arian king was striving, by the most just and equitable laws, to clear the church from all simony in the west, the catholic emperor was employing the most unjust and unchristian means of clearing her from all heresies in the east, that of persecution, and the most cruel persecution any christian emperor had yet set on foot, or countenanced. For by an edict which he issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or Christians, such as did not, in the term of three months, embrace and profess the catholic faith, were declared infamous, and, as such, excluded from all employments, both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving any thing by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. These were convincing arguments of the truth of the catholic faith; but many, however, withstood them; and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their habitations with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Others betook themselves to flight, carrying with them what they could conceal, for their support and maintenance; but they were plundered of the little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the catholic peasants, or the soldiery who guarded the passes. The Motanists in Phrygia, retiring with all their wealth to their churches, set them on fire, and consumed in the flames themselves, their wealth, and their churches. The Jews, who were very numerous in Samaria, openly revolted; and, ranging themselves under the banner of one Julian, a noted robber, whom they chose for their king and their leader, engaged the imperial troops in the field; but, after a most obstinate and bloody dispute, were utterly defeated, with the loss, if Procopius is to be credited, of one hundred thousand men."

After speaking, on page 334, of the decree and the horrid results that followed, which must have taken up most of the year A. D. 533, Mr. Bower says, on p. 535, "The following year 533, was revived with great warmth in the east, the dispute about the expression, "one of the Trinity suffered in the flesh." We think the events recorded show clearly that this date contains a typographical error, and that it should read 534, instead of 533; and what follows confirms this conclusion. For on the next page, 536, without showing any change of date, he says, "the same year, 534, the Pope received letters from Caesarius of Arles, and some other bishops in Gaul." At the close of this page when speaking of the death of Pope John II., he says, "his death . . . happened on the 27th of May of the following year, 536, after he had sat two years, four months, and twenty-six days."

WAR CLOUDS.

There are some strong indications that war will again break out in Europe upon a scale more extensive than any thing witnessed for many years. It is about time for the "Russian bear" to make a move. She has been very quiet since the Crimean war, but has not been idle. She is well prepared for great things. She has her eye upon the East, and has been moving her forces in that direction for some time, evidently preparing for some important step, when the hour arrives.

We clip the following from the Boston Journal:—

"According to the Paris correspondence of the London Times, the Emperor of Russia will soon announce, in a diplomatic circular from St. Petersburg Foreign Office, his position and policy toward Europe in its state of transition. It is intimated that this paper, plain in its language and very decided in tone, will declare that 'there is no reason why Russia should be bound by the Treaty of Paris of 1856; that the Black Sea must be free to her again, and that the injurious obligations imposed on her by a coalition of the Western Powers are no longer binding.' The writer expresses the opinion that the Eastern question will be re-opened, and a war result therefrom, France and Prussia coming out in alliance against Russia."

TEMPORAL POWER OF THE POPE.

The temporal power of the Pope is not yet ended, but none see any chance for its continuing but a short time longer. When his temporal power does end, he will have no more power than has Jeff. Davis in the Congress of the United States. When it is ended, there will be no room left for doubt in the matter. "Power was given unto him [the leopard beast, Rev. 13: 5] to continue forty and two months." Then, when the "forty and two months" are expired, "they [not the Lord by his personal presence] shall take away his [the little horn, or leopard beast] dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end."—Dan. 7: 26.

So long as the Jews held the control of Jerusalem, their capital, they had temporal power; but that was taken by the Romans, and the Jews dispersed and taken captive; then their temporal power was gone. So now; so long as the "little horn" holds sway at Rome, the capital of the Papal power, it cannot be said that the temporal power is taken away. Consequently, the 1260 years, during which the "times and laws" of "power" were "given into his hands," are not ended; but there is no prospect that it will continue more than twelve months longer.

Recently, the Catholics in Montreal, C. E., held a "great meeting" for the purpose of raising some money, if possible, to "aid the Pope in his distressing situation. The Bishop of Montreal said he had been told recently, by those in Rome, 'who govern in the name of the Holy Father,' that they had nothing more to expect from the princes of the earth." Says the New York Sun, of Sept. 21st:—

"It is strange to reflect that the first intimation that the French troops would have to leave Rome, was given to the Pope in the year 1862, when the London Exhibition was opened. Should his holiness have to leave in 1867, his departure from Italy would seem to mark the era of another Exhibition. It cannot be doubted, however, that should the French troops leave Rome, the Pontifical Father will have to leave also. The Capitol is now required by the pressure of events, to be the Capital of United Italy, and Victor Emanuel and Pope Pius could never share the sceptre."

ASTEROIDS.—The asteroids, sometimes called planetoids, are some heavenly bodies between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter, and supposed to be fragments of a planet that was broken in pieces. The first asteroid was discovered in 1801, and the last one on the 6th of Aug. 1866. In all, there have been eighty-eight discovered—all but four of them, since 1844.

SCATTER THE TRACTS.—You can not tell how much good they may do. A brother writes from Minnesota:—"I send you $2.00 for a new subscriber. . . . He has just got his eyes opened by reading our tracts, and now he wants the paper."

For the World's Crisis.

FROM THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—

After more than two months' sickness, and prostration of both body and mind, I am again, through the mercy and goodness of God, able to communicate to you the dealings of the Lord with us, and to what extent he has prospered the mission which you have here thus far sustained.

At the close of our first term of school, ending June the 29th, I sent to the Board a full report of what we had been enabled to do, and the success that had attended our labors here to that time. It was my intention then to communicate also to you through the Crisis, and Voice of the West, the prosperity of the mission, together with many interesting incidents connected with our work here among this cast-off people; but immediate sickness prevented, and thus a silence in relation to our labors here has existed for nearly three months. This has tended to lessen the interest in the mission, leading many, doubtless, to conclude the missionaries were inactive and that little was being done. While we were in health, and up to the first of July, no mission established here was more prosperous, or met with better success than ours, for the time it had been in operation. Our day school was large, too large for the number of teachers, and the work required and performed was the cause of our exhaustion and sickness.

We began our school on the 11th of April, with eighteen scholars; and at the end of the eleven weeks ending June 29th, one hundred and ninety-five pupils, of nearly all ages, from five years old to sixty, had been admitted. Not all of these had attended at once, but our house, which would seat a hundred and thirty, was ever filled. Our night school for adults was also large. This was a most interesting school. Never have I witnessed among this people such an earnest desire to learn, and rapid progress, as was here made. Reading, spelling, arithmetic and writing were taught. Many of these men and women were heads of families, and professing christians, and were trying to learn to read, so as to be able to know themselves what the word of God taught. Many of them would often say, "If I can only get to read as you do the Bible, I shall be satisfied." Every moment in this school was improved, and but few seemed satisfied with the progress they were making, so anxious were they to reach the desired point. Hard as they all worked through the long hot day, they would come here and study until half-past ten, and often until eleven o'clock at night, without manifesting any weariness. It was often the latter hour before we got through with hearing the classes. Though often weary ourselves to sinking, we were animated constantly with this intense interest and earnest desire to learn on the part of the scholars, both of the day and night school.

But as interesting and promising for good as these were, our Sabbath school surpassed in interest and the accomplishment of good both the other schools. There was no Sabbath, when the weather and traveling were favorable, but our house was crowded with old and young, anxious to engage in the exercises and learn whatever we might introduce into the school. Our Bible class, embracing the whole school, was the most interesting of anything I ever witnessed. Those who could read any, and many who could not, had Testaments, all wanting to take a part in the exercises. My method was this: having pointed out to each where we were to begin to read, I would commence and pronounce the first word, the school pronouncing it in concert after me; then the next word, and so on to the end of the lesson. In this way each could keep the place and see what each word was called. In this way also they would both learn to read and gain a knowledge of the word of God. After we had read the lesson in this manner, then came questions by both teachers and scholars, the object being to bring out the meaning of the scripture, and impress it upon the mind. There seemed to be a perfect delight on the part of the school in this exercise. Nothing could please them more than this way of reading. They seemed to feel as if they were truly in the act of reading the Bible.

In the other exercises of the school there was also a great interest. The singing, the recitations of Scripture, and verses, were engaged in with earnestness and zeal. Another exercise introduced was to have those who could read go forward to the desk and read to the school a psalm or part of a chapter. Some two or three were appointed each Sabbath to read the next; and a selection of Scripture made, which they could study during the week, and be better prepared to read it before the school. This exercise delighted all, and each wanted to engage in it at once, none being willing to wait for the rest. They would come to me and say, "Can't I read next Sunday? Please let me read next Sabbath."

I shall ever look back upon these schools with pleasure and satisfaction; yet with the regret that they could not have been continued until the seed that was sown should have sprung up, been cultivated, and ripened. Surely, we were not sowing in vain, provided the seed could have been guarded and the ground cultivated after the blade had appeared. Nor now will it all be lost. "Some fell upon good ground" and brought forth a fold. Not all that the sower sowed was lost.

These schools have been our introduction to this people and their hearts. With these even it has been hard to gain their confidence. Without them, I know not how we could. They are a wary people, and have little confidence in white men from north or south. Although in consequence of sickness the schools have not been recommenced, yet the Sabbath meetings have never been discontinued; the house having been held and used for the worship of God ever since it was secured; and the result is, the blessing of God by the outpouring of his holy Spirit in the reviving of christians, and the conversion of sinners. Although, during two months, I was unable to be present at the meetings but a few times, they were conducted by a faithful minister of Christ, a true servant of God, although but partially enlightened upon the Scriptures as we understand them. He however preaches the coming of the Lord at hand, and is gradually getting hold of our views and the great truths of the gospel. At another time, I shall speak of him particularly, and give his history. I thank God for this brother's help in this the most trying hour of my life. He has been most faithful and successful in bringing the people together from Sabbath to Sabbath, and in keeping up an interest in the mission and us. He has a wide influence over the people, and he exerts it in favor of our work here.

During my sickness, I felt that my work might be done here; but about four weeks ago, when I began to recover, it seemed to me there was something more for me to do,—a special work; and as I gained strength, I began to speak to the people wherever I found them, in public and in private, warning them of the judgment at hand. I did this without argument, simply quoting the word of God in relation to that day, and telling them it was near, at the doors. I told Bro. Lucas this was the message we must preach; and he remarked that "whenever this was preached the Spirit accompanied the word."

Our meetings began to grow more interesting. The congregation increased. Our early Sabbath morning prayer meeting, which during my sickness had ceased, was again commenced, and was better attended than before. Many who had thought they could not get out so early came and were blessed. An earnest prayer that the Holy Spirit might begin a work of grace here among both professing christians and sinners was begotten, and we felt that the prayer would be answered. In all our meetings a deep solemnity prevailed, and signs of an outpouring of the Spirit were seen on every hand. At the first invitation to come forward for prayers, more than thirty came and bowed at the altar. Since then, the number has more than doubled. At every meeting an invitation is given, and one half of the seats in the house are filled with anxious seekers. Some have found peace in the forgiveness of their sins, and are rejoicing in the love of Christ. Some are almost in despair, and cry aloud for mercy. There is much excitement, as there always is here at the South, both among whites and blacks, in a time of revival. But there is genuine repentance among these who are now here saying, "Pray for us." This is perceptible, not only in our meetings, but in the streets and wherever you meet this people here. The swearing, quarreling, and riotous conduct, which a little while since was heard and seen in the streets and at their dwellings, is now hushed and has disappeared. All is quiet now through the night, and peace and safety reign. The voice of prayer and praise is now heard in many places, where oaths and blasphemy a short time since were repeated. Nearly all the dancing houses and places of amusement for the blacks are closed for want of patronage. This is the case all through the city, to a great extent. There is a general awakening among this people throughout the entire city. God is gathering in his elect against the burning day.

Our meetings every other night during the week, and four upon the Sabbath, are well attended, and often crowded. The interest is still unabated, and there is a good prospect of its still going on and many sharing in the saving grace of God. The preaching of the judgment at hand has a good effect upon many of this people. Although there are but few who can understand the prophetic argument, or follow you through history and the fulfillment of the Scriptures; yet, the "signs" of the Lord's coming can be seen and are received by many; and these seem sufficient to convince them of the nearness of the day. I have found those who seemed to be impressed, without ever hearing any preaching upon the subject, that the day of the Lord was near. If this people were educated sufficiently to read and weigh the evidences which we have, and might present to them, many of them would embrace the truth as we hold it, and soon the gospel of the kingdom would spread here all over the South. O that they could read God's word. I pity them when I see how ignorant they are of it, and how they grope in darkness for want of its light, believing and repeating for scripture what the Bible never contained. O slavery! cursed be thou, source of all this darkness and ignorance. Thou art the enemy of God and his Son; the instrument of Satan in carrying down to death and night thousands here who might have lived in light and glory eternally. Thou art not yet dead, but thy time is short. The year of jubilee is at hand, and thy fetters shall soon fall and be consumed by the fires of that day; and thou and thy abettors shall perish forever. Amen. Even so let it be.

☞ A Paris journal declares that there is a possibility of the abdication of the Emperor of Austria in favor of his son, six years old. In that case Maximilian, who has been expected by his brother, Francis Joseph, for the last six months, would immediately leave Mexico, and be appointed Regent of the Austrian Empire.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER ELEVEN.

BRO. GRANT:—As I wrote you in my last letter, I went in company with Bro. Hanbart, the 27th of August, to the valley of St. Imier. Stopping first at Renan, six hours walk from Chaux de Fonds, to the northwest, we addressed the mayor of the town, asking permission to lecture there, which was kindly granted, provided we could find a room ourselves for the purpose. This being impossible, Bro. Hanbart went from house to house, distributing tracts that we have been able to publish, while I went to Sonvilliers and St. Imier, two villages situated near together, an hour's walk further up the valley.

The principal occupation of the people in that region, is the manufacture of watches and music-boxes, formerly quite remunerative, but owing to the watch manufactories recently established in the United States, where work that is here done by hand is done by machinery, cheaper and more exact than here, that branch of industry suffers much at present. Many of the people find it difficult to get work, and what they obtain they are not so well paid for as formerly, so there is at present much scarcity of money, and the people generally are under the necessity of using much economy.

But I had the happiness of finding some who were seeking after truth, and glad to receive the evidence of the speedy coming of the Lord; and though I was not able in either village to obtain a large room in which to lecture, I trust some good will result from our visit in the little valley of the Lara Bernois.

Aug. 31st, separated from Bro. Hanbart, he going to the West, while I went over the mountain, a six hours' walk, northeast, to Tramelan, Father Hanbart at the same time laboring south of us, in the vicinity of Neuchatel. On arriving at the agreeable village of Tramelan, I called upon Bro. Jules Dietscht, a negociant, to whom I had introduction from Father Hanbart, who received me with christian kindness, and gave me generous hospitality. The same evening I called upon M. Montandon, pastor of the National church (the National being the only one in that valley), who kindly gave me the privilege of speaking to his people in the large schoolhouse of the village, Sunday evening, Sept. 2d, which was not sufficiently large for the congregation, as many stood without. We had much liberty in speaking upon the Two Witnesses of Rev. 11th chapter, showing how the Bible was trodden under foot in France, in the time of Robespierre, and since that time has been so wonderfully elevated, by being circulated throughout the world in one hundred and sixty-two different languages, and of the great good accomplished by the indefatigable zeal of the Swiss missionaries, Messrs. Roussy, Tanner, Vernier, Rochat, Page, Normandeau, Madame Fuller, etc., in circulating the Bible among the dark Romanists in Canada, establishing churches, schools, etc., and at last spoke of the great efforts put forth in America to spread the Bible in all the world, and of the movement there in regard to the preparation for the coming of the Lord. The congregation was very attentive and solemn, and manifested much eagerness to hear more.

The next day a delegation visited the pastor, and asked for the use of the temple for my lectures the evenings of that week, which he refused, giving for reason that he perceived I wished to raise up Advent churches, separate from the National church. He said he had no objection to any one hearing and following me who wished to, but that his conscience would not permit him to give the use of the temple, which he considered an official place, for such a purpose. This, though in some respects disadvantageous to the work there, seemed only to increase the desire of the people to hear, and it gave them an opportunity to manifest it by making the best provision in their power for a place of assembly. I lectured a week in different places of the town, and the Spirit of God accompanied the word with great power. A deep conviction seemed to settle upon the people that these things new to them, which I presented to them, were solemn truths. I trust the Lord at his coming will find many there who will receive him with joy.

Sept. 13th, in company with two dear brethren, I descended the mountain to the village of Courtelery, in the valley of St. Imier. I called upon the pastor, M. Rollier, who received me with truly brotherly kindness, and the same evening I attended with him a prayer meeting at the house of a sister-in-law of our Bro. Vernier (missionary in Canada, where he was drowned in 1854), and had an opportunity to speak to the few in attendance. M. Rollier appointed a meeting for me for the next evening, in the chapel of the college in Cormoret, which belongs to his parish, where we had a good assembly.

I visited considerably among the people, by invitation of the pastor, and attended service with him Sunday, the 16th. The evening of that day, M. Rollier and myself were invited by the pastor of St. Imier to meet in the temple of that place several congregations from different parishes, it being the National Fast day, and he requested me to be prepared to speak to the assembly. But the pastor of Sanvilliers, who was with the pastor of St. Imier on our arrival, had so influenced his mind against me, that he did not even invite me to enter the desk, whereupon M. Rollier refused the invitation repeatedly given him, and on my urging him to accept it, and leave me in the congregation, said, "You are my guest, and I cannot leave you. We were both invited, and I shall not go without you," and he remained with me.

I spent four days at Courtelery, enjoying the hospitality of the pastor, and then returned home to spend a few days, to do necessary writing, and make preparation for our removal to St. Blaise, the latter part of the present week.

During the thirteen months we have spent in Grandson, we have been abundantly blessed of the Lord, and we trust his blessing will go with us to our new place of residence, to the east of Lake Neuchatel. Dear brethren and sisters, pray for us.

Your affectionate brother in Christ,
M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

☞ Formerly Jews were altogether excluded from the interior of Russia. The Emperor has greatly modified the restrictions, in order to facilitate Jewish immigration. The consequence is a considerable influx of Jews into the government of Kief, most of whom devote themselves to agriculture.

TO ADVENT PREACHERS.

Yes, "Advent." I never loved the word as I do now. I used to disown it, but since other people shut out the truth concerning the speedy coming of the Lord, and ridicule those that wait for his appearing (with a few precious exceptions), I have come to this: when any one says "Adventist," I boldly own the name, Second Adventist, and first, too, if they wish.

With the help of good father Rockwell, we commenced meetings in our house; and with five or six saints and the spiritual presence of the Master we have had rich feasts together. At the beginning, one old soldier, who had sort of laid down his armor, roused up, and is again working for the Captain of our salvation. This Bro. and a Methodist class leader have engaged the Town Hall to hold Advent meetings in. Understand, they are Advent meetings. Other denominations have tall steeples to preach under. We would unite with them if they could bear the light shining in our midst. The class leader mentioned knows little about the doctrines we believe, but is dissatisfied with the lack of spirituality among professing christians.

Now, brethren and sisters, whom the Lord has called into the "highways and hedges," will you remember the little band here? Will you not come and preach to us? We cannot promise you large congregations. Various things—prophecy among them, cause people to shun us.

There are some who profess to be looking for the Lord, who stand aloof, letting us work out our own difficulties. We have needed their help in our weakness; in our stronger hours they can be spared to others. The brethren wish me to invite Adventists living in adjoining towns to come and help us now and then. Prayer meetings at our house Tuesday and Friday evenings.

Supposing we "can't get out more than a baker's dozen," as said one man professing to be looking for the Lord. God and his truth are on our side, and how great a privilege for us to be called among those to whom the Lord reveals his doings. If we rightly appreciate this honor, we shall not need much urging to make us meet and "exhort one another, . . . as we see the day approaching."

"O," said he, "in days past I have paid out a good deal of money, but it amounted to nothing." So Noah labored and preached for a hundred and twenty years, building an ark meanwhile, and it didn't amount to much—only eight persons were saved, nobody but his own family. Every one else perished. God grant us SUCH a salvation. It would repay for being unpopular here.

Any one coming to Westfield can find us by inquiring for Stimpson's piano shop. We live first house south of that. Come when God sends; here abide his time, do his will, and have his reward. Your Sister looking for the Lord, MARIA MATHEWS WEAVER.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Oct. 17, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

WHAT STATE?

It often happens that we receive appointments from preachers, with no state given. Inasmuch as there are the same towns in several different states, we think it would always be well to give the state. We might receive an appointment, for instance, for Bristol. We cannot tell whether it is Bristol in R. I., Ct., N. H., or some other state. Will our preaching Brn. please remember to give the state?

FAMILY HARMONY.—Many who were at the Wilbraham and Alton Bay campmeetings, will recollect those seventeen excellent rules for the regulation of families, which were read from the preacher's stand. A copy ought to be in every family, and most carefully observed. Sr. Emeline T. Hobbs, of Cambridgeport, Mass., has sent us one hundred copies, to be sold for the benefit of the campmeeting debt. Price 5 cts. each. Who will take them?

SCATTER TRACTS.

During the past few years, our brethren and sisters have done nobly in scattering tracts, and great good has resulted from their efforts. Many have become deeply interested in the truth by this means. This should encourage us to do more the coming year. Some have already made an earnest beginning, but let us all do something. There is a real Macedonian cry for help. As there is but little time left to labor for the salvation of our fellowmen, let us enter into the vineyard with more energy than ever. Many stand ready to scatter the light by means of tracts, who cannot pay for them themselves. Shall they be supplied? Investments in this bank receive large dividends—a hundred fold—ten thousand per cent. Who will take some stock? Now is the time. The field is all ready, and the sowers are waiting for the precious seed. Send us the means, that they may sow for an abundant harvest.

Read the following:—

"MAY I BEG YOU, PLEASE, SIR?" "Would you like to know how I became converted?" said a good old man to his minister.

"Yes, do tell me all about it," replied the preacher.

"I was walking out one day, and I met a boy; the little fellow lingered in passing me, and at length stopped. 'May I beg you, please, sir,' said he to me, 'to take a tract? and will you please read it, sir?' Tracts! I hated tracts, and things of that sort, at all times; but that 'May I beg you, please, sir?' moved me. I took the tract, and thanked the little boy, and told him that I would read it; and I did read it, too,; and that reading saved my soul."

You can do good, too. Will you try?—Der Kinderfreund.

The joys of one saved soul will pay for all the efforts ever made to scatter tracts; but, no doubt, thousands will be saved by this means. If so, of course Satan will try to prevent us from doing this work by telling us we have nothing to spare; or that it will not do any good, or that others will give enough without our aid. We say again, let us all do what we can. The work is great, and there is abundance of room for all to lead a helping hand. "Will you try?"

"GIVEN INTO HIS HAND."

When Daniel is speaking of the "little horn" as recorded in Dan. 7: 25, he says he "shall think to change times and laws; and they [the "times and laws"] shall be given into his hands, until a time and times and the dividing of time." The Bishop's Bible reads: "They shall be given under his power, until a time, two times, and half a time." This giving of the "times and laws" "into his hand" cannot mean the saints; neither do we see that it marks the time when "the abomination that maketh desolate" was "set up." The abomination might have been set up at a much earlier period, and the "times and laws" not been given into the hands of the harlot woman till many years afterwards. Facts show that this was the case.

The question arises, Who gave the "times and laws" into the hands of this ecclesiastical power? It must be some one who had previously exercised this power, or else he could not give it to another. From the time of the first marriage of the church and state, in the Greek kingdom, in the early part of the sixth century, till A. D. 607, the husband of the woman, by which we mean the imperial, or dragonic power, was dictator in relation to "times and laws," in political and ecclesiastical matters. During the seventy-five years preceding 607, the Catholic emperors persecuted the saints, and decided who should fill the Bishop's or Pope's chair; but when we arrive at A. D. 607, as shown in another article (see the one headed, "Decree of Phocas,") there is a very important change, as Mr. Bower says, then was "the papal supremacy FIRST introduced." This was accomplished by making the Bishop of Rome "UNIVERSAL BISHOP," and by the declaration of the dragon "that the WHOLE WORLD should be his diocese." That act of the dragonic power that had been persecuting the saints for some seventy-five years before, gave the leopard beast "his power, and his seat, and great authority." We understand the leopard beast, with its mouth speaking great things and blasphemies" (Rev. 13: 5,) represents the same as Daniel's "little horn" that spake "great words against the Most High," which was to have the "times and laws" in his hands for "a time, two times, and half a time" (See Bishop's Bible,) or 1260 years, beginning, as we believe, A. D. 607, by the decree of Phocas.

Of the leopard beast in Rev. 13: 5, 6, it is said, "and POWER was given unto him to continue forty and two months; and he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God." It is said of him, "power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations."—Rev. 13: 7. This was true from the decree of Phocas; but up to that time, the power had been in the hands of the dragon, or the emperors, instead of the hands of the woman. At this time she takes her seat on the beast, and directs him, instead of having him direct her.

It will be observed that the same period of time is allotted to the leopard beast of Revelation, as to the "little horn" of Daniel. In Daniel the time is equal to 1260 years, and in Revelation it is "forty and two months," which, in symbolic time, make 1260 years. We understand that the "little horn" "and the beast . . . like unto a leopard," represent the Roman power from the time it was changed from the state to the church in A. D. 607. If this be true, the church power at Rome must end next year. This being true, we must be very near the second coming of Christ.

"STEERING FOR THE ROCKS."

"Sign's there's no mistaking" proclaim that the American government is passing rapidly to a very critical condition. Men who are best prepared to judge see abundant reason for alarm; but they see no way to avert the coming storm. The perils of the last days are multiplying in church and state in all directions, on both continents; and yet some would-be watchmen still cry "peace and safety," and tell the people that "a good time is coming." They are much like the false prophet who told the Jews if they would gather at a certain place they would not be harmed, at the time when Titus was about to burn their city and destroy the people.

In a late number of the Nation, is an editorial article, headed "Steering for the rocks," in which it is shown that this nation has arrived at an hour of danger, as "is obvious to every person who has had opportunities of knowing what is going on behind the scene of the political theatre."

INFORMATION WANTED.

BRO. GRANT:—Can you tell me how the Justinian edict could have been made under Pope John II. in 532, when that Ecclesiastic was not elected Pope until Dec. 31st of that year, according to Bower's History of the Popes? C. GOODRICH.

We do not think that the "edict" of Justinian was made in A. D. 532, but in 533. We think Mr. Bower, in his noted history of the Popes, shows very plainly that the "edict" was in 533.

It is true, according to Mr. Bower, who is the highest authority in this case, that the "edict" of Justinian was recorded as an event under Pope John II., who did not enter his office till Dec. 31st, 532.

On page 333, of "the history of the Popes," Mr. Bowers gives the closing events of A. D. 532. When speaking of the events connected with the election of Pope John II., he says, "The contest lasted from the 17th of October to the 31st of December [532] when John, surnamed Mercurius, was preferred in the end to all his competitors, merely in consideration of his extraordinary merit." Hence there was but a part of one day in A. D. 532 that could be reckoned in the popedom of John.

We now turn the leaf to page 334 of Mr. Bower's history of the Popes, and on this page, when speaking of the events which took place during the popedom of John II., we find the noted "edict" of Justinian, which reads as follows:

"While the Arian king was striving, by the most just and equitable laws, to clear the church from all simony in the west, the catholic emperor was employing the most unjust and unchristian means of clearing her from all heresies in the east, that of persecution, and the most cruel persecution any christian emperor had yet set on foot, or countenanced. For by an edict which he issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or Christians, such as did not, in the term of three months, embrace and profess the catholic faith, were declared infamous, and, as such, excluded from all employments, both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving any thing by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. These were convincing arguments of the truth of the catholic faith; but many, however, withstood them; and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their habitations with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Others betook themselves to flight, carrying with them what they could conceal, for their support and maintenance; but they were plundered of the little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the catholic peasants, or the soldiery who guarded the passes. The Motanists in Phrygia, retiring with all their wealth to their churches, set them on fire, and consumed in the flames themselves, their wealth, and their churches. The Jews, who were very numerous in Samaria, openly revolted; and, ranging themselves under the banner of one Julian, a noted robber, whom they chose for their king and their leader, engaged the imperial troops in the field; but, after a most obstinate and bloody dispute, were utterly defeated, with the loss, if Procopius is to be credited, of one hundred thousand men."

After speaking, on page 334, of the decree and the horrid results that followed, which must have taken up most of the year A. D. 533, Mr. Bower says, on p. 535, "The following year 533, was revived with great warmth in the east, the dispute about the expression, "one of the Trinity suffered in the flesh." We think the events recorded show clearly that this date contains a typographical error, and that it should read 534, instead of 533; and what follows confirms this conclusion. For on the next page, 536, without showing any change of date, he says, "the same year, 534, the Pope received letters from Cæsarius of Arles, and some other bishops in Gaul." At the close of this page when speaking of the death of Pope John II., he says, "his death . . . happened on the 27th of May of the following year, 535, after he had sat two years, four months, and twenty-six days."

WAR CLOUDS.

There are some strong indications that war will again break out in Europe upon a scale more extensive than any thing witnessed for many years. It is about time for the "Russian bear" to make a move. She has been very quiet since the Crimean war, but has not been idle. She is well prepared for great things. She has her eye upon the East, and has been moving her forces in that direction for some time, evidently preparing for some important step, when the hour arrives.

We clip the following from the Boston Journal:—

"According to the Paris correspondence of the London Times, the Emperor of Russia will soon announce, in a diplomatic circular from St. Petersburg Foreign Office, his position and policy toward Europe in its state of transition. It is intimated that this paper, plain in its language and very decided in tone, will declare that 'there is no reason why Russia should be bound by the Treaty of Paris of 1856; that the Black Sea must be free to her again, and that the injurious obligations imposed on her by a coalition of the Western Powers are no longer binding.' The writer expresses the opinion that the Eastern question will be re-opened, and a war result therefrom, France and Prussia coming out in alliance against Russia."

TEMPORAL POWER OF THE POPE.

The temporal power of the Pope is not yet ended, but none see any chance for its continuing but a short time longer. When his temporal power does end, he will have no more power than has Jeff. Davis in the Congress of the United States. When it is ended, there will be no room left for doubt in the matter. "Power was given unto him [the leopard beast, Rev. 13: 5] to continue forty and two months." Then, when the "forty and two months" are expired, "they [not the Lord by his personal presence] shall take away his [the little horn, or leopard beast] dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end."—Dan. 7: 26.

So long as the Jews held the control of Jerusalem, their capital, they had temporal power; but that was taken by the Romans, and the Jews dispersed and taken captive; then their temporal power was gone. So now; so long as the "little horn" holds sway at Rome, the capital of the Papal power, it cannot be said that the temporal power is taken away. Consequently, the 1260 years, during which the "times and laws" of "power" were "given into his hands," are not ended; but there is no prospect that it will continue more than twelve months longer.

Recently, the Catholics in Montreal, C. E., held a "great meeting" for the purpose of raising some money, if possible, to "aid the Pope in his distressing situation. The Bishop of Montreal said he had been told recently, by those in Rome, 'who govern in the name of the Holy Father,' that they had nothing more to expect from the princes of the earth." Says the New York Sun, of Sept. 21st:—

"It is strange to reflect that the first intimation that the French troops would have to leave Rome, was given to the Pope in the year 1862, when the London Exhibition was opened. Should his holiness have to leave in 1867, his departure from Italy would seem to mark the era of another Exhibition. It cannot be doubted, however, that should the French troops leave Rome, the Pontifical Father will have to leave also. The Capitol is now required by the pressure of events, to be the Capital of United Italy, and Victor Emanuel and Pope Pius could never share the sceptre."

ASTEROIDS.—The asteroids, sometimes called planetoids, are some heavenly bodies between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter, and supposed to be fragments of a planet that was broken in pieces. The first asteroid was discovered in 1801, and the last one on the 6th of Aug. 1866. In all, there have been eighty-eight discovered—all but four of them, since 1844.

SCATTER THE TRACTS.—You can not tell how much good they may do. A brother writes from Minnesota:—"I send you $2.00 for a new subscriber. . . . He has just got his eyes opened by reading our tracts, and now he wants the paper."

For the World's Crisis.

FROM THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—

After more than two months' sickness, and prostration of both body and mind, I am again, through the mercy and goodness of God, able to communicate to you the dealings of the Lord with us, and to what extent he has prospered the mission which you have here thus far sustained.

At the close of our first term of school, ending June the 29th, I sent to the Board a full report of what we had been enabled to do, and the success that had attended our labors here to that time. It was my intention then to communicate also to you through the Crisis, and Voice of the West, the prosperity of the mission, together with many interesting incidents connected with our work here among this cast-off people; but immediate sickness prevented, and thus a silence in relation to our labors here has existed for nearly three months. This has tended to lessen the interest in the mission, leading many, doubtless, to conclude the missionaries were inactive and that little was being done. While we were in health, and up to the first of July, no mission established here was more prosperous, or met with better success than ours, for the time it had been in operation. Our day school was large, too large for the number of teachers, and the work required and performed was the cause of our exhaustion and sickness.

We began our school on the 11th of April, with eighteen scholars; and at the end of the eleven weeks ending June 29th, one hundred and ninety-five pupils, of nearly all ages, from five years old to sixty, had been admitted. Not all of these had attended at once, but our house, which would seat a hundred and thirty, was ever filled. Our night school for adults was also large. This was a most interesting school. Never have I witnessed among this people such an earnest desire to learn, and rapid progress, as was here made. Reading, spelling, arithmetic and writing were taught. Many of these men and women were heads of families, and professing christians, and were trying to learn to read, so as to be able to know themselves what the word of God taught. Many of them would often say, "If I can only get to read as you do the Bible, I shall be satisfied." Every moment in this school was improved, and but few seemed satisfied with the progress they were making, so anxious were they to reach the desired point. Hard as they all worked through the long hot day, they would come here and study until half-past ten, and often until eleven o'clock at night, without manifesting any weariness. It was often the latter hour before we got through with hearing the classes. Though often weary ourselves to sinking, we were animated constantly with this intense interest and earnest desire to learn on the part of the scholars, both of the day and night school.

But as interesting and promising for good as these were, our Sabbath school surpassed in interest and the accomplishment of good both the other schools. There was no Sabbath, when the weather and traveling were favorable, but our house was crowded with old and young, anxious to engage in the exercises and learn whatever we might introduce into the school. Our Bible class, embracing the whole school, was the most interesting of anything I ever witnessed. Those who could read any, and many who could not, had Testaments, all wanting to take a part in the exercises. My method was this: having pointed out to each where we were to begin to read, I would commence and pronounce the first word, the school pronouncing it in concert after me; then the next word, and so on to the end of the lesson. In this way each could keep the place and see what each word was called. In this way also they would both learn to read and gain a knowledge of the word of God. After we had read the lesson in this manner, then came questions by both teachers and scholars, the object being to bring out the meaning of the scripture, and impress it upon the mind. There seemed to be a perfect delight on the part of the school in this exercise. Nothing could please them more than this way of reading. They seemed to feel as if they were truly in the act of reading the Bible.

In the other exercises of the school there was also a great interest. The singing, the recitations of Scripture, and verses, were engaged in with earnestness and zeal. Another exercise introduced was to have those who could read go forward to the desk and read to the school a psalm or part of a chapter. Some two or three were appointed each Sabbath to read the next; and a selection of Scripture made, which they could study during the week, and be better prepared to read it before the school. This exercise delighted all, and each wanted to engage in it at once, none being willing to wait for the rest. They would come to me and say, "Can't I read next Sunday? Please let me read next Sabbath."

I shall ever look back upon these schools with pleasure and satisfaction; yet with the regret that they could not have been continued until the seed that was sown should have sprung up, been cultivated, and ripened. Surely, we were not sowing in vain, provided the seed could have been guarded and the ground cultivated after the blade had appeared. Nor now will it all be lost. "Some fell upon good ground" and brought forth a fold. Not all that the sower sowed was lost.

These schools have been our introduction to this people and their hearts. With these even it has been hard to gain their confidence. Without them, I know not how we could. They are a wary people, and have little confidence in white men from north or south. Although in consequence of sickness the schools have not been recommenced, yet the Sabbath meetings have never been discontinued; the house having been held and used for the worship of God ever since it was secured; and the result is, the blessing of God by the outpouring of his holy Spirit in the reviving of christians, and the conversion of sinners. Although, during two months, I was unable to be present at the meetings but a few times, they were conducted by a faithful minister of Christ, a true servant of God, although but partially enlightened upon the Scriptures as we understand them. He however preaches the coming of the Lord at hand, and is gradually getting hold of our views and the great truths of the gospel. At another time, I shall speak of him particularly, and give his history. I thank God for this brother's help in this the most trying hour of my life. He has been most faithful and successful in bringing the people together from Sabbath to Sabbath, and in keeping up an interest in the mission and us. He has a wide influence over the people, and he exerts it in favor of our work here.

During my sickness, I felt that my work might be done here; but about four weeks ago, when I began to recover, it seemed to me there was something more for me to do,—a special work; and as I gained strength, I began to speak to the people wherever I found them, in public and in private, warning them of the judgment at hand. I did this without argument, simply quoting the word of God in relation to that day, and telling them it was near, at the doors. I told Bro. Lucas this was the message we must preach; and he remarked that "whenever this was preached the Spirit accompanied the word."

Our meetings began to grow more interesting. The congregation increased. Our early Sabbath morning prayer meeting, which during my sickness had ceased, was again commenced, and was better attended than before. Many who had thought they could not get out so early came and were blessed. An earnest prayer that the Holy Spirit might begin a work of grace here among both professing christians and sinners was begotten, and we felt that the prayer would be answered. In all our meetings a deep solemnity prevailed, and signs of an outpouring of the Spirit were seen on every hand. At the first invitation to come forward for prayers, more than thirty came and bowed at the altar. Since then, the number has more than doubled. At every meeting an invitation is given, and one half of the seats in the house are filled with anxious seekers. Some have found peace in the forgiveness of their sins, and are rejoicing in the love of Christ. Some are almost in despair, and cry aloud for mercy. There is much excitement, as there always is here at the South, both among whites and blacks, in a time of revival. But there is genuine repentance among these who are now here saying, "Pray for us." This is perceptible, not only in our meetings, but in the streets and wherever you meet this people here. The swearing, quarreling, and riotous conduct, which a little while since was heard and seen in the streets and at their dwellings, is now hushed and has disappeared. All is quiet now through the night, and peace and safety reign. The voice of prayer and praise is now heard in many places, where oaths and blasphemy a short time since were repeated. Nearly all the dancing houses and places of amusement for the blacks are closed for want of patronage. This is the case all through the city, to a great extent. There is a general awakening among this people throughout the entire city. God is gathering in his elect against the burning day.

Our meetings every other night during the week, and four upon the Sabbath, are well attended, and often crowded. The interest is still unabated, and there is a good prospect of its still going on and many sharing in the saving grace of God. The preaching of the judgment at hand has a good effect upon many of this people. Although there are but few who can understand the prophetic argument, or follow you through history and the fulfillment of the Scriptures; yet, the "signs" of the Lord's coming can be seen and are received by many; and these seem sufficient to convince them of the nearness of the day. I have found those who seemed to be impressed, without ever hearing any preaching upon the subject, that the day of the Lord was near. If this people were educated sufficiently to read and weigh the evidences which we have, and might present to them, many of them would embrace the truth as we hold it, and soon the gospel of the kingdom would spread here all over the South. O that they could read God's word. I pity them when I see how ignorant they are of it, and how they grope in darkness for want of its light, believing and repeating for scripture what the Bible never contained. O slavery! cursed be thou, source of all this darkness and ignorance. Thou art the enemy of God and his Son; the instrument of Satan in carrying down to death and night thousands here who might have lived in light and glory eternally. Thou art not yet dead, but thy time is short. The year of jubilee is at hand, and thy fetters shall soon fall and be consumed by the fires of that day; and thou and thy abettors shall perish forever. Amen. Even so let it be.

☞ A Paris journal declares that there is a possibility of the abdication of the Emperor of Austria in favor of his son, six years old. In that case Maximilian, who has been expected by his brother, Francis Joseph, for the last six months, would immediately leave Mexico, and be appointed Regent of the Austrian Empire.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER ELEVEN.

BRO. GRANT:—As I wrote you in my last letter, I went in company with Bro. Hanbart, the 27th of August, to the valley of St. Imier. Stopping first at Renan, six hours walk from Chaux de Fonds, to the northwest, we addressed the mayor of the town, asking permission to lecture there, which was kindly granted, provided we could find a room ourselves for the purpose. This being impossible, Bro. Hanbart went from house to house, distributing tracts that we have been able to publish, while I went to Sonvilliers and St. Imier, two villages situated near together, an hour's walk further up the valley.

The principal occupation of the people in that region, is the manufacture of watches and music-boxes, formerly quite remunerative, but owing to the watch manufactories recently established in the United States, where work that is here done by hand is done by machinery, cheaper and more exact than here, that branch of industry suffers much at present. Many of the people find it difficult to get work, and what they obtain they are not so well paid for as formerly, so there is at present much scarcity of money, and the people generally are under the necessity of using much economy.

But I had the happiness of finding some who were seeking after truth, and glad to receive the evidence of the speedy coming of the Lord; and though I was not able in either village to obtain a large room in which to lecture, I trust some good will result from our visit in the little valley of the Lara Bernois.

Aug. 31st, separated from Bro. Hanbart, he going to the West, while I went over the mountain, a six hours' walk, northeast, to Tramelan, Father Hanbart at the same time laboring south of us, in the vicinity of Neuchatel. On arriving at the agreeable village of Tramelan, I called upon Bro. Jules Dietschy, a negociant, to whom I had introduction from Father Hanbart, who received me with christian kindness, and gave me generous hospitality. The same evening I called upon M. Montaudon, pastor of the National church (the National being the only one in that valley), who kindly gave me the privilege of speaking to his people in the large school-house of the village, Sunday evening, Sept. 2d, which was not sufficiently large for the congregation, as many stood without. We had much liberty in speaking upon the Two Witnesses of Rev. 11th chapter, showing how the Bible was trodden under foot in France, in the time of Robespierre, and since that time has been so wonderfully elevated, by being circulated throughout the world in one hundred and sixty-two different languages, and of the great good accomplished by the indefatigable zeal of the Swiss missionaries, Messrs. Roussy, Tanner, Vernier, Rochat, Page, Normandeau, Madame Fuller, etc., in circulating the Bible among the dark Romanists in Canada, establishing churches, schools, etc., and at last spoke of the great efforts put forth in America to spread the Bible in all the world, and of the movement there in regard to the preparation for the coming of the Lord. The congregation was very attentive and solemn, and manifested much eagerness to hear more.

The next day a delegation visited the pastor, and asked for the use of the temple for my lectures the evenings of that week, which he refused, giving for reason that he perceived I wished to raise up Advent churches, separate from the National church. He said he had no objection to any one hearing and following me who wished to, but that his conscience would not permit him to give the use of the temple, which he considered an official place, for such a purpose. This, though in some respects disadvantageous to the work there, seemed only to increase the desire of the people to hear, and it gave them an opportunity to manifest it by making the best provision in their power for a place of assembly. I lectured a week in different places of the town, and the Spirit of God accompanied the word with great power. A deep conviction seemed to settle upon the people that these things new to them, which I preached to them, were solemn truths. I trust the Lord at his coming will find many there who will receive him with joy.

Sept. 13th, in company with two dear brethren, I descended the mountain to the village of Courtelery, in the valley of St. Imier. I called upon the pastor, M. Rollier, who received me with truly brotherly kindness, and the same evening I attended with him a prayer meeting at the house of a sister-in-law of our Bro. Vernier (missionary in Canada, where he was drowned in 1854), and had an opportunity to speak to the few in attendance. M. Rollier appointed a meeting for me for the next evening, in the chapel of the college in Cormoret, which belongs to his parish, where we had a good assembly.

I visited considerably among the people, by invitation of the pastor, and attended service with him Sunday, the 16th. The evening of that day, M. Rollier and myself were invited by the pastor of St. Imier to meet in the temple of that place several congregations from different parishes, it being the National Fast day, and he requested me to be prepared to speak to the assembly. But the pastor of Sanvilliers, who was with the pastor of St. Imier on our arrival, had so influenced his mind against me, that he did not even invite me to enter the desk, whereupon M. Rollier refused the invitation repeatedly given him, and on my urging him to accept it, and leave me in the congregation, said, "You are my guest, and I cannot leave you. We were both invited, and I shall not go without you," and he remained with me.

I spent four days at Courtelery, enjoying the hospitality of the pastor, and then returned home to spend a few days, to do necessary writing, and make preparation for our removal to St. Blaise, the latter part of the present week.

During the thirteen months we have spent in Grandson, we have been abundantly blessed of the Lord, and we trust his blessing will go with us to our new place of residence, to the east of Lake Neuchatel. Dear brethren and sisters, pray for us.

Your affectionate brother in Christ,
M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

A faithful missionary, who labored a few years ago in the localities we visit, gave a book to the community, in which he recited the scenes he had witnessed, etc. The title of the book was, "Sorrow's Circuit." This morning I present a portion of sorrow's record that has been my lot to witness within a week.

In a cellar lived a mother and four children. The father had just died of Asiatic Cholera. I had seen him in the collapsed stage of the disease, and saw that he must soon die. But he was a cruel husband, and an unkind father. It seemed to be a blessing to the family that he died. At the time of his death, the family were made recipients of bounties for their temporal use, which the Lord had enabled us to give them, thus cheering their sad hearts in a measure. Their lives had been sorrowful. Now the little family is to be broken up. Two of the children are under my care, and homes are to be provided for them. Mothers can sympathise here with this afflicted family.

A week ago we carried bounties to two poor women and their children who lived in a dark garret. At that time, Sr. Helginson states, the oldest girl received a portion of the things sent her mother, with joy in her countenance, for they were pinched with poverty. That daughter is now a corpse. How terrible that trio—poverty, sickness, and death! The sorrow of the poor! oh, how many, and how great.

In the same court, in an entry not more than seven feet wide, lived another heart-broken family. Somewhat over a year ago, they had a comfortable little room. But they had the typhoid fever, were carried to the Alms House, and while there their little room was robbed of all it contained. When their health was somewhat restored, their present tenement was procured. A pile of straw serves for a bed. A little stand, and two backless chairs constitute their furniture. She has three children. One is sick, and the mother's health is very poor. They were made recipients of temporal blessings, and we felt well paid for our visit to her wretched abode.

I have sent with this article another, where I write concerning Sr. Washington, who died of cholera last Sunday night. She was buried yesterday afternoon from the building where we hold our Sunday school. The little hall was filled with sympathizing friends. A colored elder, a Methodist brother and myself performed the last sad services for our beloved sister.

Another of our household has gone. Mary Goulding died of cholera on Tuesday evening. She doubtless received the disease at Blind Susan's where Sr. Washington died. I saw her on Monday, and she appeared to be well then. I saw her again the next day, at even, but she then lay before me a corpse. Quite a number of our little band have had the cramps, but a timely use of our cholera remedy has saved their lives.

Sr. Helginson is now connected solely with the Dorcas mission. She has no salary, as heretofore, but goes to her work in the fear of the Lord. It is my purpose, by the will of God, to see that she does not go into the field penniless. Pray for the Dorcas mission.

Yours in Christ, F. H. BURBANK.

THE "BRUISED REED."

BRO. GRANT:—I have a few hundred copies of the "Bruised Reed," which I should be very thankful to dispose of. I would not make this appeal, if I was not driven to it by extreme need. I have no way of providing for my family, unless it is by disposing of these little pamphlets. Who will help me? I am "cast down, but not destroyed." Brethren, will you pray for me?

MISAPPREHENSION CORRECTED.

BRO. GRANT:—In my article on Paradise Promised to the Penitent Thief, published in the Crisis of Aug. 22d, I hastily inserted a clause in the wrong place, which, I learn, has caused misapprehension. The phrase, as in the Revised New Testament, was intended to qualify the verb must be read; and the clause omitting "to-day" should have been inserted immediately after the word but. As thus corrected, it will read: The passage therefore can not be read as a question; but, omitting "to-day," it must be read, as in the Revised New Testament, "Thou shalt be with me in paradise." REPORT OF THE CHRIS. CONF. OF WESTERN NEW YORK.

BRO. GRANT:—The fifth annual conference held with the church of God in Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., being also a quarterly meeting of the Christian Conference of Western New York, was held, according to notice, at the Baptist church near Bro. B. C. Simonds', Sept. 7th, and over Lord's day following. The rain, however, broke up the meeting Friday evening.

Saturday, Sept. 8th, met at 9½ o'clock for social meeting. Had a glorious time. The meeting was opened by Bro. C. B. Turner, who made some very appropriate remarks, founded on John 17th chapter, after which prayer and conference continued until nearly noon.

Preaching at 2½ P. M., by Eld. C. H. Williams, from Hebrews 2nd.

Met again at 6½ P. M. for social meeting. Had another glorious time. It seems as if the brethren and sisters are all alive with the hope of soon seeing Jesus. Truly this is "a glorious hope." May we receive its speedy consummation.

Preaching again at 7½ P. M. by the writer, from Isa. 32: 1.

Sunday, Sept. 9th, met at 9½ A. M. for a social meeting. Interest still increasing—if possible. At 10½ A. M. we listened to a very able and comprehensive discourse from Bro. H. Pratt, of Springfield, Mass., on Rev. 17th chap.

At 2½ P. M., preaching by Eld. C. B. Turner, from 1 Cor. 6: 20, in which he showed the necessity, nature, and result of the atonement; after which we came around the table of the Lord to commemorate the death and suffering of our dear Redeemer.

Met again at 6½ P. M. for social meeting, after which we had the pleasure of listening to another able discourse from Bro. H. Pratt, on "the battle of the great day of God Almighty." After the sermon, Bro. A. C. Newell, of Susquehanna, Pa., was ordained.

The preaching brethren at this conference were (ordained):—Elders C. F. Sweet, C. B. Turner, H. Pratt, B. P. Stevens, C. W. Low, C. H. Williams, M. Miles, J. Blain, J. W. Taylor, C. Colegrove, and McWilliams; (unordained), A. C. Newell, D. Coggswell, and I. Allen.

It was said by many that this was the best conference ever held in the State; and although conflicting elements were present (as we must expect at such a gathering), yet it could well be said that "the unity of the Spirit" was kept "in the bond of peace." We parted with the hope of soon meeting in our Eden home. J. W. TAYLOR, Sec. pro tem.

P. S.—This report was written out more fully and forwarded for publication before leaving Western N. Y., but it seems was miscarried. J. W. T.

REPORT.

To the Brn. and Srs. abroad:—Whereas our brother, L. S. Ludington, who has been known in years past as an able laborer in the cause of Christ, but has been overtaken by the tempter and fell into temptation, whereby he lost his interest in the cause for which he labored so faithfully, has returned again to the family of Christ, and asked pardon of his God and the brethren, hoping that he may be received into their fellowship again; and, by the grace of God, and the aid and prayers of christians, that he may be kept from evil, and finally be received into the everlasting kingdom of God; we gladly receive him into our fellowship, and ask the brethren abroad to receive him as far as he walks in the path of our Master.

TO THE WESTERN BRETHREN.

This is to recommend to your fellowship and sympathy a worthy brother, Elder Sylvanus Griffin, who has been long and favorably known in the vicinity of his residence, Barnston, C. E. He is a man of consistent life, of an excellent spirit, sound in the faith and hope of the gospel of the kingdom at hand, whose only desire is to do good, and thus glorify God, a person well qualified for the work. Receive him, therefore, and hold him in high esteem, and help him on his way "after a godly sort," and the Master will bless you. CHAS. P. DOW.

LESSON FROM A NEGRO.

A little while ago, the congregation at New Amsterdam in Berbice wanted to build a new chapel. How were they to raise the money? Every one determined to deny himself and to give as much as possible. There were some hundreds of poor negroes who devoted to it regularly the wages of one day in every week till the debt should be paid. They set about the work in good earnest, and it prospered. We know that whenever a good work does not prosper, it is because people do not give their hearts to it. Mr. Davies was the minister at New Amsterdam. He called over the names of his congregation, to ascertain how much each could raise. And now we will leave him to tell his own story:

"I happened to call the name of Fitzgerald Matthew. 'I am here, sir,' he instantly replied; and at the same time I saw him bobbling with his wooden leg out of the crowd, to come up to the table-pew, where I was standing. I wondered what he meant, for the others answered to their names without moving from their places. I was struck with his earnestness. On coming up he put his hand into one pocket and took out a handful of silver wrapped in paper, and said, 'that's for me, massa.' 'Oh!' I said, 'keep your money at present, I don't want it now; I only wanted to know how much you could afford to give; I will come for the money another time.' 'Ah! massa,' he replied, 'God's work must be done, and I may be dead,' and with that he plunged his hand into another pocket, and took out another handful of silver, and said, 'that's for my wife, massa.' Then he put his hand into a third pocket, and took out a somewhat smaller parcel, and said, 'that's for my child, massa;' at the same time giving me a slip of paper, which somebody had written for him, to say how much the whole was.

"It was altogether near three pounds sterling, a large sum for a poor field-negro with a wooden leg! But what he said was to me worth more than all the money in the world. Hardly ever have I been so impressed with anything as with the simple expression of this poor negro. Let me never forget it; let it be engraved on my heart; let it be my motto in all that I take in hand for the cause of Christ: 'God's work must be done, and I may be dead.'"—Miss. Rep.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. A. Smith, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "We are having blessed good meetings in Murry. Three have just been converted, others are under conviction, and the church is rejoicing with strong faith in the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus. Last Sunday was a glorious day to them. O what a heavenly time we had. The Lord did greatly bless the word spoken. It does seem as though our opponents were convinced that we are right. This last call of mercy appears to condemn them, and they show it in their weak and foolish opposition. O how glad I am that I have lived to see this glorious truth triumph over our enemies. We shall soon shout our sufferings are over."

Bro. Wm. Christian, Newark, O., writes: "I must say that the Crisis is the paper for every body to read, and I wish every one had it. I can find but two or three persons who care in earnest about the soon coming of Jesus. There are four with myself, and I am the only one who can read the English language; therefore, I can get no one to subscribe for the Crisis. The most of the Germans here are opposed to the doctrine of the soon coming of Jesus; and still they claim to be children of God through Christ; but they want to get rich in this world's goods; therefore they say to me, when I say any thing to them about his soon coming, we cannot say when he is coming. They say we will see him when he comes, and that is soon enough to know any thing about it.

"They claim that I am no more prepared than they, because I have left the church, and a man cannot be a christian outside of any church. Their pastor has been to see me several times, to get me back again into the church; but I claim to be in the true church, who love Jesus and wish to be with him; and we say, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. I can lay more value on his coming now, than when I believed when men die their souls go to heaven or hell. Thank God to-day that I am brought out of darkness to Bible light."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

London, Oct. 10. It is rumored that the Plenipotentiaries of Prussia and Saxony have amicably adjusted all difficulties, and that peace negotiations have been finally concluded.

The London Lancet says there is nothing in the state of the Emperor's health incompatible with prolonged life and activity.

It is reported that all difficulties connected with the settlement of the Venetian debt are now arranged, and if the treaty of peace is signed, as will probably be the case, at the latest, on the 1st of October, Victor Emmanuel will make his entry into Venice in ten or twelve days following.

The health of Count Bismark is improving. His disease was a peculiar one—a swelling of the veins in the head, the result, probably, of over exertion during the war, and the events following it.

Affairs in the east of Europe become every day more serious. The intelligence from Candia is obscure and unsatisfactory, and a rupture of a formidable kind between the Porte and Russia, the latter the great protector of the Christians in the East, appears inevitable.

The condition of Spain is represented as being wretched in the extreme. It is said that the country was never worse governed, that the press is silenced, that executions are frequent, and that a reign of terror prevails. The Liberal party appears to be divided, one wishing for the expulsion of the Bourbon dynasty, and the other striving for an honest and constitutional government.

Father Point, Oct. 14. The Paris correspondent of the Times says, notwithstanding the pacific countenance assumed, there is in higher regions as strong if not stronger irritation against Prussia as at any previous period.

Official intelligence from Candia says another battle had taken place, in which 7000 Christians and 17,000 Egyptians were engaged. The former commenced the attack and drove back the Egyptians to the sea shore, where they were received on board the vessels of the Turkish squadron. A conflict is reported between the Christians and the Turks at Herecla, in which the former claim to have obtained the advantage.

The inundations in France were subsiding. Great damage had been done by the floods, and the Emperor headed a subscription with one hundred thousand francs.

Garibaldi had returned to Caprera and his volunteers had been disbanded.

All was quiet at Palermo.

The King of Hanover had protested to all the Cabinets of Europe against annexation to Prussia, and appeals to all the powers to aid him against oppression.

The insurrection in Candia was still progressing, and the insurgents were marching upon the city of Candia.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Oct. 12. The Herald's Washington special dispatch says intelligence from New Mexico indicates an outbreak among the Indians, which, if not arrested at once, will lead to a savage and devastating war, and an expenditure of many millions of dollars.

It appears that the Indians are in a starving condition, game having entirely disappeared from the country, and they are compelled to kill the stock of the settlers or starve to death. By doing this they come in collision with the settlers. Already blood had been shed, and an intensely bitter feeling on the part of the Indians is manifested. If hostilities are fairly commenced, all the bands will be involved, and together they can muster between 4000 and 5000 warriors. Troops have been sent into the country and several volunteer companies have been organized.

Orders have been given to issue rations to the starving Indians, with the understanding that they will be stopped immediately upon the commission of any depredations.

St. Louis, Oct. 11. The Democrat's St. Joseph special dispatch says the latest advices from Montana report that forty miners out of a party of seventy-five in the Green river diggings had been killed by the Cheyennes and the others were driven away. The miners on Wind river had also been driven off by the Sioux and compelled to fly to the nearest forts for protection.

THE FLOOD NEAR WASHINGTON.—A Washington dispatch to the Herald says of the severe flood there:

"Bridges have been swept away, streets upheaved by bursting sewers, while houses on the creeds and river banks have been carried off. Railroad communication with the South is suspended and trains to the North and West are still irregular. The town of Bladenburg, five miles from Washington, is wholly submerged and has been abandoned by the inhabitants. The Chesapeake and Ohio canal has overflown, involving the loss of considerable property and the dams to the large flouring mills near Georgetown have been lost. Corn and potato crops have been almost wholly destroyed. The Potomac is now rising rapidly and fears are entertained for the bridges which cross it at this point."

THE SUFFRAGE QUESTION.—The people of England are becoming aroused on the suffrage question, and great reform meetings are the order of the day. At the demonstration in Birmingham, Aug. 27th, 200,000 people were present. The banners bore inscriptions of ominous significance to privileged classes. These are some of the mottoes: "We respect Law, not privilege;" "Manhood Suffrage;" "Justice to the Oppressed;" "Civil and Religious Liberty;" "We will be free." These indicate what the people have now determined upon. They would not now accept any such partial reform as was lately defeated by the Tories. That bill only added a few thousand votes, and left the great mass of working men without representation.

AN "IMPENDING CRISIS" AT ROME.—A letter from Rome in the Independence asserts that the Pope has declared to his cardinals the necessity of giving up to France all authority in the city, in view of an "expected crisis." This is understood to look to the death of the Pope and the inability of his government, except with French aid, to preserve order during the election of his successor. Such an arrangement would be equivalent to a guaranty to the French Emperor of the nomination of the next Pope.

Montreal, Oct. 15. A terrible fire occurred at Quebec last night, in St. Roche and St. Saveur suburbs. Fifteen hundred houses were destroyed, four men were killed, one soldier blown up and one officer wounded.

☞ There are thirty-two foreign newspapers printed in New York.

☞ House rents are still enormous in New York, the rates ranging from $1800 to $3500 a year for unfurnished tenements in good neighborhoods. The prices demanded by the boarding house keepers are even more extravagant than those asked by the landlords—suits of two or three rooms being held at from $100 to $200 a week, or from $5000 to $10,000 a year for families of moderate size.

☞ Mr. Dickens' favorite time for working is in the morning. He rises very early and sits to work at once. He lightly breakfasts at about half past nine, and continues to work until twelve o'clock. At this hour he lunches. After lunch he goes out into the fields, and does not return home until half past six o'clock.

☞ It is said that there is scarcely a member of the French Court who does not owe more than he can by any sacrifice possibly pay. Dissipation and extravagance.

☞ The Kingdom of Hanover is blotted from the map of Europe. His Majesty was head of the Orange organization. The kingdom has existed a thousand years.

☞ According to some of the continental journals, England is most anxious that the Pope should leave Rome and take up his residence in the island of Malta.

☞ It is estimated that twenty millions bushels of corn have been destroyed by the freshet on the Miami bottoms.

To Brethren in Conn.

The cause of God seems to demand that a conference be held in Central or Western Conn. After prayer and consultation, it is decided that such a conference be held in Yalesville, Ct., to commence Wednesday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, Oct. 24th, and continue over Sunday, the 28th. At which time the new Advent Chapel will be dedicated. If it should be stormy on Wednesday, it will take place Thursday.

Yalesville is situated on the Hartford and New Haven Rail Road, thirteen miles from N. H., and about fifteen from Hartford. We hope the Brn. and Srs. will make an extra effort to attend this meeting, as it is expected then to organize a permanent conference to meet in different localities until the Lord comes. For time is very short, and we ought to do all we can to enlighten our fellow men upon the great truths we hold so dear. We hope that every Advent minister in the State, and as many out of it as possibly can, will be present. Call on W. S. Chandler, George A. Marble, and Henry Mix. B. HITCHCOCK. W. H. FISHER.

New Hampshire Quarterly Conference.

The fourth quarterly session of the N. H. State Conference will be held in Portsmouth, N. H., commencing November 15th, at 2 o'clock P. M. A general invitation is given to brethren and sisters and friends, and especially to our preaching brethren, to attend. A. W. SIBLEY, Sec'y.

Tent Meeting.

There will be a tent meeting near Pascouge Village, R. I., to commence Wednesday, Oct. 24th, and continue as long as the interest demands. There will be both male and female preachers present to preach the word. E. BELLOWS.

Dedication.

Providence permitting, the new meeting-house lately erected on New Durham Ridge, N. H., will be dedicated to the worship of God on the 25th of Oct. Meeting to commence at 1 o'clock, and continue over the following Sunday. Bro. Couch is to attend, with others. Preachers and brethren are cordially invited. J. G. SMITH.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a meeting of days in Hollis, Me., to commence Thursday evening, Oct. 18th, and continue over Sunday. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to attend filled with the spirit and truth, to labor for the promotion of Christ's cause, and the salvation of sinners. For the brethren, TIMOTHY L. CARLL.

Notice.

The next quarterly East Maine Conference will meet at Bangor, November 1st, at seven o'clock P. M., in a hall, or some other place, which will be furnished by Bro. Robinson, of Bangor. The brethren from abroad will call on Bro. Robinson, on Birch street. THOMAS SMITH, President. ABEL KENNEY, Clerk.

Notice.

We would inform brethren and sisters who may be passing this way, that Advent meetings are held in our house, Tuesday and Friday evenings. Also, preaching in the Town Hall, Sundays. Preachers who feel sent are invited. We need help. Pray for us. D. J. WEAVER.
Westfield, Mass., Oct. 1866.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 576. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

A PRAYER.

Give me, oh Lord, the charity
That suffereth and is kind;
That watcheth not with eager eye
A brother's faults to find.

And if I see a sister roam
In paths that lead astray,
Will seek to win the wand'rer home,
To walk in virtue's way.

And when the evil minded ones
False accusations bring,
Against thy truth and chosen ones
Their spite and venom fling;

Oh, then, dear Savior, may I have
Thy gentle, pitying mind,
That I may in my heart forgive,
Nor feel the least unkind.

And when the highly gifted one
Is honored and caressed,
Oh, may dark envy ne'er find room
Within my peaceful breast.

And may I ever seek to be
A humble child of thine,—
Rejoice not in iniquity,
But when the truth doth shine;

Enduring all things for thy sake,
And hoping to the end;
Well knowing thou wilt not forsake,
But be my faithful Friend.

So shall I walk so close with thee,
I shall be daily blest;
So shall thy peace abide with me,
And I enjoy thy rest.

Then, when the glorious day shall come
Thy saints so long to see,
I shall be ready to go home,
To dwell, dear Lord, with thee.

THE PRINCIPLES OF PEACE EXEMPLIFIED.

(Concluded.)

The following is from a tract published by a Tract Association of Friends, No. 50 North Fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Every one should have a copy of the tract.—ED.

A person of great respectability in the county of Westmeath, living in a wild, thinly inhabited district, not far from the town of Moate, has given the following striking testimony, from his own observations at that period:—"All those in this quarter, who professed principles of peace, were marvellously spared from extreme suffering; some living in solitary places, surrounded by that class who were generally in a state of rebellion. Some so circumstanced could not leave their usual habitations, though strongly urged by their few protestant neighbors to flee with them to the garrison towns. O, the heart-rending scenes some such have witnessed, their neighbors running hither and thither with their families and goods, and calling upon them to flee from certain destruction. Yet some were favored with faith and patience to abide in their lots, conscientiously adhering to the revealed law of their God, and did thus experience, to their humbling admiration, the name of the Lord to be a strong tower, in which they found safety. I could with wonder, love and praise relate some marvellous deliverances mercifully vouchsafed to me, when surrounded by bodies of armed men, and when no human being of any other description was near; yet through divine aid, and that alone, was I enabled to refuse to take up arms, or take their oaths, or join them, assigning as a reason that I could not fight nor swear for or against them. They threatened, they pondered, they debated, marvelled, and ultimately liberated me, though they said I was in the power of many thousands then assembled."

A Friend living in a retired part of the county of Waterford, had a large family of young children, and kept several servants. A little before the battle of Ross, two of the nursery maids, Roman Catholics, left the house. This circumstance gave some alarm to the family, which was however mitigated in degree by their return after the battle, in which the United Irishmen were defeated. The mistress interrogated the elder of the servants respecting their reasons for thus leaving the family at such a time, and in a state of such distress, and represented their ingratitude after having experienced so many marks of kindness from their master and mistress, during a period of some years' servitude. The girl acknowledged it all with many tears; but added, "Mistress, if you knew all, you would not condemn us." Some days after, her mistress spoke to her again, and requested her to be more explicit, because she did not understand what was meant by the words, "If you knew all," etc.; and on urging the subject in a very kind manner, the servant burst into tears, and acknowledged that she and her fellow-servant had been enjoined by an authority to which they had been accustomed to yield implicit obedience, "if the battle of Ross was favorable to the Irish, to kill the young children; and this," said she, "we could not do; you had been like tender and kind parents to us, and the children we love as our own, and therefore we determined to leave the house, never to return any more, if the battle should be favorable to the Irish."

The following account was communicated by a valuable Friend, who felt himself placed in a situation which exposed him to a kind of trial, different in many respects from what others had to experience, in support of the testimony against war. It not only shows the delicacy of those religious feelings which may arise in truly devoted minds, and the benefit of yielding them faithful obedience, but may afford a useful lesson to others, to attend to the pointings of duty in themselves, even when their nearest friends may not see things exactly in the same light. "At the time when we were under the power of the military, and the civil authority suspended, the town of C—— was threatened, or in expectation of being attacked. On walking out one morning, I observed posted up in various places a printed order from the general in the following terms: 'In case of alarm in the night, the inhabitants are required to place lights in the middle stories of their houses. The most severe and instantaneous punishment will be inflicted on such as neglect to comply with the order.' A cloud of distress came over my mind on reading this notice. I knew that 'light in the windows,' was that the soldiers might discern the enemy and be able to fight; and that the 'most severe and instantaneous punishment' was a license to the soldiers to put all instantly to death, where this order was not complied with. As I could not fight myself, I found I dare not hold a light for another to fight for me. This would be taking a more active part in a contest than I was easy to do, and how to act was a nice and difficult point. I informed Friends how I felt, but I found they did not all see alike, and few thought themselves so restricted as I did.

"At length, after a few days, I felt inclined to go to the general myself, and asking a friend to accompany me, I went. He received us in a civil manner, and patiently heard me, whilst I told him that, as I could not fight myself, I was not easy to hold a candle for another to do it for me. I believe he perceived the distress of my mind, and the first thing he said was, 'I think it is a pity you did not let me know your uneasiness sooner.' He said he had issued the order as consistent with his duty as commanding officer, and having issued it he could not well rescind it now, but said if I would furnish him with the names of such friends as were uneasy to comply with the order, and where they lived, he would endeavor to have them protected in case of alarm. I told him that perhaps there were some that could not say, till the time of trial came, how far they might be easy to comply or not, and then it would be too late. Then, with much condescension and kindness, he desired me to furnish him with the names of all the members of the society in town, and he would endeavor that they should not suffer for non-compliance with his order. This I complied with, but the town not being attacked, the general's kind intentions were not called forth. It was however, I thought, a memorable circumstance, that a general, in the midst of commotion, should so patiently listen to my reasons for not complying with his order, and promise as far as he could to protect us. As well as I can now remember, he went so far as to say, he did not think he should have issued the order just as he did, if he knew it would have given Friends so much uneasiness."

In this variety of circumstances and of perils to which they were exposed, it is natural enough to inquire whether the society lost any of its members. We are enabled to answer this question by an authentic document, issued by the Yearly Meeting of Dublin, which contains the following passage:—"It is worthy of commemoration, and cause of humble thankfulness to the Preserver of men, that amidst the carnage and destruction which frequently prevailed in some parts, and notwithstanding the jeopardy in which some Friends stood every hour, and that they had frequently to pass through violent and enraged men, in going to, and returning from our religious meetings, which, with very few exceptions, were constantly kept up, that the lives of the members of our society were so signally preserved." And in the same document, an extract is given from the epistle from the Yearly meeting held in Dublin in 1801, addressed to the Yearly meeting of Philadelphia, which states, that "It was cause of grateful acknowledgment to the God and Father of all our mercies, that in retrospection to that gloomy season, when in some places, Friends did not know but that every day would be their last, seeing and hearing of so many of their neighbors being put to death, that no member of our society fell a sacrifice in that way but one young man."

That an exception should thus be made of one young man, in the accidents or allotments of a society composed of some thousands, is in itself a remarkable occurrence; and every one must be desirous to know under what circumstances the death of this individual took place. There are some cases in which an apparent exception confirms the law, and we are much mistaken, if, in this particular instance, the very exception will not be found to establish the principle, so far from weakening its practical force. This young man, apprehending that his life was in danger, and that he could find no means of protection but in outward means of defence, took up the resolution accordingly to put on a military uniform and to associate with armed men. He told his connexions that they would all be murdered if they remained in such a defenceless state in the country, and taking with him some papers of consequence, he fled to a neighboring garrison town. But it so happened, that the very town he chose, as a place of refuge, was attacked and taken by the insurgents; and from the most credible information that can be collected, it appears that when the contest was over, and he was wantonly firing out of a window upon them, the door of the house was forced open by the enraged enemy; and, in terror of his life, he sought to conceal himself in an upper chamber, where he was soon discovered and put to death.

By the afflictive circumstances attendant on war, many who had been in comfortable situations were greatly reduced, and left almost destitute; to provide for their wants, a voluntary subscription was raised in Ireland, in which Friends of England and the United States of America freely offered to join; but their aid was not needed; so much was raised, that a part had to be returned to the subscribers.

Without question, it must afford a pleasing reflection to every humane mind, that a religious society, conformably to the analogy of the outward body, should, in this way, suffer and sympathize in the sufferings of all its members; and, though dispersed over a nation, should constitute, as it were, but a single family, bound together by common interests.

Viewed abstractedly as the effect of a benevolent christian economy, practised in a particular society, the fact must also be a source of gratification, that strangers even in distant countries, should offer their kind assistance to those in need. For, we are told, that the Friends in England, and even in America, requested permission to send their contributions, should they be required.

But, contemplating the fact, as if the same principles of conduct might be made applicable to the whole christian community, how consoling and animating would the prospect be, of all the members of the christian church, however scattered, and however divided by minute shades of opinion, being brought to unite in the bond of peace, in a common desire to do each other good, to obey the same rule, and to adopt in their practice the same principles!

It would require no great stretch of faith to believe that conduct like this would lead them to a union which no earthly power could shake, and that Jews, Mohammedans, and Pagans would bow down with reverence to the spirit of christianity, and surrender their might before the excellency of such a peaceful dominion. Because, these, constituting part of the human family, and therefore objects of this Catholic benevolence, would receive from their christian neighbors such lessons of peace and good will, as would imbue them with kind dispositions, and take away all evil intentions from their minds.

It could not injure any, whatever might be their opinions with regard to the necessity of war, to study with deep attention the moral effect of this christian spirit of universal charity; which has thus a tendency to unite together nations, kindreds and people, as children of one parent, and servants of one Lord, "thinking no evil," "forbearing one another," "loving one another," "preferring one another," "seeking the good of all;" and to compare it with the opposite spirit, which is ever busy in discovering faults, in awakening evil surmisings, in sowing the seeds of contention, and setting man at variance with man, in kindling the flame of war, and promoting the misery, demoralization and destruction of the human race. How can we conceive it possible that these opposite dispositions should ever be brought to coincide in the perfect character, the true disciple of Jesus Christ.

Is it possible that the same individual can be actuated at the same time by the maxims and principles of war? But if these are incompatible, and war could be tolerated under the christian code, then the maxims and principles of peace might be dispensed with under the same code. Where shall we find the authority for thus stripping off the distinguishing badge of the christian, that he may be fitted for the field of battle? There is no such authority; it is opposed by every rule and maxim, by every law and principle in the New Testament. Consequently, the maxims and principles of peace cannot, under any circumstances, be dispensed with; and warlike habits and dispositions are entirely incompatible with the meek and forgiving spirit of christianity. The rule of expediency, as it is called, may promise much; and men may employ their sophistry in attempting to reconcile the two characters. But calculations of present advantage, can never be admitted to form a part of the motives by which a christian should be governed; nor will he, who, in simplicity of heart, wishes to follow the example of a meek and forgiving Savior, with faithful obedience to his laws, and humble confidence in his divine protection, ever be justified in forsaking the direct and straightforward course of integrity, though life and property may seem to be at stake, for the serpentine mazes of a wily policy, by which he might bring himself to think that he could secure these transitory blessings.

The following extract from Ramond's travels in the Pyrenees, contains some reflections that are worthy of being added. Speaking of the Spanish smugglers, he says, "These smugglers are familiarized at all times with peril, and march in the very face of death, and certainly would be a subject of dread to most travelers; for where are they to be dreaded more than in deserts, where crime has no earthly witness, and the feeble no assistance? As for myself, alone and unarmed, I have met them without anxiety, and have accompanied them without fear. Armed, I should have been their enemy, unarmed they have respected me. In such expectation I have long since laid aside all menacing apparatus whatever; the man of peace among mankind, has a much more sacred defence,—his character." When such feelings as these arise in the breast of a man, who simply from outward observation, is led to view human nature as a compound of good and evil, that may be conciliated by kindness, and aggrieved by the contrary, how strong in the eyes of a christian must be the sanction of principles, derived from the spirit of his holy religion, whose direct object is to cherish such benevolent dispositions as would lead to universal peace and harmony in the world, if men would suffer themselves to be influenced by them in their conduct towards each other.

REPORT OF PROGRESS.

Wilbraham Campmeeting—Pleasant Greetings—R. I. Conf. Tent—Good Preaching—State of the Interest—Female Convention—Bro. Himes and others—The Lord's Supper—Partings—Through Boston to Alton Bay—Good Meeting—Biddeford, Me.—Dover, N. H.—Melvin Village, N. H.—Eld. Piper and Family—Others of "like precious faith"—Business Transactions.

We left our friends at Abington, Ct., Monday, Aug. 20th, feeling as we often do sad at the thought of parting, and glad that we are so soon to meet in the blessed kingdom. The little daughter of Bro. Ingalls took us to the depot at Putnam, where we took the cars for the old campmeeting ground—Mount Wilbraham. On our way there we met many of the children "going up to worship" with us pilgrims, who were going to the sacred spot where for so many years they had sung and shouted, wept and prayed together. The faces of some were lightened with hope's bright gleam of gladness, as they remembered the scenes of the past and anticipated a repetition of the old pleasure experienced in years gone, with an addition of new joys; while others, ourselves among the number, were going for the first time to the great Feast of Tabernacles. As we neared the sacred spot, our company increased, and when we reached the end of our journey a crowd of dear ones in Christ were ready at the station to welcome us and escort us to the tented grove.

Here we found Bro. Grant, the earnest, faithful worker, and Bro. Munger, that old pioneer of campmeetings, and other members of the committee faithfully at work for the interests of the meeting. What happy greetings! Here were those of whom we had often heard but never had seen, ready to greet us and express pleasure at seeing the "pilgrim preacher" and his companion in tribulation. "Time would fail," as Paul has it, to speak of all who were there, whose names had become familiar through the Crisis, and otherwise, with whom meeting reminded us of the glad day when the tried and proved, the faithful ones, who shall shake the hand of immortal friendship. "O, how sweet will eternal friendship be." How many dear ones met us there with their hearty greetings whom we had never seen before, with their kind "glad to see you, Bro. and Sr. McKinstry." We were made at home in the R. I. and East Conn. Conf. tent, and enjoyed the meetings with the brethren and sisters there. We were made acquainted with Bro. and Sister Phetteplace, who are really "yoked together" "equally," both illustrating the great truth that there is no respect of persons with God in carrying on his work of preaching his word, but that the servants and handmaids are alike commissioned. Thank God, Moses can have not only Aarons and Hurs to hold up his hands, but Phebes and Marys and Priscillas, who will help in the gospel. We were very happy in the acquaintance of the preaching brethren of the R. I. Conf., and shall sigh more earnestly for the eternal home, and it will have more attractions since we have met them at old Wilbraham.

"All the loved of earth shall meet"—

We met here our dear Bro. and Sr. Mathewson, whom we had not seen for a long time. Bro. M. baptized the writer in the Hudson river at Sandy Hill, N. Y., four or five years ago, when we at first fully decided to follow the light and preach the truth of the doctrine of the Lord's speedy coming, although we were even then unsatisfied whether the Bible taught the doctrine of immortality through Christ alone, or not. We had been considering the subject for seven years, but soon after our baptism, while we were trying to preach the best we knew, and had cut our little bark loose from all the old theology of heathen origin, and felt for a moment as though going adrift until we passed the last point of land in the harbor, to wit, the high promontory of—Soul the only identity in the resurrection morning,—and were fairly out into the sea and beyond the breezeless calm of the hill-shadowed shore; then a good wholesale breeze of truth caught our sails, and the bright, glistening light of the shining sea of truth cheered our soul, and we laid our course before the wind, steering by the chart for the high-lands of glory, clearing the rocks and reefs on which so many have foundered and gone down; and now we feel a spirit of peace and quiet satisfaction, or transporting joy, as we know that we are in the way of truth, and its blessed light continually breaks in waves over us, as we

Joyously voyage over the main,
Bound for the evergreen shore.

It was cheering as we met Bro. Mathewson to retrospect a little, and feel how blessedly

"Thus far the Lord hath led me on."

We met, too, Bro. Sidney Hall, of Hartford, whose kind sympathy manifested in a substantial manner, as was the case with others, showed an interest in the poor wayfaring pilgrim.

Old Wilbraham, thou art a precious spot, made so by the fond associations that cluster around thee. The good preaching by faithful men, the tears of penitence and rainbow smiles of peace glimmering through their tears, and all the songs of hope, and joyful, patient longing; and the "prayers of saints" which are now "odors" in "golden vials" before God's throne, as "treasure laid up in heaven";—all make thee, time-honored mount, our Tabor, our "Delectable mountain," whence we looked so clearly to the goal of our journey, "the beautiful hills," the "paradise of God."

We formed a pleasant acquaintance here with Bro. Himes, the old pioneer in the cause, whose face we had never seen before. Dear pilgrim brother, still earnestly, faithfully pursuing his work of faith, and looking for the speedy coming of the Lord. Bro. Hook, too, was there, as ever kindly sympathizing with every one, and incessantly laboring for the salvation of the people with whom he meets. Bro. H. is a real man of God. We are mentioning more than we at first proposed, but we know not where to stop. The dear ones, they are all enshrined in our hearts, pictured by our eye-instrument faithfully on memory's tablet, just as we saw them with pleasant smiles and friendly associations. Dearer to us indeed is the fellowship of saints, than any earthly association where there is no Christ.

We attended, among other places of interest, the Female Union Convention, and were much interested by the exercises. These sisters have felt called to labor publicly in the gospel, but do not, as Sister A. E. Smith, the President of the Association, stated, claim to be preachers, but, only the "women" who "help," like Anna, and Philip's four daughters, and Priscilla, and Phebe, of gospel distinction. Several gave us the report of their trials in deciding to take this position, deeper and more heart-rending than many brethren who have refused to obey the Lord in preaching the gospel have ever known; and yet they have come before the world after all the trials they have experienced, because they would obey the Lord, even at the cost of life. Among them was Sister Benson, a colored sister, who spoke as the Spirit gave her utterance, thus proving that with God there is no respect of persons, but that sex and nationality, color, or any other human, aristocratic, vain, senseless and wicked distinction is all lost sight of, and all are "one in Christ Jesus."

Interesting cases of sound conversion to God, and long to be remembered baptismal scenes, were of frequent occurrence during the meeting, which closed at length on Sabbath evening with the most touchingly interesting sacramental season that we ever attended. How precious was that occasion around those long tables in the boarding tent! It was specially so as we knew that never again would all that company thus sit together again until the glad day so soon to dawn, when this remembrance of Christ shall terminate in the "marriage supper of the Lamb," and Jesus himself shall be there to sit at the table with his bride—the blood-washed, white-robed church.

Monday morning we said farewell to the loved ones, and each returned to his home to battle on a little longer, and then, oh! then meet with the ransomed immortal hosts, never to part. L. C. MCKINSTRY.

EXTRACT FROM HISTORY.

BRO. GRANT:—I find the following extract, which I give in addition to that given last week. It is from Koch's History of the European Revolutions. C. O.

"All France swarmed with revolutionary committees. Revolutionary armies were dispersed everywhere, dragging the wealthy and well affected to punishment. A law with regard to suspected persons changed all the public edifices into prisons, and filled all the prisons with victims devoted to destruction. To remedy the fall of the assignets, the convention fixed an assessment, called the maximum, on all articles of consumption; a measure which reduced the country to a state of famine. The Queen, Marie Antoinette, was accused before the revolutionary tribunal, and brought to the scaffold (Oct. 16.) Many of the Girondist deputies were arrested on the 2d of June, and met with the same fate. The Duke of Orleans, who was become an object of execration to all parties, perished there in his turn (Nov. 7.) Nobody pitied his fate. Over all the provinces of the kingdom the blood of the innocent flowed in torrents.

The revolutionists did not stop here. To their political crimes they added acts of impiety. They began by abolishing the Gregorian calender and the Christian era, and substituted in its place the era of the Republic to commence on the 22d September, 1793. In a short time, Hebert and Chaumette, two chiefs of the commune, got the convention to decree the abolition of the Christian religion (Nov. 10.) The worship of Reason was substituted in its place, and the church of Notre Dame, at Paris, was profaned by being converted into a temple of atheism. Gobel, the Constitutional Bishop of Paris, and several other ecclesiastics, publicly apostatized from their faith. Plunder and sacrilege of all kinds were committed in the Catholic churches."—Koch pp. 430–1.

☞ If you should live for scores of years, you will never see the day when there will not be as many obstructions to your turning to God as there are now.

WHO REIGNS?—1 Cor. 15: 23-26.

"Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father."

One brother, representing many, asks a series of questions on this portion of truth, which indicate his inextricable embarrassment, and the need there is of further light on this fundamental passage. No answers have been given, to my knowledge; hence, I volunteer.

The confusion and contradiction seems occasioned by assuming that verse 28th is the central and controlling point in the whole passage. Thus the grammar, and the current of thought, and its primal terms and thoughts, are ignored. By consequence, another doctrine is obtained, utterly foreign to that of the apostle; which other doctrine is, that "the end" is located at the point of time where Christ comes the second time, and the dead in Christ shall arise. Let us note the point in the text.

I. The just will rise at Christ's coming for them. v. 23; 1 Thess. 4: 13–17.

II. "Then cometh the end; when he (Christ) shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father." This starts the grand concentral thought. This demonstrates that it is Christ who reigns, and that he who thus reigns is the same who delivers up his kingdom to God even the Father." Such again is the language. "Then . . . the end, when he (the same Christ) shall have . . . put down all rule and all authority and power. For he (the same) must reign (act as King) till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy . . . is death." "Amen and amen."

III. The appointment and purpose of God (Ps. 8: 6; Heb. 2: 5–14), which assures this subjection of all things to Christ, is then asserted. But this does not, in any way, alter the grammar, or terms, or facts of Christ's reign, which had been before asserted. No, no. The all things subjected to Christ, in God's purpose, are all creature things; which, of course, excepts the Creator—"the Father," to whom Christ delivers all up when restored to his, the Father's, will and way of universal dominion.

IV. "The Father judgeth no man," but hath given the whole "judgment unto the Son"; that all "should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father." John 5; Matt. 11: 27; Acts 17: 31; 2 Cor. 5: 10; 2 Tim. 4: 1–8.

V. "The right hand" of God (Ps. 110: 1) denotes not the local position so much as the official station and executive authority of Christ. For it is He (as Adonai, not Jehovah) who judges "among the heathen," who strikes "through kings in the day of his wrath." And whose "people shall be willing in the day of" his "power." He is the true Melchisedek—the Priest-King. Thus the subject is coherent throughout, as given in "the word."

Yours, J. B. COOK.

WILL I BE EVER TRUE?

Will I be ever true to him
Who has my sins forgiven?
He who now intercedes for me
Before God's throne in heaven?
Will I be ever willing here,
When far from friends and home,
To bear my cross, confess his name,
While others from him roam?

Will I, when trials thicken fast,
Regardless of them all,
Trust in Him who died for me,
And obey his every call?
Will I, when persecutions come,
Faint not by the way,
But lean on his Almighty arm,
And to him humbly pray?

O dost thou think that I again
Would e'er my Lord deny;
He who my wanderings once has healed,
Once heard my feeble cry?
Nay, though all the world may try
To draw me from his side,
I'll ne'er forsake his noble cause,
Nor e'er his name deride.

TAKE COURAGE.

Christ has chosen a people for himself that are not idle nor light-minded, but through patience in well-doing seek everlasting life. He has called and chosen us that we should be holy and blameless before him. Since he has chosen a people so holy, let us be holy in all conversation. For we read, "Be ye holy, for I am holy." The time has come that we look about ourselves and take heed how we walk. Let us gird up the loins of our minds with strength, have ardent love towards one another, be of one mind in the great work of the Lord; for in no other way can we promote the cause than by unity in the Spirit. Let our conversation be such as becometh the children of God. Peter says, "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God," that ye may be an example unto all men; and again he says, "Have your conversation honest among the Gentiles, that whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation."

Let us gird on the armor anew, fight manfully the fight of fight, as valiant soldiers of the cross, and let us not be ashamed to confess his word before men, but always remember the words of Christ, "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father in heaven." "Whosoever is ashamed of me and my words, of him will I be ashamed before my Father who is in heaven." "For he that seeketh his life shall lose it; but he that loseth his life for the gospel's sake, shall find it." Paul says it is a faithful saying, if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we deny him he will deny us. Therefore let us not forsake the Lord, for we find nothing but trials and tribulation in this life; but in the one to come a life free from all earthly troubles.

Be patient in tribulation, for it is the true way that leadeth to everlasting life, which has been trodden before us. Our Savior and all the prophets and apostles of God had this same cup to drink; so let us fear not, but be ready for the contest, for God has promised that we shall not be tempted above what we can bear, but will make a way for our escape, and though a mother forsake her child, "I will not forsake you," saith the Lord. Let us not be dismayed, but press on, as did Caleb and Joshua, towards the promised land. Christ says, "My sheep hear my voice, and follow me," and "no man can pluck them out of my hand." It is impossible that God's elect should be deceived. Let the world not separate us from the love of God, but let us be steadfast and unmovable.

With all these blessed promises, let us take new courage, and enter into the work with more determination than ever before. Let us present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service; and be not conformed to this world, but let us be transformed by the renewing of our minds to the perfect will of God. Let us amend our lives, and forsake the world; consider the life of Christ, and follow his example, and ever walk in the holy ordinances of God blameless; and when the King shall come in his glory, we shall be ready to enter in to the joys of our Lord.

IRRITABILITY IN ILLNESS.

Those who are blessed with health never know till they are in turn called upon to suffer, what heroic strength of spirit lies hidden under the mask of silent, uncomplaining suffering; how strong the temptations are to be unreasonable, pettish, or repining; how difficult it is to be grateful, and still more to be amiable, when the irritation of every nerve renders the most skillful attendance irksome, and the dearest presence a burden; when the irritated frame loathes the sunshine of a smile and dreads the tear and the cloud, where all is pain, and weariness, and bitterness! Let the healthy ever lay these things to heart, and while they scrupulously perform their duty—while they reverence the fortitude and patience of the gentle and resigned, let them have pity upon many a poor and querulous sufferer; upon their side let the sick not forget that the reverence and love thus excited are as the elixir of life to their often wearied and taxed attendants; quickening them to exertion by the sweetest of influences, instead of exhausting them with the struggle to perform an ungrateful duty.

GENTLENESS AND ITS REWARD.

Two boys applied for a place in a gentleman's warehouse. One was older than the other, and had some experience in the business. He was a gentleman's son, and well-dressed. The other boy was the only son of a poor widow. His clothes were well mended, but perfectly clean, and his face had a quiet, honest expression, which impressed a stranger favorably. Though the elder lad came recommended from a gentleman he highly esteemed, the merchant decided in favor of the widow's son, quite to the surprise of every one.

The two boys came together at the hour appointed, and the merchant was on his own doorstep at the same time. Just then a poor little shivering child crossed the street, and, as she stepped on the sidewalk, her foot slipped on the icy stones, and she fell in the half-melted snow. The elder boy laughed rudely at her sorry appearance, the water dripping from her thin, ragged clothes, but the child began crying bitterly, and searching for the four pennies she had lost. William, the younger boy, hastened to her side and helped to search for them. Two were found in the snow, the other two were probably in the little icy pool beside the curbstone. William bravely stripped up his sleeve and plunged his hand down into the water, groping about until one of the missing pence was found, but the other seemed hopelessly lost.

"I am afraid that can't be found, little girl," he said pleasantly.

"Then I can't get the bread," sobbed the child, "and mammy and the children will have no supper."

"There is a penny," said William, taking one from a little purse which contained but very few more, and then he made haste to wash his hand in the snow, and dry it on his coarse white handkerchief.

The gentleman had observed it all, and after some conversation with William, said he would be willing to take him for a time on trial. At the end of his month of probation, he had grown so much in favor with all parties, that the engagement was renewed for a year.

Now shall I tell you the secret of his success? It was politeness. The merchant knew that the boy who would be truly polite to a poor ragged child would never be impolite to customers. Remember tat a boy who is uniformly polite in his behavior, has ten chances of success in the world where a rude boy has one.—Christian World.

THE LITTLE STRINGS.

Did you ever see a gutta percha face? And did you ever amuse yourself with pinching it one way, and pulling it another, and seeing what different expressions it will put on?

Now, your little faces are softer than gutta percha, and they are full of the little strings called muscles; and the little muscles pull them one way and another, just according to your feelings. Sometimes you feel grieved or sad, and the little muscles pull your face into a very doleful expression, and we know, by looking at you, how you feel. Sometimes you feel pleased or merry, and the little muscles pull your face into smiles and dimples. But often there are wicked passions at work at the strings. Anger pulls, and oh, what a disagreeable look the face gets on in a minute! Pride pulls the strings, or vanity, or envy, or discontent, or deceit, and each brings its own expression over the face. The worst of it is, that when these passions pull very often, the face does not return to what it was before; but the muscles harden and retain that ugly expression. A face that was very lovely when it was that of a child, has had the passion of anger pulling at it so often, that it always wears a sullen, cross, dissatisfied look. Or, if a man has learned to lie and steal, he cannot make his face that of a truthful, honest man.

Now, dear children, do you want to have pleasant faces that everybody will love to look at? Then do not let the ugly passions get hold of the strings. Put them into the hands of love and charity, and good will and truth, and honesty; and then you will have beautiful faces.

A NOBLE BOY.

The following incident, in the fatal collision of the Niagara with the Postboy on the Mississippi, was related to me by an eye witness:

The two steamers struck, and the Niagara immediately careened, and began to sink. The wildest consternation was at once universal. Ladies rushed to and fro with piercing screams, but no means seemed at hand, and each sought his individual rescue.

At this fearful moment a negro boy—one of the crew—was seen quietly lashing a long and stout rope around his body, at the other end tying a stick of wood in its centre.

Instantly, with this apparatus, he threw himself into the river. Turning upon his back, the stick drifted to the rope's end; and, calling upon two ladies who stood on the edge of the boat—one with a child in her arms—he urged them to spring and catch either end of the stick. Horror-stricken, they hesitated. The negro lay calmly on the waves, and in tones of confidence told them it was their only hope, insisting that he would carry them safely to the shore. For another instant they hesitated; but, gathering courage from his self possession, and realizing that it was their last moment, they took the leap, and both succeeded in grasping the stick.

Turning quickly to prevent their seizing him, the heroic fellow struck out with strong muscles for the land. The rapid current was well-nigh resistless; but he wrestled manfully with his burden. The energy of despair kept them to their hold, and at length their feet touched bottom. Both ladies, with the little one, were saved. Many witnessed this feat. It not only exhibited a cool, unparalleled bravery, but was wholly disinterested, as both ladies were strangers. It should be added that the boy left his own trunk, with his best clothing, and three hundred dollars in money, to sink with the wreck.—Rev. J. W. Alvord.

LITTLE FOLKS, DO YOU TEASE?

Tease your parents and friends? "May I do this?" or, "may I do that?" or, calling "Mother! mother! mother!" till even her ears are weary of your voices.

Some troublesome girls and boys always interrupt older persons when they are talking. They ask questions or make remarks, so that their elders cannot hear what is said. This is very rude and annoying.

Other troublesome ones are always complaining: "It is so hot, I'm almost melted," or else, "Oh, dear! how my feet ache with the cold!" or "I've cut my finger; and how it aches!" and a thousand other complaints. Think a minute, little grumblers. If you live to grow up, you will have, probably, very serious pain to bear. You will very likely be obliged to endure more burning heat and sharper colds. If you complain now, what will become of you then? You need not say that you will be older then, and better able to bear these things. You will not be better able, unless you accustom yourselves to patience now.

Troublesome boys and girls may be amiable, generous and obedient, and yet have very few friends, because their disagreeable ways will make them appear unlovely.

A little leaven of folly and discontent is sure to leaven the whole lump.

A WORD FOR LITTLE GIRLS.

Who is lovely? It is the little girl who drops sweet words, kind remarks, and pleasant smiles, as she passes along; who has a kind word of sympathy for every girl and boy she meets in trouble, and a kind hand to help her companions out of difficulty; who never scolds, never contends, never teases her mother, nor seeks in any way to diminish, but always to increase her happiness.

Would it not please you to pick up a string of pearls, drops of gold, diamonds, or precious stones, as you pass along the street? But these are the precious stones which can never be lost. Take the hand of the friendless. Smile on the sad and dejected. Sympathize with those in trouble. Strive everywhere to diffuse around you sunshine and joy. If you do this, you will be sure to be beloved.—Missouri Republican.

TWO AND ONE.

Two ears and only one mouth have you,
The reason, I think, is clear;
It teaches, my child, that it will not do
To talk about all that you hear.

Two eyes and only one mouth have you;
The reason of this must be,
That you should learn that it will not do
To talk about all you see.

Two hands and only one mouth have you,
And it is worth while repeating;
The two are for work you will have to do,
The one is enough for eating.

THANK YOU.

"Mother," said a little girl, "I gave a poor beggar child a drink of water and a slice of bread, and she said, 'Thank you,' to me so beautifully, and it made me so glad I shall never forget it."

Now children can do a great many things worth a "thank you." Kind offices are everywhere and at all times needed; for there are always sick ones to make happy by kindness; and it goes further towards making home happy than almost anything else. Kind offices also are within everybody's reach, like air and sunshine; and if anybody feels fretful, or discontented, or unthankful, and wants a medicine to cure it, I would say, do a "thank you's" worth of kind offices every hour you live, and you will be cured. It is a wonderful sweetener of life. Try it.

RIGHT PLACE FOR "WONT."

"I wont!" cried little Mary Lee, "I wont"

"'Wont' is not a proper word for my little girl to use," said her mother, looking out of the window where the children were playing on the grass.

"George was trying to coax me up the ladder, when father told me not to go. Was not that a proper time to say 'wont,' mother?" asked Mary. "I said I didn't want to, and he wouldn't mind that."

Mary was right. It was the proper time for "wont."

THE RESURRECTION.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

I.

Lo! a pale and countless throng,
O'er whom ages sweep along,
Silent lie in death's embrace,
Pulseless heart and meekened face;
Silent with dust of rolling years,
Know they neither hopes nor fears;
Thunder's growl or ocean's roar,
Ne'er disturb their slumber more.

II.

One by one earth's myriads glide
On to wither by their side,
Till men's feet where'er they tread,
Press the dust of loved ones dead;
O'er them mailed warriors tramp,
'Round them earthquakes rock and stamp,
Sleeping in their damp beds still,
Heed they not Time's good or ill.

III.

But a voice shall soon be heard,
Death's dark Potter's Fields be stirred,
And a golden trump will ring,
Cower and tremble "terror's King"!
Light and life shall flash and leap
Into all thy caverns deep;
Then thy pointless darts shall fall,
Then the sullen tomb will quail.

IV.

Christ shall come in car of state,
Cherub legions 'round him wait,
Flaming thunders round him roll,
Earth will quake from pole to pole;
Trampling death beneath his feet,
Calling loud in accents sweet,
Wake, ye dead! arise! come home!
Hark! they cry, We come, we come!

V.

Then from grass-grown grave-yards old,
Coral caves and mountains bold,
Desert sands and flowery plain,
Dust will leap and live again;
Then from earth, and sea, and air,
Forms shall spring resplendent, fair;
Then from flame, and stone, and sod,
Saints will rise to meet their God.

VI.

Far beyond death's vale shall stand
All that risen ransomed band,—
Martyr, christian, priest and seer,
All who loved Messiah here;
Gathered home from every clime,
Every age throughout all time,
Meet on Eden's blissful shore,
Meet in glory evermore.

OUR LOSS IN ADAM OUR GAIN IN CHRIST.

BY H. F. CARPENTER.

(Concluded.)

The allegory we have given also illustrates the necessity of Christ's sufferings and death. How could my elder brother, in the allegory, have obtained my release from Mr. Legality, unless he had been willing to suffer a violent death? Even so there was no way to obtain our redemption, save by the death of our Redeemer. Therefore, Christ offered himself, and gave "his life a ransom for many" (lives).

Our allegory further illustrates how the Son of man has power to forgive sins. If A holds a note of $1000 against B, and demands its payment to B's distress, C may pity B exceedingly, but C cannot forgive B his debt, until he first goes to A and purchases A's claim against B. When once C has purchased B's note from A, he has not only delivered B, from A's power, but can now, if he chooses, forgive him all the debt. So, while we were under the law, we must answer for our transgressions to the law. Christ might have pitied, but he could not have forgiven our sins. But, having met the demands of the law against us, and gotten our account into his own hands, he has not only saved us from the law, but can forgive us our entire account if he will. Will he do it? Yes. "Ask and ye shall receive." "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." He "that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." Hence it has come to pass that we all may, by a desire, will and effort of our own, secure an eternal inheritance in the world to come. Thus our loss in Adam is repaired in Christ. If Adam by sin placed himself and us his posterity in the hands of a violated law, which demanded our death, our return to dust, so that no desire, will, or effort of our own could save us, Christ hath redeemed us from that law, so that it is now possible, by our own desire, will and effort exercised in receiving Christ, to receive the adoption of sons. "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ;" "to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away."*

The third item of our loss in Adam has been already intimated, if not expressed. We all lost life in Adam. We have before spoken of Adam's violation of law, as bringing upon himself and upon us, his posterity, death. When we say death, we use the term not in a theological sense, but in a Bible sense. Death in theology means a variety of things; indeed, almost any thing that a fanciful mind may conjecture. Theology will have it that the death threatened Adam was at once a spiritual death, a temporal death, and an eternal death. It forgets that the same death which came into the world by Adam's sin passed upon all men (Rom. 5: 12); so that if it was an eternal death, none can ever be saved; for there is no salvation from an eternal death, when once passed upon all men. A death from which one can be rescued is not an eternal death. Theology sometimes forgets that, "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive;" so that, if the Adamic death be a spiritual one, then all are to be made alive spiritually in Christ; and thus universal salvation must follow, although contrary to the whole tenor of the Scriptures. But where is the evidence that a threefold death was intended, in the sentence, "Thou shalt surely die?" Is there any thing in the etymology of the term "die" that suggests such a latitude of meaning? Ought not the penalties of law to be expressed in simple, unmistakable terms? Has the Maker of this first law to man ever explained its penalty in any such threefold sense? Not at all. On the contrary, when he comes to pronounce the sentence upon the criminal in the strongest terms, he simply says, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it thou wast taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Here, then, is God's most full and emphatic declaration of the penalty. Who shall dare add severity to a sentence thus divinely expressed?

Such was the death which Adam brought upon himself and upon us,—a something just the opposite of his creation. In his creation, all that constituthd him man came from dust. "The Lord God formed MAN of the dust," and addressing him when formed, he said, "Dust thou art." In death, all that constitutes man returns to dust,—"Unto dust shalt THOU return." Hence the dead, even God's dear saints, are spoken of always as being in the dust, and never as being in heaven, or elsewhere. David has not ascended into the heavens (Acts 3: 34), but having served "his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption."—Acts 13: 36.

When the prophet of God would call the holy men of old, he calls them not from heaven, but cries, "Awake and sing, ye that dwell IN DUST."—Isa. 24: 19. They shall not be called in vain, for when Michael shall stand up, that great prince, then "many of them that sleep in the dust shall awake."—Dan. 12: 2). In man's creation, his life, his quickening breath alone, came from God (Gen. 2: 7); and in his death, this, and only this same "spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. 12: 7. Thus it plainly appears that what takes place in man's death is just the opposite of what took place at his creation. Such a death awaits us all.

"It is appointed unto men once to die." Only those living when Jesus returns the second time, who are righteous, will escape. This death which bears us to the tomb comes not to punish us for our sins, except as hastened by special judgments from God. The babe dies before sin has defiled it. The righteous die, whose sins are all forgiven. This death came upon us through Adam. His sin brought mortality upon him, and we inherited it from him. Among our losses in Adam must therefore be reckoned our loss of this temporal life. This life shall be recovered again in Christ. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Man shall live again. So David believed and testified. "Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust." Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created."—Psa. 104: 29, 30.

"There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust."—Acts 24: 15. For "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29.

Reader, is it a thing "incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" Cannot he who first formed man of dust, re-form him from the same? Has he, who had power over the clay to fashion it into man, lost that power? Doth he not know where each particle of man's scattered dust reposeth? and can he not summon it, as at the first, to take its allotted place in the constitution of the same man it once helped to form? Hath he no care nor love for the dust which he once molded into his own likeness? Why, then, did he cause many bodies of the saints to arise after Jesus' resurrection? Why, then, was a lifeless Lazarus and a widow's son remembered? Why, then, did he not suffer his Holy One to see corruption? Why, then, concerning the millions entombed in earth does he say, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death?"—Hosea 13: 14. Let us confess "the Scriptures," and "the power of God"; for an historical event of the most distant future is already chronicled in these words,—"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to his works." Thus the life of all our race, lost in Adam, shall be restored in Christ; for he is "the resurrection and the life."

I have now endeavored to unfold the Scripture which introduce these pages to your attention. I assured you at the outset that it would set before us the atoning work of Christ, and exhibit the necessity for his sufferings and death. Has it failed to do so? Has it not also reminded us of the goodness and mercy of God, who gave his only begotten Son, rather than leave us all to perish in the Adamic sin, as in justice he might have done? It has presented Christ as "the Savior of all men" from the woful consequences of primeval transgression, and the Restorer to all of blessings lost in Adam. In doing this, has it not revealed to us our need of Christ, as something more than a repairer of our losses by original sin? If we would inherit the "world to come," must we not be holy? God allowed man to bring sin into this world, and behold the result! Think you he will allow man to carry sin into the "world to come," to ruin that as he has ruined this? Would you wish to carry sin there, knowing that it would introduce the same evils that it has brought in its train here? No; you would not, unless you were a fiend; neither would God suffer you if you would. Without holiness, "no man shall see the Lord."

Let me speak a word of the "world to come." There was a world before the flood, —"the earth standing out of the water and in the water." But "the world that was then being overflowed with water perished" (2 Pet. 3: 5, 6). There is "this present world" (2 Tim. 4: 10); "but the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."—2 Pet. 3: 7. "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom (this earth) all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."—Matt. 13: 41, 42, 43. When this takes place, then the future world will appear. As Peter saith, "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Pet. 3: 13. Thus Milton wrote, saying,—

"The earth shall burn, and from her ashes spring
New heavens and earth, wherein the just shall reign."

This is what is meant by the "world to come." It is the future condition of this earth, when purified from sin, and filled with the glory of God. Does such an idea seem too gross? Will earth thus changed be too gross a place for the saint's eternal home? How will it differ from heaven itself? The God of heaven is to dwell here. "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men."—Rev. 21: 3. Christ is to be here. "The throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it."—Rev. 22: 3. The city of God shall be here. "And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God, out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Rev. 21: 2. The angels of God will be here. "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints."—Jude 14. The glory of God shall be here. "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father."—Matt. 14: 27. Since, therefore, earth is yet to become fit for the tabernacle of God and the Lamb, and all the holy angels, shall it not be fit for the eternal home of the saints? Yes, none but the righteous shall inherit it; and if we would enjoy the presence of the Lord God and the Lamb, then we must be holy.

We have before seen that holiness is no part of our loss in Adam. Hence, we need Christ as something more than a repairer of our losses. When, in the resurrection, we stand with all these repaired, we may stand then without holiness. It must be sought in Christ. He alone can forgive our sins. His blood alone "cleanseth us from all sin." Come to him, and let him become unto you "Wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."

We have before seen, also, that eternal life and perfect happiness were no part of our loss in Adam; so that, although we may stand at the resurrection free from any loss through our first parent, we may stand there without any prospect of any endless life, or fullness of joy. By nature, we have none of us any eternal life abiding in us. The life we now have is of "few days," and full of trouble. "For what is our life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away."—James 4: 14. Eternal life is the gift of God. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 4: 23. Christ will bestow this gift upon none but his true "friends." "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life."—John 10: 27, 28. Therefore, "he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see (everlasting) life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John 3: 36. Doth it not, therefore, plainly appear, that while we may be at the judgment seat of Christ with the wound made upon us by Adam all healed, we may, nevertheless, if we neglect Jesus, stand there without any prospect of eternal salvation? For while Christ is the "Savior of all men" from the Adamic fall, he is "the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him," and to them alone. At the judgment, we are to meet no longer the consequences of Adamic sin, but every man must "give account of himself to God" (Rom. 14: 12); "who will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life; but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish."—Rom. 2: 6, 7, 8, 9. That day is the harvest time, for the "harvest is the end of the world." Then every man shall reap whatsoever he has sown in this life. "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. 6: 8. With such a destiny to shun, and such a harvest to secure, need we longer wonder at the apostle, as he says, "I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith."—Phil. 3: 8, 9.

Reader, where shall we appear at that day? "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. 25: 34. Shall we stand with those happy ones? "Then shall he say unto them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Shall we stand with these lost ones? Vow with me to-day, to refuse no longer "him that speaketh from heaven," who hath redeemed us from under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. Can we longer refuse Him who so willingly died to make our adoption as the sons of God possible? Let us welcome him to our hearts, and confess him before men as our only hope. For "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."—John 1: 12. Let us receive him, "that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."—1 John 2: 28. Let us delay no longer, for the time hasteth, when, "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Then, if numbered among the dead, may our resurrection be not a resurrection unto damnation, but unto everlasting life; that having known here loss in Adam, we may there know eternal gain in Christ.

* Note. Some one may inquire how God could permit a law of his to be set aside? We answer, he permits it just as a wise master builder suffers a staging to be taken away when the house is completed. It has served its purpose, and is no longer required. Its last office was "to bring in everlasting righteousness" (Dan. 9); and this accomplished in Christ, its mission was fulfilled, and it could be dismissed with honor as the schoolmaster that had completed his term of service.

BABYLON AND HER FALL.

Bro. White:—I have selected the above heading as a subject for a few remarks, and shall endeavor to show that the position held by S. D. Adventists concerning the second angel's message is both inconsistent and unscriptural. I would remark, first, that one very prominent characteristic of our preachers in lecturing upon this message is, to give the definition of the term Babylon, viz: mixture, or confusion, and then proceed to make the application direct to the religious sects of our land, as constituting the Babylon of the Revelation. Now I do not object to any one's giving the definition of the term, by any means. I am willing it should have all due weight in the matter. But I do object to making it the criterion by which to determine what is meant by the Babylon of the Apocalypse.

If we apply the term Babylon to whatever and wherever we find confusion, we shall have a score of Babylons; for we find confusion in the political, as well as the religious world. But we were not left to mere guess-work in this matter. We are not left to decide so important a point from a mere signification of the term. The angel has given us, I think, a very clear exposition, showing us in few words what is meant by the term Babylon. In chap. 14: 8, it is announced that "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city," etc. Here we have another term given as expressive of the same thing. Babylon, or that great city, is fallen. Neither are we left to guess what is meant by that great city, for we are plainly told in ch. 17 that the "woman whom thou sawest is that great city." Now, then, the angel has told us in few words what Babylon is, without stopping to inform us from what the term originated, or to give us the signification thereof. He has told us that the great city is Babylon, and the woman is that great city. Now if we can ascertain what the woman symbolizes, then the whole mystery is made clear.

According to the views of S. D. Adventists, the woman should symbolize, in part at least, the Protestant churches of the nineteenth century. Says Bro. J. N. Andrews in his work on the three messages (p. 44), "Babylon has made all the nations drunken with her wine; it can therefore symbolize nothing less than the universal worldly church." This is virtually saying that the universal worldly church of all nations has fallen, because she made all nations drink of her wine, etc., which would be perfect nonsense. But the angel did not leave John, neither has he us, in the dark relative to this symbol, but has given us in chap. 17 a clear explanation of what power is symbolized by the woman sitting upon the scarlet-colored beast. No one that has not a theory to maintain, will attempt for a moment to argue that the woman is a symbol of Protestantism or any part thereof. We think it must appear evident to all that the woman seated upon the scarlet-colored beast, holding a golden cup in her hand, is a symbol of the Roman or Papal church. Prophetic expositors have held this view for centuries, as will appear from the following testimony of one of the early reformers:—

"Thus did the grand and holy doctrine of justification by faith gladden Savonarola's heart. In vain did the presidents of the churches oppose him. He knew that the oracles of God were far above the visible church, and that he must proclaim these oracles, with the aid of the church, without it, or even in spite of it. Fly, cried he, fly far from Babylon; and it was Rome that he thus designated, and Rome ere long replied in her usual manner. In 1497 the infamous Alexander VI. issued a brief against him, and in 1898 torture and the stake terminated this reformer's life."—D'Aubigne's Hist.

From the above testimony we learn that the reformers not only believed the Papal church to be the Babylon of the Apocalypse, but they raised the cry to flee from or come out of her. But, says the objector, we are willing to admit that the Catholic church is the mother, but where are the daughters? The woman had upon her forehead a name written, "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots," etc. Now, says the objector, where are the harlot daughters? I remark, the prophecy under consideration has direct reference to the mother herself. It is the mother that is fallen, is fallen. Should we find a prophecy relating to the daughters, it will then be time to consider it. But, says the objector, the Papal church never has fallen, morally; she always was corrupt, therefore could not fall. We will let the following testimony from the great reformer settle this point:—

"The church had fallen, because the great doctrine of justification by faith in the Savior had been taken away from her. It was necessary, therefore, before she could rise again, that this doctrine should be restored to her. As soon as this fundamental truth should be re-established in Christendom, all the errors and observances that had taken its place, all the multitude of saints, of works, penances, masses, indulgences, etc., would disappear." D'Aubigne.

This brings us to notice, secondly, the reason or cause of Babylon's fall. We now invite the attention of the reader while we contrast man's exposition on this point with that of the angel. Babylon holds in her hand a golden cup full of abominations, and filthiness of her fornication, which are errors and false doctrines, as all will admit—such as penances, masses, indulgences, etc. In consequence of propagating these errors and false doctrines, she fell from the favor of God. Now mark, while we contrast the two expositions in the following manner:—

The Angel's Exposition. Rev. 14: 8; 3.	S. D. Adventist Exposition.
Babylon is fallen, is fallen, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.	Babylon is fallen, is fallen, because she rejected the first angel's message.

How is this? How does it happen that there is such a wide difference in the above expositions? Would there not be a vast difference, for instance, between a liquor vender dealing out and causing his customers to become intoxicated from the effects of the cup, on the one hand, and his rejecting some important message on the other? We leave the reader to decide as to the harmony that exists between man's exposition and that given by the angel. For our own part we think something must be out of joint. But, continues the objector, we must be right in our application of the second angel's message, for it is a fact that the churches rejected the first message and are in a fallen state, and God's people have come out of them. I remark, this may be all strictly true, and yet have nothing to do with the second angel's message. But it is argued, forasmuch as the first message belongs down here, and had its fulfillment in the proclamation of the Advent doctrine; and as the second angel follows the first, of course we must be right in our exposition.

As it regards the first message, it was not our purpose to speak at the present time. We would just say, however, that if the everlasting gospel of Rev. 19: 6 is synonymous with the gospel of the kingdom, Matt. 24: 14, as is claimed, then the first angel's message dates back more than eighteen hundred years, as the following texts abundantly prove: Matt. 4: 23; 9: 35; Mark 1: 14.

We object to the view that the gospel of the kingdom, as brought to view in Matt. 24, is a particular message in the gospel, to be given at a particular time, as is claimed. We understand that the gospel of the kingdom is nothing more nor less than the gospel in the general acceptation of the term. This is proved from Mark's testimony on this point. Matthew says this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, etc. Mark says, "And the gospel must first be published among all nations." He speaks of it in the general acceptation of the term, "the gospel."

Thus we find that the gospel, as the gospel of the kingdom (as the kingdom is embraced in, and is a part of the gospel), has been preached over eighteen hundred years. Hence if it be true that the everlasting gospel, as brought to view in the first angel's message, is synonymous with the gospel of the kingdom; then we must look further back than the proclamation of the Advent doctrine for the voice of this angel. Perhaps we shall speak more at length on this message hereafter. W. H. Ball.

WHICH? JESUS, OR THE OLD MAN?

In these times of declension, when so many follow Christ at a distance, it does one good to sit down and examine the "first principles" of the gospel, and look the matter all over, and see if his feet are firmly on the rock.

We find there the two men—Adam and Jesus. "The old man" and "the new man." Two natures. The nature of the old, and the nature of the new. The gospel finds man with the old nature, and offers him the new, and promises grace to overcome the old, and so enable him to "sow to the Spirit, and of the Spirit reap life everlasting." But this work of sowing is not instantaneous. It requires a whole life long to finish the work. Until evil is extirpated, or the "old man" is chased out of the world, we shall have this "old man" to contend with, and must overcome. How many lose sight of this "first principle," and say, because they have human natures, they must act it out; and when they give vent to their passions in a general scold, they apologize by saying, "It's my way, and I can't help it." Help it, God bless you, you can help it. Jesus says his "grace is sufficient," and you dishonor him when you say you can't help doing what he has told you not to do.

Jesus requires us to love our enemies. The "old man" says, Hate them. Jesus says, Do them good. The "old man" says, Evil for evil. But, says one, "you would not have a man stand still and be abused, and not resent it, would you?" Jesus says, "Resist not evil." "Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." Well, says one, "I wont stand still and have a man strike me in the face, or spit on me, not I." I don't suppose you will, but Jesus did, and thus overcame, and commands us to do the same.

The "old man" does not bear injury, wrongs, or abuses, and so we hear men say, "I guess I know enough to resent an insult yet." Well, suppose you do feel insulted, how will you better matters? "By letting him alone." Well, but don't Jesus say do good to your enemies? "I don't care, I can't bear every thing." Yes, you can, if you want to. Jesus has commanded, and promised grace to perform, and I think it is the best way, after all, to do just as Jesus says, even if the "old man" does have to come under; and so, until I see some better way, I will try to love my enemies, and do them good. I believe they will think more of Jesus' religion that I profess, if I try hard to carry it out.

Would it not be better when any one does us an injury, to try a little harder to do them good, even if we have been doing seemingly all we could for them, and thus heap coals of fire on their heads, and try to burn them out? I believe it would, and, God helping me, I will try. This is only carrying out some of the "first principles" of the "gospel of peace." I believe they are the best principles in the world yet, even if so many do try to justify themselves by the deeds of the law.

O! how blessed, if these principles were more fully carried out by professors. What peace in families, in churches, in neighborhoods, it would bring. How sinners would tremble. How they would cry, "What shall I do to be saved?" How brethren in the church would come together. How they would confess their faults one to another. What blessed results would follow. I pray God to stir up his waiting ones to follow these "first principles." Much more I would like to say, but enough for this time. I am in favor of short articles. A. P. Moore.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

Under the head of "Early Experiences," I gave a sketch of my religious history up to the year 1843. About a month after my conversion, I went to North Scituate, R. I., to visit my brother. While there, I heard several lectures on the subject of the time of the Lord's coming. I was glad to believe that the end was near, and the evidence seemed clear that 1843 was the year of Jubilee. In April, we went to live in Worcester, Mass., and I attended a meeting with believers in the Second Advent a few times, when my adopted father forbade my going to such meetings any more. I then went to the Methodist meeting, and he said I should not go there any more, but gave me the privilege of attending the Baptist meeting. Very soon he gave the screws another turn, and declared that I should go with him to the Universalist meeting. This seemed to me to be going too far. I prayed over the subject, and it did not seem to me my duty to remain with him under such circumstances.

On the 18th of May, 1843, I left Worcester, and staid some time in Weare, N. H. In August, I again visited my brother in R. I. During all this season, I had but few opportunities of hearing anything favorable to the views I had embraced; and by degrees I lost my confidence, and wandered from the narrow path, with only occasional struggles to get out of the "slough of despond." I remained in a backslidden state for several years; though I do not think I was ever hardened against the truth, but was ready to listen to any one who could instruct me, or lead me in the right way. Early in the year 1850 I again found peace, and set out anew to lead a devout life. But I had lost the company of all who held to the immediate personal coming of Jesus; and, in truth, I had never but scanty opportunities of associating with this people. The only church in the place where I then lived (Bridgewater, Mass.,) which was anything like a true church, was the Congregational. I attended meetings with this people, and joined that church on the thirtieth of June. If time and space permitted, I could show the state of my mind and heart at this time, by extracts from my journal, in which I kept an account of my experience. I was striving, struggling, longing and panting after entire freedom from sin; yet, as it were, in the dark, feeling my way without guides, who could see and show me the right way.

Up to this time, I think I never heard any one advocate the doctrine of holiness. The highest attainable standard held up before me was "sinning and repenting." It was held to be impossible to live a single day without sin. The difference between the sinner and the christian was thus stated: "A christian sins often; a sinner sins always." Under such influences, I was striving to be freed from sin. It did not seem to me that sin was requisite to our present life; though some affirmed that we could not live here, but should be taken immediately to heaven, if we could be made entirely clean, holy, pure in heart. The enemy tries to keep the essential truth from us, and seems in many cases to succeed strangely.

A year or two after leaving Bridgewater, I became greatly interested in evening meetings with the Methodists in Webster. I was employed at that time by one of the leading members of the M. E. church. I attended meeting almost every evening, and enjoyed a great degree of liberty in speaking and praying. One day my employer said to me, "You are very near in the state of perfect love." This was a new doctrine to me. Mr. S. lent me a book on that subject, and held up the view that such a state was attainable; but he did not seem to think it re-tainable; as he said most who found the blessing lost it again. But I resolved to venture all upon God and plunged boldly into the ocean of his boundless love. This is joy. This is a foretaste of endless bliss. Reader, pray that you and I may constantly enjoy this blessing.

ERROR READILY RECEIVED.

It is surprising to me, sometimes, when I look upon the broad field of this world, and witness the conflict between error and truth, to see how much more readily error is received than truth. The world loves error and darkness; but those who receive it so readily are not the devotees of this world alone. A large majority of the professed followers of the Messiah are drifting in this strange current. And yet it is not strange in one sense; for the devil loves and courts popularity, and takes advantage of it in every way to dupe those who are firmly rooted in tradition.

The opponents of christianity love darkness, because the light of the gospel would dissolve their power; for their power lies in darkness. They are wilfully ignorant. The truth is spread before them, but they shut their eyes to it, because they love and obey their Satanic master. And it is one of Satan's most ingenious modes of combating religion to keep his votaries in ignorance of it. Hence those who are prejudiced will receive error more readily without the evidence, than truth (or the word of God) with all the evidence of Revelation.

When some travelers in Asia wrote home that the Chinese record made the world many thousand years older than the Mosaic history does, a shout of triumph went up from the sceptic and infidel ranks. The mere assumption was sufficient. And if any one said, "Do not be hasty in your conclusions," they turned a deaf ear to the admonition, and left with an air of confidence. After a while, some items were published from Chinese history, stating that they tell the name of their first king, which reigned in the earth, as corresponding with the word Noah; and that the time they ascribe for his reign corresponds with the age of Noah. But infidels turned wilfully from these facts, and still continue their tirade upon the inspired book. And this is the way in which infidelity still keeps the field; by casting aside all evidence of revealed truth, and clinging in desperate agony to wrong. Thus it is that assumption bears a heavier weight with unbelievers than all the massive evidence from God's word on the other side.

But, while evil doers receive error more readily than truth, it is surprising that professed followers of light should tread the same path. But such, nevertheless, is the case. Approach an immortal-soulist with the word of God, and he flies to tradition for his defense, and appeals to the popularity of the doctrine in vindication of its truthfulness. The smallest microscopic evidence in its defense, from tradition, is received more readily than God's plain, emphatic word, that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." The philosophical evidences from nature to prove the immortality of man in virtue of his original nature, is clung to more tenaciously than the inspired declaration that "God only hath immortality." Indeed, they shut their eyes to such and similar declarations of truth, and cling desperately to the fables of tradition. Oh, what a pity that young men with promising intellects should thus stand opposed to the truth, and a dishonor to God; for who can honor God by believing that they possess immortal life in virtue of their nature, thus leaving God out of the question? Christ is our life; when he shall appear we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. We honor Christ only by relying upon him for eternal life.

We often see the truth of that old saying, "None are so blind as those who wont see." This is the case of the devotees of Socrates and Plato. The more intense the darkness, the more devoted are they to the superstitions of heathen times, and the Satanic fables of immortal-soulism.

Do we wonder why men adhere to error so strongly, when they will not accept the whole word of God? I do not wonder that men who only take a part of the Bible, and finish their creed from tradition, should fall into all sorts of absurdities. I do not wonder they fall into Spiritualism, and all the minor evils. And in the broad field of error, with the Bible shield cast aside, I do not wonder that we have "universal restorationists."

Then, what do these facts teach us? We learn that the Bible, as a harmonizing whole, is our only safe refuge in these days of error and peril. Its glorious truths are the only things that will shield us from the fiery darts of the enemy. Tradition has always been one of Satan's most powerful elements of war; and he has used it successfully. Popularity is another of his fiery darts. Immortal-soul theology contains nothing offending to the world; hence it is very popular. The most fashionable worldling you can find believes it. The most inveterate slave to the devil believes it, while he denounces the Bible. And why? Because it is popular. The unadulterated truths of the Bible—the plain declarations of God are not popular. They never have been, and never will be; because they condemn the world and reveal the doom of the ungodly. He who honestly clings to truth will not be on the popular side. But, thank God, he will be on the right side.

Then, dear brethren, let us be on the right side, and established in the faith. We can easily find the right side. If our doctrine contradicts God's word in any particular, we may be sure we are wrong. Let us have more Bible doctrine, and less tradition. Let us have more vital religion, and less superstition; then we shall have our armor on to resist error. Let us all pray that we enter not into temptation. Wm. H. Spencer.

OUR COUNTRY SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Shall they be suspended through the winter?

The time is at hand when many, if not most of our country Sunday Schools, will think of suspending during the cold season. Before deciding to do so, we trust that those parents, superintendents, and teachers who are interested, will consider a few reasons why they should not be discontinued.

1. It is not necessary. If children, even in the coldest winter weather, will go cheerfully, six days in the week to a district school, they will go just as cheerfully one day in the week to Sunday School. "But the going is often bad." Well, suppose it is. They can often get a ride. If the bad going is not allowed to keep them from spelling-schools and pleasure-parties, why should it from the Sabbath school? They will go, in spite of the cold and mud, if the teachers will.

2. It is inconvenient. Suspend your Sunday School at the opening of every winter, and, in the spring, you will have the whole work of re-organizing to do over again:—the canvass for scholars—selection of teachers—formation of classes—re-arrangement of the library, re-subscription for the Sunday School paper—and all the other labor of getting the rusty machinery re-started. It will be much easier, save much time and labor, and be much better for the interest and prosperity of the school, to continue through the whole year, than to suspend for the winter, and then endeavor to resuscitate. The attendance will be larger, the interest greater, and far more work will be done for the Master and good to the children.

3. It is unwise. Winter is the best part of the year for study. The long evenings around the fireside afford an opportunity not enjoyed in the summer for Bible study and preparation of the Sunday lesson. It is the most favorable season of the year for imparting and acquiring Scripture knowledge and making religious impressions. Can we, without the disapproval of the Great Teacher, let it pass unimproved?

4. It is wrong. We have no time to waste. The season to work here for Jesus and for the conversion of the young is short. There is much to be done. What we do must be done quickly. Satan and his agents are at work, and more actively in the winter than in the summer, with numberless temptations to the young,—sleighrides, pleasure parties, balls, exhibitions, concerts, and other worldly and dissipating amusements, and with novels and novel-papers for the leisure evenings, and in too many instances with poisonous reading, by stealth, corrupting and demoralizing the minds of the sons and daughters. And shall we, for a little cold or mud, in the best season of the year for christian labor, while the servants of evil are so busily at work, stand still in idleness and inaction, close the Sunday School, drive out the children and youth from its christianizing influence, lock up the religious reading in the library, suspend the Sunday School paper, and give up the whole field to the devil and his agents? Can we do so and be blameless?

SATAN'S SNARES.

As all divisions, hatred, variance, unkindness in word or feeling among the disciples of Jesus are wrong, unchristian, and calculated to lead people to destruction; of course Satan will spare no effort to produce these wicked feelings. When we look over the world at the present time, we see the fruits of his works on every hand. During the past few years his success has been truly alarming. One of his most successful ways of destroying the church of Christ is when he succeeds in getting good men to oppose an evil with a wrong spirit, or harsh words. It often happens that a professed follower of Jesus gets out of the way; and that a good brother, who sees the fault, instead of following the Bible instruction to "restore such an one in the spirit of meekness," (Gal. 6: 1,) says hard things about this erring one, and shuns him, refusing to have anything to do with him, because he will not fellowship a man who does such things. By this course the erring is discouraged from making an effort to reform, because he has no one to encourage him, or give him a friendly hand to keep him out of his troubles. Whereas, if his brother had only treated him with a kind, meek spirit, as the word of the Lord requires, he might have escaped from the hands of the devil. But the cold, unkind spirit with which he was met by his christian brother, only served to lead him further away from the Lord. This was just what Satan designed; and is one of his most successful ways of breaking up churches, and making backsliders.

One good man, opposing evil with an unkind spirit, will do more than many sinners towards wounding and destroying the cause of Christ. And yet the one who is doing it may be perfectly conscientious, and would not knowingly injure any man. In this we see one of Satan's most successful snares. All should remember that we are required to "overcome evil with good," which is the only way to be successful.

CHANGING TIMES AND LAWS.

After "the WHOLE WORLD" was given to the Pope of Rome, as "his diocese, in 607, then he would "think to change times and laws" (Dan. 7: 25.) This has been repeatedly done since that time. It was by the authority of the Pope that "old style" was changed to "new style" and eleven days thrown away. This power has changed dates whenever it pleased. The last instance took place this year, when the present Pope changed the date of the death of St. Peter from A. D. 66 to A. D. 67, so that he could have the great centennial feast at Rome next year (1867), instead of this year, as he first arranged some two years since. It is supposed he saw reasons why the events of this year would not favor such a gathering, and consequently occasion "to change" the time. He has now appointed the 28th of next June as the time to celebrate the greatest feast ever held at Rome; claiming it will be just 1800 years since the death of St. Peter; whereas, the best authority puts his death in A. D. 66, which was adopted by the church of Rome, till Pope Pius IX. saw fit to change the time.

That this "little horn" power has changed "laws," all know who have ever read its history. This Roman woman has repeatedly made laws directly the opposite of the laws of the Lord. Indeed, almost its whole code of moral laws consists in a change of the laws of God. It is a law with this woman, that the priests can pardon sins; that the Virgin Mary is our intercessor, that souls can be prayed out of purgatory for money, etc., etc. We think this power "to change times and laws," was received by the decree of Phocas in A. D. 607, and will end in 1867.

"DAWN OF A NEW ERA."

We have come to a period in the history of this world when political men, who pay little or no attention to the prophetic Scriptures, are satisfied that some great event is just at hand. They speak of it as "the dawn of a new era." The impression is deep seated in the hearts of many worldly men, that the present state of things cannot continue long. They do not like to believe that Jesus is coming, because they are not ready for his appearance. They prefer to believe that a golden age is about to dawn by means of human agency; but they can see no approach towards such a fabled time of peace and purity as has been preached to them for the last half century. On this account, they are perplexed to determine what the great event is that is about to open. If they would only turn to the prophecies the whole matter would be plain. Then they might see that we are almost to an event greater than any that has ever transpired since the creation of the world,—the setting up of the everlasting kingdom of God and his Son Jesus. Praise the Lord for the "blessed hope."

The special correspondent of the Boston Journal wrote from London, Sept. 5th, and said:—

"Listen to the lamentations of the cardinals and priests of Rome, as found in their organ, the Monde: 'We cannot see,' says the editor, 'what is to prevent the Italian revolution from ascending the capital. France abandons Rome, Austria makes advances to Victor Emmanuel, all the Catholic powers become more and more entangled in revolutionary embarrassments under the pretext of escaping from the embarrassments of the Roman question. Christian powers seem more disposed to ally themselves with the revolution than to rise in defense of the Holy Father of the Catholic church. It is quite natural that the Cialdinis, Ricasolis and Garibaldis should prepare their moral means for taking possession of it. The only power the revolutionists have to fear is God. But what is God to the eyes of certain persons in high places? A child's scarecrow. All of this is terrible, but it is true.'

This wail is extorted because Louis Napoleon is about to withdraw the French troops now in Rome. When that is accomplished then comes the dawn of a new era. His Holiness will no longer have the power to prohibit freedom of speech or action. Civil and religious liberty begins when the last French soldier leaves the Papal dominions. Significant are the signs of the times. In 1859 the priests stole a child of the Mortar family at Bologna, baptized it into the Roman faith, which occurrence made a great sensation not only in the religious world, at that time, but I believe it was made the subject of diplomatic correspondence on the part of England.

A play with that event for a text was produced at the time in the theatres, but was suppressed by the Austrian authorities; but now the Austrians are gone, and no sooner have they departed than the play is reproduced and acted nightly to the delight of the enfranchised Italians, who vociferously applaud the finale—a grand scene where the Pope leaves his chair and is succeeded by Victor Emanuel.

Venetia is enfranchised. For forty years she has been under the Austrian lash, and now Louis Napoleon decided that as Austria has ceded Venetia to France, that the people of that ancient Republic shall each man for himself decide what shall be the future political status. That they will vote to become a portion of Italy no one doubts. Neither is it doubtful as to what will be the future of Rome. Politically, she is to be stripped of all power. The time evidently is at hand when Protestant colporteurs, Bible sellers and tract distributors will have the same freedom in Rome that Rome has had the world over in all ages.

So Liberty moves in its glorious march. How inspiring to contemplate the advance! Thanks and honor to those heroes who stemmed the tide of despotism at Gettysburg, and rescued Freedom in that trying hour."

FASHION.

It is heart-sickening to witness the fashionable immodesty of dress worn at the present day by the women in this country. Where, O where are the independent women, who have courage to follow Christ in "modest apparel," and trample under their feet the immodest fashions imposed upon the people by Satan's pimps of Paris? In the name of all that is pure and holy we would entreat the professed disciples of Jesus, especially those who are looking for his speedy coming, to take a bold stand against the unchristian fashions of the day. Christianity appears the best in modest, plain, simple attire, unadorned by the gewgaws of silly fashions.

The following from the New York Post is worthy of consideration:—

"Some few years ago a French dancer appeared in New York, whose style was then considered so immoral that very few church-going people would appear in her presence. Last Sunday I attended a fashionable church, and there saw that three-fourths of the ladies, in entering their pews, made an exposure which might even shame the French dancer. It is not only in going up door steps, getting into and out of street cars, omnibuses, carriages, ascending stairs, etc., that the morals of the present day are being impaired. Can ladies expose themselves in their present style of dress without impairing their delicacy?"

MODERN METHODISM.

The following is from an English paper:—

"As an organized ecclesiasticism, Methodism was never so strong as it is to-day. Never, probably, could it make a fairer show in the flesh than in the members of the conference now sitting at Leeds. Never had it so many and never such fine chapels. And yet, as a peculiar development of religious life, its force is almost spent. Its present prosperity is the prosperity of a well-organized and well-managed religious corporation, little different from others about it—not, as in its early days, the irresistible growth of a contagious and peculiar fervor. Its own friends are beginning to investigate its decline. . . . The old responses of 'amen' and 'glory' are frowned upon in the Methodist first circles. Such ways were all very well in the plain, old-fashioned preaching places, but who could feel free to call out 'Hallelujah' in a church of finest modern gothic? Prayer-meetings are no longer attended as they used to be, the class meetings do not muster as formerly, and many men who cannot well be set aside, decline to join as church members.' In fact, it is John the Baptist, with his rough dress of camel's hair and his leathern girdle laid aside, and sedulously attired in the ordinary costume of the period. True, the costume of the period is quite unobjectionable, yet somehow it does not suit John the Baptist; and so Methodism, touched with ecclesiastical gentility, strikes us as altogether a lower order of thing than the old rough, vehement Methodism which sought out and saved the perishing masses in the last century."

Compare the foregoing with "something to think about." It seems strange that any one should be so blinded by Satan's wiles as to believe that the world is growing better; or that the church, as a body, is approaching a higher standard in divine life. The "form of godliness" remains, but the "power" is rapidly departing. It is high time for the faithful to sound the alarm.

"A NEW PEACE MOVEMENT."

In the Banner of Light, for Oct. 6th, 1866, we find an article with the above heading, and the following remarks on the subject:—

"A new league, designed to embrace the friends of peace in Europe, and to further efforts for breaking down the system of standing armies, has been formed at Antwerp, and is holding its meetings alternately at Antwerp and Paris. One of the principal leaders in the movement is M. Edmond Pontonie, who has recently gained some notoriety by his writings upon political economy, for the French journals. Branches of the league are to be formed in all the principal towns in Europe, and the originators of the movement will spare no pains to make a successful crusade against wars and battles. This is a grand idea, and we hope the best minds in the world will do all that may lie in their power to bring the league into successful working order. We have had quite enough of human slaughter upon the battle-field. That innocent, unoffending people should be massacred by the wholesale, on account of the heated blood of a few demagogues, whether of the priest-craft or kingcraft school, and that, too, by law, is one of the most gigantic wrongs in the world's history. We have had quite enough of it. Let every decent man, in every nation, join such a league, and human butchers would soon be compelled to retire into hades, where they legitimately belong.

A congress of the members of the league will be holden some time during the present year at Brussels, and the chief question for discussion will be the formation of an International Tribunal, consisting of representatives from the leading European States and from the United States, doubtless, who will be empowered to bring about the pacific settlement of the different questions that arise from time to time among the European powers, and are now brought to the arbitrament of arms for settlement."

The American "Universal Peace Society" is to meet in Philadelphia, on the 10th of Oct., and hold several sessions. We are expecting to see much effort made to keep the peace of earth; but we think it will be much like an attempt to dam up the waters of the Niagara.

NO USE.

It is useless to live if we have not Christ, and miss of immortality. Better, far better, that we had never been born. It is a sad, sickening, dismal thought, that any one will be lost at last. And it should awaken solemn reflections, and stir our sluggish souls to mighty efforts, when we consider that it is possible we ourselves may fail of entering the better land. We are all undone without Christ. O, we must cling to him. Daily we must come in contact with his Spirit. If we secure not the eternal home at the loss of all temporal things, we shall lose all things,—yea, lose ourselves. "Lose himself," is the predicted doom of the sinner who shall be shut away from the blessed city.—Luke 9: 25.

We think there is a more solemn import, a deeper meaning in these words than the theologians have yet discovered. As long as consciousness exists, the impenitent one cannot "lose himself." He must, if conscious, recognize both his place and identity. The passage is full of utter death. For if God "cast away," or fling out from love, and life, and heaven the lost one, and that lost one lose himself in the outer darkness and lake of fire, he would then cease to be. What, then, will it be to us, though Eden bloom again, and its flowers fade not, and the cup of bliss in the city of gold is full, and there is music such as never greeted the ears of mortals, and eternity is stamped upon all, and the glad and shining band for whom these things and countless other untold joys are in reserve, shall sing and live forever, if we, if I am not there, but lost, lost away from the triumphant host? Lost through the ages? The dying words of the assassinator of Lincoln would be a fitting and fearful comment upon the human life of each doomed and lost one,—"Useless, useless!"

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD.—No. 1.

TRIALS.

The Almighty hath doubled his stripes upon me. My life is bitter unto me, and I fear that the Lord be my contrary party. It is hard to keep sight of God in a storm, especially when he hideth himself for the trial of his children. If he would be pleased to remove his hand, I have a purpose to seek him more than I have done.

After God's highest and fullest tide, when the sea of trouble has gone over his children, then cometh the gracious, long-hoped-for ebbing and drying up of the waters. Dear sister, do not faint.

Be patient. Christ went to heaven with many a wrong. His visage and countenance were all marred more than the sons of men. Ye may not be above your Master. Many a black stroke received innocent Jesus, and he made no reparation, but referred them all to the great court-day, when all things shall be righted.

Be content to wade through the waters betwixt you and glory with Him, holding his right hand fast; for he knoweth all the fords. Howbeit ye may be ducked, yet ye cannot drown, being in Christ's company; and ye may all the way to glory see the way bedewed with his blood who is the Forerunner.

We expect a trial. God's wheat in this land must go through Satan's sieve, but their faith shall not waver.

Oh, thrice fools are we, who, like new-born princes weeping in the cradle, know not that there is a kingdom before them. Then let our Lord's sweet hand hammer us, and strike off the knots of pride, self-love, world-worship, and infidelity, that he may make us stones and pillars in his Father's house.

If ye were Christ's bastard, he would not nurture you so; if ye were for the slaughter, ye would be fattened; but be content, ye are his wheat growing in our Lord's field. And if wheat, ye must go under our Lord's threshing instrument in his barn floor, and go thro' his sieve, and through his mill to be bruised, as the Prince of our salvation, Jesus, was, that ye may be found good bread in our Lord's house.

Know, therefore, that the place whither our Lord cometh to woo a bride, it is even in the furnace. And, therefore, be content to live in it.

The church hath been since the world began, ever hanging by a small thread, and all the hands of hell and of the wicked have been drawing at the thread; but, God be thanked, they only break their arms by pulling, but the thread is not broken, for the sweet fingers of Christ our Lord have spun and twisted it. Lord, hold the thread whole.

Look for crosses; and while it is fair weather mend the sails of your ship. Your Lord will not give you painted crosses.

I desire not to go on the lee-side, or sunny-side of religion, to put truth betwixt me and a storm. My Savior did not so for me, who in his suffering took the windy side of the hill.

If ye were not strangers here, the dogs of the world would not bark at you. Gold may be gold, and have the king's stamp upon it, when it is trampled upon by men.

I look not to reach my home without wounds and blood. Welcome, welcome, cross of Christ, if Christ be with it!

It is a mercy in this stormy sea to get a second wind; for none of the saints get a first, but they must take the winds as the Lord of the seas causeth them to blow. Better go swimming and wet through our waters, than drown by the way.

I verily think that the cross of Christ would blush and be ashamed of those thin-skinned worldlings, who are so married to their credit that they are ashamed of the sufferings of Christ. O, the honor to be scourged and stoned with Christ, and to go through a furious faced death to life eternal!

O, what owe I to the file, to the hammer, and to the furnace of my Lord Jesus. And how soon would faith freeze without a cross. Why should I start at the plough of my Lord, that maketh deep furrows on my soul!

Many would follow Christ, but with a reservation that, by open proclamation, Christ would cry down crosses, and cry up fair weather and a summer sky and sun, till we were all fairly landed at heaven.

It is folly to think to steal to heaven with a whole skin.

REMARKABLE PREDICTION.

"That this time (the Advent) is not far off, we have abundant proofs in the signs that thicken around us. The period that remains is but as an hour, and surely we may watch with the Lord that one hour. All the malignity of Satan that raged against our Master on the fearful night of Gethsemane will now be stirred up for a last effort against his church; and the trial will be severe, the conflict terrible, even as the issue will certainly be gloriously triumphant. Whatever glimpses we may have caught of the world of spirits in the course of this inquiry, must be turned to good account; for we shall soon need to exercise judgment in the discerning of spirits. The Sixth Vial, under which there can be no doubt that we now live, is marked by the going forth of the three unclean devils, of whose miracle-working power we are forewarned; and He who has deigned to show us things to come, has not set forth cunningly devised fables to amuse our fancy, but revealed solemn truths to guide our steps aright, when our path becomes perplexed beyond that we have known hitherto, or that the experience of the church has recorded.'—Charlotte Elizabeth's Principalities and Powers, p. 297.

"The miracles and signs, that distinguish these unclean spirits (Rev. 16: 13–15), the spirits, never let it be forgotten of devils, are becoming more and more manifest. Miss Martineau's Letters sufficiently develop the character of mesmerism. I am compelled, by such and similar statements, to view it as possible that a supernatural and therefore a diabolical power may be engaged in producing some of its wonders, and I would not for any supposed benefit whatsoever, have any thing whatever to do with it. We may expect to see more and more of such claims to miracles, and to witness really supernatural and diabolical powers from these unclean spirits. That they should come first in a healing form, as a mockery of our Savior's miracles of love, was to be expected from him who can transform himself into an angel of light, that he may maintain his hateful tyranny."—Edward Bickersteth's Signs of the Times, p. 108.

The above sagacious calculation of Elizabeth was made in 1842; that of Bickersteth only three years later, in 1845. They are strikingly akin to the spirit of prophecy. No man or woman, aside from the prophetic word, could so unerringly foretell the heralds and advent itself of modern Spiritualism. True to the very letter of the wonderful prediction, this great pneumatic and diabolical manifestation first began in China, in 1844, and appeared in this country in 1847, reaching England by the following year. Truly the prophecies are a "light in a dark place." O that the church of God would take heed to them, and to the above warnings of his faithful servant and handmaid, who being dead yet speak!

DORCAS MISSION.

The question, "What do you need most in your mission field?" is frequently asked me, both personally and by letter; and I will state, for the instruction of all who may desire to do something for Christ in this direction, that we need one hundred pairs of good shoes, and two hundred pairs of stockings and socks, for boys and girls; seventy-five suits of clothes for boys; one hundred dresses, and all kinds of under-garments for girls; besides these, we are continually in need of caps, hats, bonnets, hoods, shawls, cloaks, quilts, comfortables, sheets, blankets, and pillow-cases; crockery and tin ware, knives and forks, and spoons; yarn, cotton, thread, silk, scissors, pins, and needles; remnants of cloth of every kind, old or new; combs and brushes, soap and towels; and, besides these, we would be glad to receive all garments for women, little delicacies for the sick, etc., etc. Finally, we want all the lovers of Jesus to pray that the Lord may grant us these much needed temporal blessings for the needy in the highways and hedges, and that we who are servants of Jesus may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Our Sunday school is increasing in numbers, and souls are coming to Christ. Many believe that "the kingdom of God is nigh, even at the door." Last week there were one hundred and twenty-seven deaths by cholera in this city. Over four hundred more in the same time. It is making inroads in our mission field. Many have died there. Peace be with all who love Jesus. Yours, looking for Christ's appearing, F. H. BURBANK.

"SORROW'S CIRCUIT."

It is with a sorrowful heart that I pen this article. One of our number has died. But we sorrow not as others who have no hope, for we believe that Jesus died and rose again, hence as our beloved sister sleeps in Jesus, we know that through the blood of the everlasting covenant she will be brought again from the dead, even as God brought Jesus the Shepherd of the sheep from the dead.

Among those who were converted eighteen months ago, Sr. Anna Washington was one of the brightest jewels. She lived in an upper room in a dilapidated wooden building, situated in one of the narrow alleys leading from Bedford street. She was a widow, with five children dependent upon her exertions for their daily bread. She struggled day by day against poverty, but it followed closely upon her track. Soon after her conversion she had the typhoid fever. God only knows all the sufferings that she and her little ones endured through those four long, dreary weeks; yet God spared her life, and the lives of her little ones.

After her health was somewhat restored, she went out to wash clothes, iron, cook, etc., etc., as she had done prior to her sickness. Soon, her little adopted daughter, a child of six years, was taken sick. She had found this little orphan, homeless, and her big, warm, christian heart said, "Take it in, and care for it." Her poverty might have been an excuse, but faith in God was a blessed prop, and she took the little wanderer in. The little one began to sicken, and soon it fell a victim to the dropsy, but not before it had learned to love the name and sing the praises of Jesus.

The anxiety of Sr. Anna for the welfare of this little one was exceeding great. At the time it was sick, our evening school was held near by, and our sister would leave her little charge for awhile in the care of a friend, while she would attempt to master the alphabet, so that she might be able to read the precious word that she loved to hear so well. But poor Anna, who made such rapid progress at other times, made sad work while that little wanderer lay moaning under her roof. At last it fell asleep, and our sister sacrificed comforts, such as they were, to give it a decent burial.

Some time after that, she procured a room on Lombard St. While there, she would frequently give a portion of her room to the homeless. I would to God that there were many Anna Washingtons. How many there are, professing to be christians, who have families no larger than Anna's, but who have four, five, six, eight, or ten rooms, and who have ten times more of this world's goods than our sister had, who are forever pleading poverty, and who claim that they have not room enough for any others than their own. Even God's ministering servants are compelled to get boarding houses, eating houses, etc., where such a state of things ought not to exist. God has some children left yet, whose hearts have been enlarged by the grace of God, and who will not suffer pride, covetousness, or worldliness to contract them again. I do not complain for myself. The Lord raises up friends for me on every side, while the devil raises up enemies here and there.

A few months ago, Sr. Anna moved to St. Mary's street. A week ago she was attacked with diarrhea. Being very poor, living in a single room, having four children to care for, house-rent to pay (one dollar every week), she thought she must keep at her work. On Thursday last she called at Blind Susan's, and while there she was seized with cramps, and had to remain at Susan's. This dear saint of God put her into her own bed, and with others cared for her until her death.

Sr. Anna died on Sunday evening, at half-past eleven o'clock, aged about fifty years. Her death was triumphant. When dying, she shouted praises to our Redeemer, and sang of his love. She was so happy that it was with considerable difficulty that she could be kept from leaping to the floor. When her voice failed, her lips continued to move, until she breathed her last. She died as she had lived. Her life was that of the righteous for the eighteen months that she claimed to be one of Jesus' lambs. On last Thursday, her home was made cheerful by the gift of provisions we had carried her, and we little thought that this poor rich colored sister would so soon be called to sleep "the sleep of death."

Last night I passed a restless night. The death of this saint, and the scenes of sorrow that I had witnessed yesterday afternoon, would not let me sleep quietly. O, how I long for the coming of Jesus. The highways and hedges long for him to come. Weeping, tried and tempted saints eagerly look for his coming. Thank the Lord, he will "come quickly."

Sr. Washington's family are now under my care. Sr. Susan gives them a home till the Lord provides another place for them. She will keep one of the number. The little ones who are fatherless are reaching out their hands to me in all directions. My purpose, by the grace of God, to give them a home, remains unchanged. Pray for me. Yours, etc., looking for Jesus, F. H. BURBANK.

Phila., Oct. 9th, 1866.

P. S.—Two dollars were sent to me from a friend in Worcester on Sept. 30th, and they were given to Sr. Anna Washington to help her during her sickness.

DANIEL'S WONDERS.

"And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?"

What wonders? The wonders brought to view in the twelfth of Daniel.

1. The standing up of Michael.
2. The deliverance of God's people, whose names are now written in the book of life.
3. The resurrection of the dead, some to life, others to shame and everlasting contempt.

These most certainly are included in the wonders. The angel assures Daniel that from the taking away of the daily sacrifice, and the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate, there shall be time, times and a half. Then running over the scattering of the power of the holy people, in the time of the end, telling Daniel to go his way, assuring him that when the 1335 days end, or run out, all these things shall be accomplished; thus making it sure that the wonders will here have, or have had their fulfillment at the ending of the days. This being so, it follows that the wicked dead must come out of the grave before Daniel finds his lot at the end of the days. Thus seemingly without controversy the dead coming "forth to shame and everlasting contempt" must come forth at or before the ending of the days.

This is in harmony with all the texts relating to the resurrection of the dead, giving place to the harvesting of both crops, the tares, and the wheat in this world, age, or dispensation, where Jesus in the thirteenth of Matthew says they shall be, letting the Father, at Christ's delivering up of the kingdom, take to himself his great power and reign till he hath put down all rule and all power, destroying death and him that had the power of it, making way for Christ to be put on David's throne, when he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

This will introduce a new era. The new heavens and new earth—Paradise restored, Eden brought back to her primitive beauty and glory, all things created new—eternal blessedness. Amen. L. BOUTELL.

MORTAL SINS.

"But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death."—Rev. 21: 8.

There is one sin in the above catalogue which is not generally understood, because it is thought to mean unbridled indulgence of the sexual passions. But the original word signifies all intercourse which does not pertain to the married relation; in proof whereof read Deut. 22: 13–23. Pornois, which is the word referred to in the quotation from the Revelation, is the masculine plural of porneia, which is thus defined in the Lexicon: "Fornication, whoredom, i. e., unlawful intercourse with an unmarried woman. Mark 7: 21; Acts 15: 20, 29; John 8: 41; in the sense of adultery, Matt. 5: 32; 19; of incest, 1 Cor. 5: 1; of lewdness, uncleanness, genr. Rom. 1 29."

Persons, therefore, who are guilty of any of these phases of the sin of porneia, or fornication, are ranked with murderers and unbelievers, and their doom is pronounced beforehand to be punished with the second death; which, of course, cannot take place till after their resurrection from the first death. But forgiveness is offered to such on condition of repentance, otherwise the righteous judgment of God will be fulfilled in their everlasting destruction.

"Marriage in honorable in all, and the bed undefiled; but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge." That married man who seeks intercourse with a married or unmarried female, defiles the marriage bed, and makes himself liable to the doom pronounced against all such workers of inquity. Let not the religious fornicator flatter himself in his self-complacency that God will overlook his impure lusts. Those who steal the livery of heaven to serve the devil in, put to blush the ordinary fornicator. This sin is the greatest bar to the embracement of vital piety of any other, for it holds the mind under the dominion of secret sin. Such are interested to cover up their sin by lying and deceit; when the testimony of God is, that "he that covereth his sins shall not prosper." WM. HOBBS.

MY TOUR EAST.

In compliance with earnest requests, I have concluded to make a tour through some of the Eastern States, and preach the gospel of the kingdom. I can only be gone about four weeks, and that I may advertize my appointments, let those wishing my labors write me immediately at Syracuse, N. Y., that I may have time to make my arrangements and advertize the same. I shall expect to start from home about the first of December.

Czechowski's Thrilling Narrative.

A small edition of this work has been printed in paper covers, to be disposed of for the benefit of the European Mission. The book will be sent post-paid to every one who contributes $1.00 or more to the aid of the Mission. Bro. Czechowski is in need of help. Let the friends take this means to aid him, and receive an interesting book in return. The book will be sent to those only who order it.

☞ The last, best fruit which comes to late perfection, even in the kindliest soul, is tenderness toward the hard, forbearance toward the unforbearing, warmth of heart toward the cold, philanthropy toward the misanthropic."

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. Rockwell.

Bro. Grant:—In the abounding goodness of the Lord, I am yet in Westfield, striving to work for the promotion of truth, and to comfort and refresh the little ones. But no toil, no sacrifice, suffering, or labor, can atone for or redeem the time that ran to waste between the time of our old saw-mill consecration and the present. And as no regrets can stand as restorers of the past, I will only say, I thank the Lord that we ever made that consecration. I feel well assured that all my past unfaithfulness has been forgiven, and I am permitted to live and labor in this eleventh hour. What will be the blessed reward? Just one penny, and that one penny eternal life in the kingdom of God. And I do not believe that Bro. Grant, or any one of Father's family, will feel disposed to murmur at the good Master when he reckoneth with them. O that blessedness! Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart to conceive, what God hath prepared for them that love him. But this we know, that when He who is our life shall appear, then, if we are favored with an abundant entrance into the kingdom, we shall be like him, and shall see him as he is.

I am anxiously looking and hourly expecting to see the Lord; and how can I expect him if I am not watching for his return? I cannot watch for him except I expect him, for this would be a direct contradiction of terms. Could I watch for the return of my best friend, who had been long absent in distant lands, without expecting him? O Lord, may this and this alone ever so rest on my mind that when the morning of joy shall dawn upon us, I may be found one of that company that shall send forth the victor's cry, Lo, this is the Lord, we have waited for him. This is our God, and and he will save us.

My brethren and sisters, let us wait with patience a little longer, for He that is to come will come, and will not tarry. May these important truths so occupy my every moment, that I shall never find any time to sin.

Since the campmeeting at Wilbraham, although I left for home on the day of its close, I have not been able to get any further on my way, as I have been fully employed in Westfield and Montgomery, and I humbly hope that some little good may result from my feeble labors. O how much we need the energies of youth and the experience of age, to contend successfully with the strong delusions of the last days. And I find scattered broadcast all over these hills and valleys this one appalling delusion: if we present the truth of the Lord's soon coming, we are met with this reply, "I am a christian. O yes, I belong to the church. All that is important for me is to be prepared for death"; and so I walk those dreary, benighted streets, and see the drunkard preparing for death, and hear the swearer preparing for death; and now, if the members of the churches wish to prepare for death, if they would wish to perfect that work in the uncertainty of the present life, I can only advise them to commit murder in the first degree, for no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him; and by so doing they would at one tremendous sweep prepare for death.

Dear Savior, wake up thy drowsy church. Quicken thy professing children, for many of them have no need to prepare for death, they are dead already, and unless the mercy of God interpose, soon they will be twice dead, and plucked up by the roots. O Lord, let the people see that life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel.

H. Rockwell.

Westfield, Mass., 1866.

From Sr. M. J. Plummer.

Beloved Brethren and Sisters:—"Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord; for he commanded and ye were created." While walking in the delightful suburbs of our beautiful city (Concord, N. H.), scattering the seed of the true life, in the form of little tracts, I looked around me, beholding the fruits of tree and field in the perfection of their goodness and beauty, and I thought how other hands planted those trees, and prepared those ripened fields, and sowed the seed. They labored believing that they should reap the harvest fruits. "God giveth the increase." O, blessed to be called to labor, with the promise that is sure of fulfillment, "Ye shall reap if ye faint not."

This is a beautiful world, and while reviewing even the limited portion which my eyes have rested upon, I thought within myself, how the glorious Creator must love this lovely garden, the work of his own hands. Ah, alas! notwithstanding its sunshine and every charm, it is cursed for sin, for disobedience to God's commands. But sing unto the Lord, all ye lands; for he hath redeemed it, and in the fulness of times the saints shall inherit the earth, and a King shall reign in righteousness.

The present time, dear heirs of that inheritance undefiled, is our seed time. "He that goeth forth bearing precious seed, shall doubtless return again, bringing his sheaves with him." "Sow in the morning thy seed, and at evening withhold not thy hand." All seasons are ours. Spring time, with its budding promise and soft south breezes. Summer, in its fullness of life, is also a seed time in the great field, whose harvest is the end of the world. Autumn, bringing the hope and expectation of all the seasons with it to perfection, still says to us, Paul planteth, Apollos watereth, God giveth the increase. And winter, though mantling earth's form in snows, yet hinders not our seed sowing in the ever continuing spring-time of the human heart.

Dear fellow-laborers, in whatever place your lot is cast, do not have one doubt, nor say that perhaps it will do no good. No, no. Have faith. It will surely bring forth in the good ground, some thirty, some sixty, some an hundred fold.

Well do I remember, far back in my early childhood, the words I read, written by the pen of a devoted christian, Hariet Newell. Were those words spoken by a true, faithful missionary in vain? Ah, no, they live in fadeless beauty in my heart. Do the words of Jesus, which he spoke on earth, lie lifeless? They are spirit and they are truth. O, whatsoever our hands find to do, let us do it, remembering that the night cometh.

Dear ones, are you gathering all the children into the Sabbath school? Are you a teacher there, with the Bible in your hand, and its words of eternal knowledge and life taught to your scholars, each one in love? Have you books of priceless truth lying on our shelves, like miser's gold, when you might bequeath them to the Sabbath school library? O, bring all the tithes into the storehouse. They that sow bountifully shall also reap bountifully. All of us can perform some part of the glorious preparation for the coming of the "Desire of all nations." Do we love our Redeemer, who is worthy of praises unceasing? Let us keep his commandments, that we may abide in him, and his words abide in us. Yours in hope, M. J. Plummer.

From Bro. John G. Hook.

Bro. Grant:—I left Boston for Yarmouth, Friday, Oct. 12th, nine and a half A. M. I made port Sunday morning at eight o'clock. I came on steam propellor "Linda," Capt. Healey. The boat is good and safe, and the captain a gentleman. Though we had a rough sea, I enjoyed the passage well. We were about twenty hours longer than the usual time.

I do thank the Lord for good religion, that makes us happy and peaceful on land or sea, in fair weather and storm. Hallelujah! I could but shout and sing praises from the upper deck during the roughest of the gale. I never had so sweet assurance in all my pilgrimage.

Soon as I stepped from the boat, a Bro. Smith from Salem, Mass., reached forth his hand, when we had a pleasant greeting, and then I walked with him to his house, where we were welcomed by Sister Mary, his wife, who with her sister Lucy was converted and baptized when we were in Salem in 1854.

I found the people here very anxious to get tracts and Advent papers to read, and many wish to hear the word preached. But in this village of about ten or twelve thousand inhabitants, and five houses of worship, I find no way but to scatter tracts, and converse privately with those who wish to hear the present truth, unless I hire a hall, which I intend to do to-morrow, and commence a series of meetings. Pray that God's truth may take effect in this Province, and a people be prepared to welcome Jesus back to earth.

I find the free circulation of tracts is doing good already. The people are satisfied when I present these precious tracts to them, and tell them they are free, that somebody cares for them. God bless every soul that has contributed to the tract fund. Let others do likewise. Let us all be faithful. We are near the judgment.

My address for three weeks will be Yarmouth, N. S. John G. Hook.

From Bro. B. P. Manning.

Bro. Grant:—While I have to stay at home the most of the time, I am studying the good word of the Lord, and searching the same to see if these things are so; and the more I search to know our whereabouts, I become more and more confident that we are right with regard to the coming of our blessed Lord.

How glad I am that God has spared my unprofitable life to this present time; notwithstanding all the pain and sufferings that I have had to undergo, God is very good to me. O the obligation we are under to the good Lord for all the blessings we receive from him every day. Let us praise him with all our souls.

Brethren and sisters, are we ready for the coming of the Lord? I am perfectly satisfied that Jesus will come in an hour which thousands will not be aware of, and cut them off in all of their sins. But that day will be a blessed one for God's dear children. Now is the time for the church to work, if she ever intends to do any more for the world. I am glad that there is mercy in store yet for sinners and backsliders. Come home to Father's house, poor soul. I pity you, wherever you are.

Jesus says, in Matt. 11: 28, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." I know these words are true. May the Lord help me, with the rest of the church, to labor on till Jesus comes and gives his soldiers an honorable discharge. Amen.

Goffstown, N. H. B. P. Manning.

From Bro. W. Forrester.

Bro. Grant:—Although we are living in perilous times, and in the world we have tribulation, yet, praise our heavenly Master, in him and obeying his word, we have "peace." Yea, a peace to which this world is a stranger. Let us who love the Lord with a pure heart, unite in praising him, until we shall see him face to face, and be made immortal, to sicken and die no more.

Praise the Lord, brethren and sisters, our territory is to be without limitation or reserve. He tells us to let the tares and the wheat grow together until the harvest, yet sometimes we hardly know what tares to let alone, as we see the coming of our Master so very near. But let us be sober, lest coming suddenly he finds us sleeping, instead of going about doing good, in some way that will best please him, when he shall come to receive all his faithful ones.

I would be remembered by the brethren and sisters in their prayers and admonition and watchcare. Thus while we are parted and scattered abroad, let us pray for each other, and wrestle with God until the Master shall say, "It is enough." W. Forrester.

Dundee, N. Y.

From Sr. M. A. Fogg.

Brn. and Srs. in Jesus:—We are still striving to let our light shine, and also to have it increased by searching into the "sure word of prophecy"; and when I look back over the year that is past, I can but lift my heart in gratitude to the Giver of all good for his mercy to us. I had lived in this place previous to that two years, and in that time we had only now and then a meeting once in a great while, and sometimes I would go over to our New Preston brethren.

About one year ago another sister and myself went over, and the Lord sent us home with a working harness on, and to us it was work or die. In his name we commenced, and the Lord did revive his work. The dear children came right along, every one to his post, and sinners began to ask what they must do to be saved, through the instrumentality of Brn. Whitehead and St. John, Bro. and Sr. Canfield, and a working church. But after awhile, through lack of faith in truth that was set before us, a time of trial came, and oh! how we longed for "meat in due season," and prayed the Lord to send some one this way to break to us the bread of life. I thought of writing to some of God's servants, but I could think of no one, of course, for the one He had chosen was a stranger to us all. Our meetings in a measure had lost interest, some roots of bitterness had sprung up, and to all appearance the enemy was about to triumph, when Bro. J. T. Dixon came amongst us in the name of his Master, and to some of us, if not all, it did truly seem a God-send. Old wounds were healed, bitterness uprooted, and the lovers of Jesus united more in the work. But all this took some little time, and the Lord kept his servant here most of the time for two months, for which we thank his name. Yes, I do believe that there is a little bundle of wheat for the angels to gather in this place, and God grant that I may make one to fill it.

Dear Brn. and Srs., let us not cast away our confidence, which has great recompense of reward, for if ever I felt we were living in the time of any of the fulfillment of God's word, we are living now when we need to heed the warning—"Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." May our trust be alone in the merits of a crucified Redeemer.

Should any of God's faithful servants read this, and feel that the Lord would have them come this way in his name, I doubt not they would be thankfully received. Your Sr. in the blessed hope, Maria A. Fogg.

Morris, Ct.

From Sr. M. A. Hardy.

Brothers and Sisters:—I am striving to hold fast that which I have attained, that no man take my crown. I am grateful that God gave me strength to meet so many of his dear saints at Alton campmeeting,—that I could once more speak for him in the great congregation,—that I was permitted to listen in the tented grove to so much faithful preaching, and to hear so many witnesses for Jesus; and last of all, to partake of the Supper of our adorable Lord, and thereby show forth his death till he come. I feel that it is no time for the little flock to slumber now, but to awake to activity and vigilance in these last hours of time; for our opportunities to labor are few. May the Master help us to put on the heavenly armor and go forth, taking fresh courage, because the warfare is almost ended, the victory almost gained. May we trim our lamps anew, and may they give light to some who are in darkness, stumbling on the mountains of sin, having none to guide and direct to the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. If we can persuade some to come, at the eleventh hour, it will raise a shout in earth and heaven. Glory to God, the redeemed sinners of every nation will soon have their triumphant shout in the everlasting kingdom.

Pray for me, brethren and sisters, for the fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous availeth much. M. A. Hardy.

Obituaries.

Manning. Fell asleep in Christ, in Greenbush, Me., Sept. 20th, 1866, our much beloved brother, James Manning, aged seventy years, four months, and three days.

Thus ends the earthly career of one dearly beloved by all who knew him. He always kept a pilgrim's tavern, never turned one away empty, and by the poor he will be greatly missed. Having conformed his life to the New Testament, he will awake to sing that victor's song, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" He leaves a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. May heaven's blessings rest upon them.

Remarks by the writer, from words found in Heb. 13: 14. Liberty Wetherbee.

"Herald of the Bridegroom" please copy.

Ennis. Fell sweetly asleep in Jesus, in North Kingston, R. I., Oct. 10th, 1866, Sister Mercy Ennis, aged sixty-two years.

Sister Ennis gave her heart to God thirty years ago, and remained true to the vows which she then made until her death. Although she had been a great sufferer through life, and blind for nearly five years, she remarked to Bro. E. R. Wood, a short time before her death, that the Lord had been very good to her. Her last sickness was very short,—but ten days. She was perfectly willing to fall asleep in Jesus.

The funeral was attended by Eld. E. R. Wood, assisted by the writer. C. H. Sweet.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Florence, Oct. 10. The cession of the Province of Venetia to the Italian Government was fully completed to-day.

Paris, Oct. 19. The French Statesman, M. Thouvenal, died to-day.

Berlin, Oct. 19. Rumors are afloat that the Prussio-Saxon Military Convention have agreed on the basis of common occupation of Saxony.

New York, Oct. 17. A dispatch dated Athens Oct. 4th, says the attacks by the combined Turkish and Egyptian forces completely failed, and the Candians maintained all their positions.

The Candians have gained a great victory in the province of Rethymnos. They have been successful hitherto at all points. The Turks continue their barbarities in the province of Heractia, having massacred about three hundred old men, women and children.

A majority of the Turkish ministry advocate breaking off diplomatic relations with Greece, but the Grand Vizier and Ali Pasha oppose the step. There are apprehensions of a rising in Thessaly and Epeius. The insurrection in Candia is spreading.

Notwithstanding the representations of the London Lancet there is much anxiety in France respecting the Emperor's health. It is said that he is suffering from a disease that demands all the resources of modern medical science to arrest its inroads, and that a complete recovery is out of the question. He is reported to be aware of his condition and taking measures for the settlement of important affairs that are likely to embarrass the future.

New York, 22. From Paris, Rome and Brussels, we have the melancholy intelligence that the mind of the Empress of Mexico, overtaxed by the importance of her mission and intensely depressed by her bitter failure, has given way, and that Her Majesty became insane after her interview with the Pope and was taken from Rome to Brussels in this afflicted condition. The latest telegram from Brussels states that the mental "crisis" was alleviated.

What is the Pope going to do?—Throughout Europe it is felt that a crisis had arrived unexampled in the history of the Latin Church, and that issues of momentous interest hang upon the deliberations of the next few months. It is natural, therefore, that the eyes of the whole christian world should now be fixed on the Eternal City. Throughout the winter Rome will be crowded with the representatives of every civilized nation and every christian creed; and at the ends of the earth the Vatican will be the one point of absorbing interest. The soul of that man is dead who does not perceive the moral grandeur of the spectacle which the abode of Augustus, and Gregory, and Clement will then present. A mighty era will be coming to an end, and, perhaps a not less mighty era will be beginning. Looking to the city in the past we shall see almost an epitome of the world's history—the twilight of Rome's pagan career; the splendor and the vice, and the boundless power of her imperial course; the awfulness of her fall from supreme dominion to a depth which made her scorned by the descendants of her barbarian vassals; the glory of her revival under the spiritual sway of a race of kings whose power extended beyond the confines of this earthly world, and from whose wrath the grave itself was no refuge; the decline of that spiritual authority before the growing influence of mental freedom and its glory even amid the wreck of its former grandeur. That is the sight which meets us as we look at the present and the past of Rome. We seem to have as witnesses of the close of that mighty era, all the great names with which it is peopled, the most illustrious hierarchy of power, and genius, and holiness that the world has ever seen. The Cæsars are there, and the Ciceros, and the Livys; the Peters and the Pauls, with the long procession of christian saints and martyrs; Jerome is there, with Cyprian, Augustine and all the holy army of christian fathers; there, too, are the Gregories, the Innocents and the Leos; the Dantes, the Tassos, the Petrarchs are also there to represent the men who embalmed in an imperishable song the Church's vices, her splendors, her luxuries; and beside them stand a grim throng, the Galileos, the Lutherans, the Erasmuses, the men whom Rome smote in the wantonness of her might and under whose strokes her spiritual empire crumbled away. Surrounded by the marbles that recall the memory of Greece; by the awful ruins that bring back the magnificence of Pagan Rome; by the cathedrals and the domes and the frescoes that tell of the genius which once was at the bidding of the Pontiffs; by the representatives of mighty empires which, born but yesterday, dictate to the Eternal City instead of humbly obeying her behests; by the representatives of mighty creeds that scorn the yoke of Christ's vicegerent—it is thus surrounded that the last of a race of Hildebrand's must decide what shall be done to preserve unimpaired the existence of that church which has in him its earthly head. No situation could be more profoundly impressive. The past, with all its changes, is so mighty! the future so uncertain! One thing only is clear, that a vast revolution is at hand. Enthusiastic devotees of the Papacy may flatter themselves with the thought that the danger is but momentary; that the supremacy which has withstood the perils of a thousand years will outlive the menaces of our degenerate time; that the mighty hand and outstretched arm which has never failed the church in the night of her trials will sustain the Pontiff in his place among the kings of the earth. The faith is beautiful; but it is vain. The temporal power of the Pope is passing away, and another empire will soon find a sepulchre where it found its cradle—in Rome.—London Telegraph.

☞ The late terrible hurricane was felt with destructive effect in the vicinity of the Bahamas. It was the most violent gale ever experienced, wrecking many vessels, blowing down houses and doing immense damage. Several dead bodies have drifted ashore.

To Brethren in Conn.

The cause of God seems to demand that a conference be held in Central or Western Conn. After prayer and consultation, it is decided that such a conference be held in Yalesville, Ct., to commence Wednesday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, Oct. 24th, and continue over Sunday, the 28th. At which time the new Advent Chapel will be dedicated. If it should be stormy on Wednesday, it will take place Thursday.

Yalesville is situated on the Hartford and New Haven Rail Road, thirteen miles from N. H., and about fifteen from Hartford. We hope the Brn. and Srs. will make an extra effort to attend this meeting, as it is expected then to organize a permanent conference to meet in different localities until the Lord comes. For time is very short, and we ought to do all we can to enlighten our fellow men upon the great truths we hold so dear. We hope that every Advent minister in the State, and as many out of it as possibly can, will be present. Call on W. S. Chandler, George A. Marble, and Henry Mix.

FOR JESUS' SAKE.

Where'er by God's assisting grace,
We speed upon the christian race;
When we devote the fleeting hours
To strew another's path with flowers;
And with pure love to pride unknown,
Prefer his interest to our own,—
This thought each deed of love will make
Most sweet—"'Tis done for Jesus' sake."

Where'er we watch the couch of pain,
And bid the mourner smile again;
When gladly from our little store
We help the sick or feed the poor,
(Though all our deeds are nothing worth),
The gracious Lord of heaven and earth
Will bless each effort that we make,
In humble faith for Jesus' sake.

When, meekly bending to the rod,
We bless the chastening hand of God;
When neither insult, wrong, nor pain,
Can force our spirit to complain;
Oh! let this rainbow thought illume,
The storm of grief, the cloud of gloom,
God will each pang a blessing make,
When meekly borne for Jesus' sake.

Our Savior, with an eye of love,
Beholds his servants from above;
He left the starry realms for them,
To wear shame's thorny diadem;
The Lord of heaven and earth appears,
To bear the cross, to weep their tears,
To shed his blood, his body brake,
For each repentant sinner's sake.

Then, oh! what sacrifice can be
Too great, my Lord, to make for thee?
Should wealth take wings and flee away,
Should comfort, health, and life decay,
Still shall we love thee and adore;
God will his blood-bought servants wake
To endless bliss, for Jesus' sake.

NUMBER THIRTY-ONE.

RAISING THE SHUNAMMITE'S SON.

In his journeyings to and from Gilgal and Carmel, Elisha had often been welcomed to the home of a wealthy family in Shunem, in the pleasant and fertile land of Issachar. This hospitable family had even fitted up a chamber expressly for the prophet, where he could retire at any time when turning aside to rest from his travels.

The town of Shunem was pleasantly located in the rich and fertile valley of Jezreel. The grand and beautiful in nature surrounded it on every side. To the north are the hills of Nazareth, in the west looms up Tabor, and Hermon stretches away in a long line, till its summits are lost in the clouds. To the south the hills of Samaria undulate like ocean waves, and across the plain of Jezreel towards the sea Carmel rears its head crowned with verdure. Then in the days of Israel's prosperity Hermon shed its refreshing dews on the green pastures of the shepherd, and the smiling fields of the husbandman, and toil was well rewarded.

It is not strange, then, that Elisha in his wanderings should occasionally seek rest here in the home of contentment. But the home of his benefactors was unblest with the presence of offspring, and as a reward for the kindness bestowed upon him, Elisha prayed that Heaven would bestow a son upon his entertainers. At length his prayer was answered, and the home of the Shunammite was made happy with the voice of childhood.

The years went swiftly by, and the child grew into sprightly boyhood, lighting up the home of his aged parents with his joyousness. He attended his father to the fields when the servants scattered the seed, and in the harvest time he was there among the reapers when the vale of Jezreel was golden with the ripened grain.

But at length it happened on one of those excessively warm days of harvest time, while at play among the sheaves, the boy received a sun-stroke, and called in pain to his father, "My head, my head." He was carried immediately to his mother. She received him with a sad heart, for the look of death was on him. She tenderly folded him to her bosom till noon, then her boy, around whose young life so much of her happiness twined, died in her fond embrace.

That was a gloomy hour to the Shunammite mother. She gazed long and with tearful eyes upon the dead form of her dearly loved boy. She felt that the light of her declining years had gone out in death; her home seemed dark in her desolation. But suddenly a gleam of light fell upon her benighted path. She remembered the man of God and his miracles of other days. Might not he intercede with Heaven and bring her boy to life again? Strengthened with this thought, she conveyed her lifeless child to the couch of the solitary chamber of Elisha, and gently laid him on his bed. Then she told her husband she had an errand to the man of God, and desired a servant to saddle an ass and accompany her to Mount Carmel.

She was soon on the way hastening down the valley along the banks of Kishon. She passed over the fields that had been made red with the blood of the slain—where Deborah and Barak had overthrown Sisera of old, and where the hosts of Midian had fallen before Gideon; but she paused not to trace the martial camps of old; her matronly heart was on her boy silent in death, and hope still whispered that possibly he might live again, if the sympathy of Elisha could be enlisted. It was a rare and singular mission, but that mother had great faith.

Elisha saw her coming down the valley in great haste, and thinking something unusual must have happened, he called his servant Gehazi to go and meet the Shunammite and ask after her household. To Gehazi's question,

"Is it well with thee? Is it well with thy husband? Is it well with the child?"

She answered, "It is well."

Yes, it was well, for her confiding heart had trusted all in His hands who "doeth all things well."

At last she reached Carmel, weary with her journey, and casting herself down she caught the man of God by the feet. But Gehazi, the selfish and unsympathizing servant, sought to thrust her away. But Elisha bade him to desist; his keener perceptions had quickly detected some hidden sorrow in the woman's heart. Then she told him all, poured out her sorrow as only a mother can over the death of a boy beloved.

The sympathizing heart of Elisha was moved to compassion, and he bade Gehazi go and lay his staff upon the face of the child, to hasten, nor salute any one, or reply when saluted. But the mother could not be satisfied unless Elisha would accompany her to the scene of death. He complied with her request, and they were soon wending their way towards Shunem.

When they came in sight of the town, Gehazi met them, and said he had done as bidden, but there were no signs of returning life. The golden harvest sun was stooping low over distant Carmel as the prophet and the sorrowing mother entered the saddened home. Elisha repaired at once to his chamber, where the child was reposing in death, and he lifted his voice in prayer to God to restore the boy. Then he stretched himself upon the child, and his flesh, late so cold, began to gather the warmth of returning life. After walking in the house awhile, the prophet placed himself upon the boy as before, and he sneezed seven times, and opened his eyes beaming with life once more. With a thrill of joy Elisha sent for the mother and presented her the boy.

There was joy in that home that night, joy such as few on earth have experienced; for that Shunammite was one of the favored few to whom Heaven has vouchsafed to return departed ones. The joy-light of other days once more returned, the blessings of heaven rested on Shunem as of yore, and the boy lived long to be the support of his mother and the staff of his father, while the prophet was made thrice welcome to the scene of his intercession with heaven. REPORT OF PROGRESS.

Through Boston to Alton Bay—Good Meeting—Biddeford, Me.—Dover, N. H.—Melvin Village, N. H.—Eld. Piper and Family—Others of "like precious faith"—Business Transactions.

From Wilbraham we went to Alton Bay, where we had another precious season, an additional feast of gladness. We met many here from the surrounding country where we have labored, dear in Christ, whose faces we were heartily glad to see. We spent a few days profitably until Saturday P. M., when after an interesting sermon by Bro. Couch, we were desired to go to Biddeford, Me., and supply the desk on the Lord's day, and in a few minutes were at the station ready to go. We believe in being minute men in the Lord's vineyard, ready to go any where, and stay as long as duty requires.

Sabbath, Sept. 2nd, we preached in Biddeford, to good congregations, with a good degree of liberty. Wife spoke in the evening, and had a good free time. Dear ones are here, with whom we have often met; and it was good to be there again and speak for the first time in their neat, new chapel. We met in the A. M. Bro. W. H. Mitchell, but he would not consent to preach, although we should have enjoyed hearing him exceedingly well. Bro. M. is one of those whose society is pleasant, and whose record is known and read of all, in the region around, as a faithful ambassador for Christ. We should be well satisfied to spend an eternity with such choice spirits.

Monday eve, we listened to an interesting sermon by I. Damman, and enjoyed a pleasant interview with him and Sr. D., and Bro. and Sr. Wellcome.

As usual while in Biddeford, our home was with Bro. J. C. Libby, whose house has long been the "pilgrim's home," and whose horse and express wagon are always ready to run between his house and the depot for the benefit of the messengers of truth. A free team, a free table, and a free "prophet's chamber," are indices of a "free" heart full of the gospel of peace and good will to men. O how often, while we have traveled wearily over the earth, have these pilgrim homes cheered us; when having no other home we have come to them, and been kindly welcomed and refreshed in the "name of a disciple."

Tuesday, Sept. 4th, took the cars for Dover, our next appointment, and found ourselves once more at Bro. Wm. Sims, whose house is another place we call home. Bro. S. and his companion are untiring in their efforts to comfort the pilgrims who lodge there. We remained through the week, wife and self speaking some evenings and on the Sabbath. A few brethren are struggling here to keep the meetings going, and we pray earnestly that the Lord's blessing may rest abundantly upon them, and many from old Dover be ready to welcome the Savior and be made like him.

We met Bro. Edwin Burnham here, who was laboring in a protracted effort with the Baptist church in this place. Bro. B. is preaching real Advent truth as strongly as we could do ourself, and we think he may truly say he has not changed his views. We heard him with great satisfaction.

Tuesday, Sept. 11, returned to Alton Bay, and thence by steamer and stage to Melvin Village, our next appointment. At the Bay we went for a moment to take a survey of the old camp ground, so recently the scene of life and the witness of so many blessings, now all desolate, canvass tents all gone, and board tents empty and lonesome. No place brings to the heart so much homesickness as a deserted camp ground. The echo of voices seems to be lingering there of prayers and songs of those now far, far away; and though memory brings back again those who were there and sees them in their accustomed places, sight says they are gone, gone, GONE. So will this earth be desolated when the saints are caught, and the vials are poured out on the wicked. Thank God for the prospect of meeting soon, never to part.

Our ride in the Steamer over the Winnipiseogee Lake was delightful. The lake itself is the prettiest sheet of water we ever saw, and we have traveled over not a few! and know of but one that approximates to it, and that is Lake Champlain. The Winnipiseogee seems to have been properly named by the Indians. Its name signifies "The smile of the Great Spirit"; and its clear waters, penetrable far down towards the bottom, remind one of the purity of holiness which beams in our Father's smile; and then it rests so romantically among the mountains that tower about it in so many fantastic forms, "making into the land" here and there in beautiful bays, leaving sometimes capes and promontories and narrow necks of land, such as Dr. Watts must have had in mind when he wrote—

"Lo! on a narrow neck of land,
'Twixt two unbounded seas I stand,
Yet how insensible!"

The lake is relieved from the monotony of uninterrupted water by the numerous islands (365—as many as the days of the year) that rest in the lake in their emerald beauty, like the beryl set in pearl, or like crowns of evergreen on the brow of the queen of beauty.

At this season the foliage is changed to its autumnal tints, and the red and purple and yellow mingle with the unchanging evergreen in pleasant contrast. The waters of the lake are quiet. A soothing influence settles into the heart as we ride over the lake, thinking of the new earth and the clear crystal river of the water of life. A ride on a lumbering stage is not so pleasant, but we managed to endure it by taking an outside passage and having a better view of the grand old hills and pleasant valleys over and through which we went.

At Melvin Village, Bro. T. W. Piper met us, and kindly took us to his home, and in due time we went to the new chapel, where we met some of the brethren and sisters, and enjoyed a comfortable time. We remained through the week and over the Sabbath. Preached nine different times during the week, and wife spoke once, each meeting growing better as we progressed. Somehow it was rather hard commencing, but we got free before the Lord's day, and on that last day of the feast enjoyed the best day we ever experienced in our lives. The Lord gave the word, and it was easy speaking. There was a deep interest, as the tears and hearty responses to the truth indicated. We felt lifted almost up to the very gate of heaven, and never knew half so much pleasure in preaching the truth as we felt then. There is a good strong company of brethren and sisters here, a true and tried company; and although they have had strange things preached there, and efforts have been made to convince them of the "errors of Adventism," they have held on their way, and now have a large, convenient chapel, with "seats free" in large letters painted on the wall over the speaker's head; thereby indicating one of the plain truths of the gospel, that God's house is not a house of merchandise, to be first dedicated to the Lord, and then sold to the people, church member or infidel, whoever may choose to buy. There they worship and look for the Lord.

Bro. Piper, a native of this locality, labors in word and doctrine here, and the result is, good seed is sown, and carefully watered and watched, so that no hireling, or un-sent (unless self-sent) messenger shall sow darnel; and the seed bears fruit to the glory of God. We formed a pleasant acquaintance with Bro. and Sr. Piper, and others whose names are in the book of life. Our visit to Melvin Village will never be forgotten, and if the Lord should come before we have the opportunity of meeting there again, we shall gladly meet the dear brethren and sisters of that place in the Eden restored.

We left Melvin Village Monday evening, when Bro. Hersey and wife went with us to Bro. Ladd's. We had a beautiful moonlight ride, and spent a pleasant evening with Bro. Samuel Ladd's family. It was not spent as some spend what they call a "pleasant evening," chatting nonsense and talking of this neighbor and that, as is too often the case with professed christians; but as we believe christians will always love to spend it, profitably. We sang for awhile some of the songs of Zion, and then had a precious season of prayer. Some eight or ten engaged in the devotions. How much better, we thought, is this than the common practice. Professors meet, spend an evening, discuss the fashions, the crops, politics, and whatever they list, but never mention the blessed Jesus as an experimental Savior, and specially never talk of the evidences of his near coming. We believed as we sat around Bro. Ladd's fireside that all the evidences are unmistakably plain that, in a very short time, perhaps next year, Jesus will come, the judgment begin, and the question be decided as to who will be saved and who lost; and as we bowed around that family altar together, we prayed for grace, that all that company might be found among the redeemed at last. O that the waiting ones may have their lamps trimmed and burning, and a good supply of oil in their vessels with their lamps, so as not to be obliged to go and buy when it is too late. Bro. and Sr. Hersey returned home, and we remained with Bro. Ladd's family through the night. The morning opened with a dark, drizzling rain, which continued nearly a week, but duty to those depending on us made it necessary for us to leave, and we took the parting hand tearfully, not expecting to meet again till Jesus comes, as we expected him so soon, but joyfully expecting to meet then never to part. There is no particular reason why we are anxious that Jesus should come soon stronger perhaps than that these partings that are so hard now, whether they be at the grave of loved ones or in farewells to the living, will then all end in a glorious meeting which shall be eternal.

Where no farewells will be said,
No heart be sad;
Where the glory'll be for all,
And all be glad.

Blessed be the name of our God for ever and ever.

Bro. Ladd took us with our baggage to Centre Harbor, where we once more embarked on a Steamer, and away across the Lake to the Weirs, and on to see and care for a mother from whom we must now be almost constantly separated, because duty calls us to go over the hills and through vallies, proclaiming the angel's message, saying, "The hour of his judgment is come."

And wherever duty calls,
We will the voice obey,
Whether our message falls
On ears as dead as they
Who, in the tombs, are sleeping
Death's dreamless sleep profound;

Or, whether roused and warned,
(Though by the cold world scorned,)
Some gladly the message heed;
For we know that the meed
Of our labor shall ne'er
Be in vain in the Lord.

A QUIET HOME.

BRO. GRANT:—I assure you it seems very pleasant to me to escape from the noise of the village, and retire to a quiet spot like this from which I now write. Here we can look abroad over the landscape for miles, and our hearts are drawn out in praise to the Creator, while we behold his wonderful works. I cannot express the joy I feel at the thought that the Lord is my friend. He is the chiefest among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely. He helps us bear our burdens, and brings us out of our trials, in his own good time and way, if we patiently wait on him.

Let us all learn to trust more fully in him under all circumstances. Let us be more careful to pray often in secret. For we know that he will hear us, and reward us openly. Brethren and sisters, pray for me, that I may be useful, and faithful to the end of the race. I often think of the dear friends we met at Wilbraham. That was the most blessed season I ever enjoyed. Pray for me, that if we meet no more in this life, we may have a joyful meeting in the kingdom.

THE LEGACY.

Our blessed Jesus died, and rose again, and ascended up on high; but he left a legacy in which all his followers must share. We cannot find its full value in this short life, for it will take eternity to understand it; but the weakest babe in Christ can get the full benefit of it, for the terms by which we come in possession are repentance, and faith, and obedience.

But what is the legacy? "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye shall have peace." The servant is not above his master, nor the disciple above his lord. "If they persecuted me, they will also persecute you . . ." "If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more they of his household." "Deny thyself and take up thy cross and follow me."

And is this all? Oh, no. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men the most miserable." The blessedness of this legacy is that it grows better and better all the while. It not only saves now, but it saves forever. By it we are made the children of God; "and if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away." "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Let us take the whole: self-denial, deadness to the world, crosses, "patient continuance in well doing;" and it will soon be an eternal weight of glory.

TO MY BRETHREN.

Brothers, sisters, I am lying
On a couch of weary pain,
Yet my heart's not sadly sighing—
"I shall ne'er be well again."
No, my heart is patient, waiting,
Though in weariness I lie,—
Not for moving of the water,
But for Jesus to "pass by."

He who said, "All power is given
Me in heaven and on earth,"
Who the bars of Death hath riven,
Called our brother Laz'rus forth,
He is mighty, he is able;
With believing heart I pray,
While I grasp Faith's golden cable,
Precious Jesus' come this way:—

Come this way in loving mercy,
Speak the healing word to me;
Not in waters spirit troubled,
I am trusting, but in thee.
Blessed promises! I love them,
To the sick how full of hope,
And the prayer of faith shall save them,
And the Lord shall raise them up.

Brother, sister, with fond yearning
All my heart goes out to thee;
In love's fullness to you turning,
I beseech you, pray for me.
Pray, dear ones, in faith believing,
Pour, oh, pour out all your soul
Unto Him whose hand relieving,
His alone can make me whole.

Plead the promise with our Father
Jesus gives us in his word,
That where two or three together
In his name ask of the Lord,
He shall grant their soul's petition,
Jesus in their midst shall be,
Making but this one condition,
"Ask in faith—believe on me."

Pray that heaven's choicest blessing,
Next to sweet salvation free,
All of earth that's worth possessing,
Health, sweet health, be given me
Yet I'm willing thus to suffer,
If it be my Father's will,
I would drink it, did he offer
Cup more bitter, bitter still.

But Faith whispers, "He will save you.
'Tis your loving Father's will,
And your Savior dear would have you,
Needs you in his vineyard still;
Needs you yet to tell the story,
How he died for sinful men;
How he comes, the Lord of glory,
King of kings, on earth to reign."

A SUGGESTION.

BRO. GRANT:—I like the suggestion of having the evidences of the near coming of the Lord in tract form, that they may be scattered like autumn leaves; but would propose that they be made up in separate tracts, one on the twenty-fourth of Matthew, one on the eighth of Daniel, etc.; for this reason: Where the evidences have been compiled, the work has advocated views to some minds contrary to truth. Thus while I believe the argument on the abomination to be incontrovertible, I believe also that much that is compiled with it is subversive to truth; therefore I could not scatter them together. For instance, the

"WOMAN IN THE WILDERNESS."

This is supposed to be the apostate church, from which I must dissent. I mean the woman that fled into the wilderness.

1st. Because the woman that fled was the persecuted church, far different from the one upon the scarlet beast which was the persecutor. One the object, the other the agent of persecution.

But did not the fleeing woman become the apostate woman in the wilderness? To answer this, I suggest the following facts: In Dan. 7th, we have the two churches brought to view during the 1260 years, as agent and object; the one as eyes and mouth, in a horn, the other as being worn out by this politico-ecclesiastical combination. This same power in Matthew 24th is called the abomination of desolation, and when it is set up the saints are to "flee" to the mountains. In Rev. 12, when the devil changes mediums, from Pagan to Papal abomination, then the woman is only to be preserved by flight to the wilderness, or mountains, as the Savior had declared. In Rev. 13, the apostate church is the mouth in the leopard beast, while the saints were the fleeing subjects to the wilderness (Alpine) mountains.

Thus, says Gibbon, "Justinian was punished with the flight of his most faithful subjects." Here are facts, and facts are facts wherever we find them. It is facts we want, and they are abundant to establish our position in all places.

Once more. In Rev. sixth, we have the two churches symbolized; the agent by death on the pale horse, killing; the object, or the afflicted church, by an eagle—the suffering party being killed. That the eagle symbolizes the true church during the 1260 years, is proved by her song in Rev. fifth, for with the other living creatures she sings, "Thou art worthy to take the book and open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

From the days of Constantine, yea, from the days of Christ, the true church has had but one faith—the hope of life through Christ. The devil has proposed an immortal-soul life, which the Catholics adopted and the Protestants endorsed, and the true church did fly to the "wilderness"—"mountains"—from the apostate church supported by the wild beast government, for 1260 years; no change in the principles of either church during that period. Then it is not a fact that the apostate church fled from the dragon or devil, for she was in the majority, or dominant power, and had no occasion to flee; and more, she was the medium of the dragon from the days of Constantine, as she was the medium or mouth for the leopard for forty-two months.

Therefore, if you give the evidences of our faith and position, I would repeat, put them in single tracts, so that if there should be something objectionable to any, it might be left out and not hinder the facts coming before the people. Or if the evidence be compiled, give nothing but facts, that we may scatter with confidence. Yours, H. PRATT.

INDIAN SUMMER.

How bright and beauteous Sol pours forth his cheering rays on nature's blanched and sickly visage, as if he were attempting to restore her wan and consumptive appearance. And, indeed, his efforts are not entirely fruitless. Look! Those large shrubs that have so keenly felt the chilling blight of the hoar-frost, have kindly thrown out a maternal arm to protect the tiny beauty just attempting to unfold its bright petals, unconscious of its untimely visit.

And can it be that nature is indeed convalescent? Will these halcyon days lure us into hopes's quiet harbor respecting her recovery? Nay, verily. The law of nature's God as peremptorily forbids it as the voice of prophecy interdicted Napoleon in his attempts to establish a fifth universal monarchy on this "groaning creation."—Dan. 2: 44. Brumal must as assuredly pay us his visit ere Flora can make her appearance, as that Christ and his saints will constitute the next universal kingdom.—Dan. 7: 19; 18: 27. The lone, autumnal winds declare it, as they sigh gently over nature's cadaverous countenance, thus caused by autumn's annual epidemic. The leaves, like so many invalids prostrated upon their beds of languishing, until they shall mingle with their mother earth, proclaim the same. Euroclydon's harsh hand occasionally seizes and shakes them with a rigor quite in keeping with his stern and merciless nature. And then, like some lenient friend, the soft zephyr gently raises them, as if to restore them to their former elevated and healthy residence.

But, alas! the stern potency of the first, and the gentle friendship of the second, are alike inefficient to restore them from their bed of death. Their unusual beauty is only the brilliancy of the hectic, hence they must as inevitably mingle with their mother earth, as the victim of consumed lungs, whose hopes are revived each alternate day. Yes, vegetation is as entirely dependent for life on Him who in Nain raised the widow's son, as the countless millions that now lie deposited in death's charnel house.

But these sunny days do exceedingly cheer all nature, both animate and inanimate. Who does not involuntarily exclaim, "Beautiful!" while gazing upward at "the azure cope above our head," slightly obscured by the gauzy curtain of smoke, while the frail, silvery gossamer floats as independently as the sail of the noble barge? Who would think Sol was far advanced on his way to pay his annual visit to the goat-like Capricorn; and that in some six or eight weeks he will greet this his northernmost friend?

But thus it is. Though he for many successive days thus profusely shed upon us his genial rays, we do sufficiently discern "the face of the sky" to know every diurnal revolution speeds him on his frozen journey. This is conceded by all; even the American savage, whose habits have christened this portion of the year, now feels admonished by the Great Spirit to make preparations to receive the icy king; hence this is the time he arrays himself in all the paraphernalia for hunting, and goes forth, joyous that the Great Spirit thus delays his ice-bound royalty until the poor Indian can store his mud-plastered wigwam with savory venison. Though as ignorant of letters as the wild beasts that fall by his skilfully directed arrow, he sufficiently understands "the face of the sky" to know these few sunny days do not indicate a revival of nature, but rather "cruel winter."

And shall those who are privileged with God's written oracles dare assert that the world is on the eve of a spiritual summer, because, forsooth, they have laid the wires, as the modus operandi by which to accomplish this great end, such as the establishment of missionary and Bible societies, etc.? The oracles of God declare, that when Christ comes it will be as it was in the days of Noah and Lot, and that the wheat and tares shall grow together until the harvest, and that terrible and dreadful power, symbolized by a horn having eyes and mouth in it, shall prevail against the saints until the Ancient of Days comes. Yes, this law by which we are to be judged tells us that instead of every body's being converted in the last days, some who had previously been converted would "depart" from the faith, giving heed to seducive spirits and doctrines of devils,—which has been in course of fulfillment for several years. Sad indeed it is to see those who have been engaged in proclaiming Christ to a dying world, now turn after demons, who work miracles, it is true, just as predicted in Rev. 16: 14.

Again, Paul shows that in the last days it will be "perilous" for the christian, because the mass of professors will be selfish, instead of self-denying; proud, boasters, instead of meek and gentle; high-minded, instead of humbling themselves; lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God,—take more pains to get to some worldly amusement than to meet with the children of God for worship. Many, very many more Scriptures might be adduced to prove that as we come near the end of time wickedness will be on the increase, and how any one can teach that the world is growing better, is to me truly astonishing. If they read the secular papers (which in many instances are the faithful amanuenses of prophecy), they must see there never were such daily catalogues of crime as at present. Then let us heed the admonition, "Be not deceived" —expect no better days morally until Jesus comes.

May not the number of those who have really left all for Jesus be compared to the few green things of summer that now remain? And the professed church of Christ to the common foliage, whose variegated beauty is enchanting, but whose real life is sapped by pride and rejection of the truth? But thank God that he has some evergreens which are planted so near "the river of life" that they flourish equally in December as in May. As they daily draw living nourishment from the great fountain-head, they never change their color, but are EVERGREEN.

NATURAL DEATH.

It is very generally believed, among us who hold man's complete mortality, that death, or, as we usually call it, natural death, was brought into the world by reason of Adam's transgression in the garden of Eden. Now I can not see how this theory can be harmonized with Gen. 1: 28. "And God blessed them, and said unto them: Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea," etc. It will be borne in mind that this commandment of God to Adam and Eve was before their transgression, and that they were told to multiply and replenish the earth.

We are informed in the same chapter that the herbs were given to man and beasts "for meat." This shows to my mind that death reigned in the vegetable world. And if in the vegetable world, why not in the animal world? I am at a loss to conceive what would be the state of the world, if continued propagation of animated nature were not counterbalanced by a corresponding mortality of the same. Man was commanded to "subdue" the world. If it was perfect, there would have been nothing to "subdue." The serpent, we read, was "more subtle than any beast of the field." How could one beast be more "subtle" than another, if all had been perfectly pure and holy?

Who will give us light on the subject? Let us ever be ready to give a reason for the hope we have within us, by proving all things, and holding fast to that which is good.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

A PREVAILING MALADY.

We meet pale faces and sunken eyes constantly. This shows an error. The error is in the abuse of the common diet of life; not always, but generally. Too much food is the great evil of the day, because it is so very common and has its allurements—we gratify and eat too much. This is the main cause of the pale faces and haggard countenances we meet. The remedy is simple: Eat less. And yet who does it? Few, because it requires moral courage, just the thing which is affected, which is part of the pale face and sunken eye. The dyspeptic is diseased mentally, morally and physically. Of all beings the most miserable is the confirmed dyspeptic. His mind is disturbed, his moral feeling is blunted and disordered, and his body suffers. For what is he fit? He is fit for nothing, not even for "stratagem and spoils." He drones his time away—years, a score sometimes—and his whole life is a blank. If that were all, it would not be so bad; but it is a most wretched, miserable blank, full of vapors, gloom and forebodings. The mind is the torment of the man, making appear real what is unreal, and exaggerating evil. The little good that the man gets is also exaggerated, and this puts him all around in a false position. His judgment is not reliable, though once so correct; his imagination plays tricks with him; deceiving him constantly by magnifying its doings. In a word, the man is morbid—mentally, morally and physically. It took him long to get into this state. He got into it by degrees, almost ere he was aware. Ah, the insinuating habit of alluring the system, which God had made right, but which man is wronging constantly! This great evil is all brought about by littles—a little excess which breaks the back of the camel. Here is the danger. And here is the remedy: Avoid the littles—the little excesses; they seem to be always at the end of our meals. Then cut off that end—that cup of tea or coffee, that dessert or other dainty. This course would generally succeed.

We must guard against the excesses; nobody calls them such. At the time they may give rise only to a little uneasiness, a little headache or sluggishness of feeling. The brain acts less, as it always does when oppressed, overstrained; as it does through the sympathetic channels. After awhile these symptoms will cease, and the eyesight seems to be clouded momentarily; the man will soon be prepared to re-enact the same thing. By-and-by, in the course of his persistence, there will be more uneasiness after his meal, greater headache and dullness. There will be other symptoms gradually stealing upon him. There will be slight pains here and there; beginning, perhaps, in his chest; felt between his shoulders and in his left side. He will gradually become nervous, lose flesh—though not always at first—his hearing is affected, there is a ringing and other unusual sounds, which sometimes greatly frighten him. Sometimes he even will get dizzy and almost fall. He is apt now to have bad sleep and worse dreams, so that night becomes a dreaded time to him. Society begins to be distasteful to him; sometimes he seeks it as if to get rid of the evil that follows him. But he can not shake it off. It follows him because it is himself. These unpleasant accompaniments increase; they increase both in intensity and in number. New symptoms are constantly evolved, new evils attack, until the individual is a walking load of evil. At last it becomes confirmed. And now it is as difficult to remove these evils as it was easy to get them, and it takes as long often to do it. Why does it take so long? It seems to be in the nature of the case, perfecting the work by slow process. But it is the long weakening, the constant sapping, that at last undermines, and establishes, as it were, a second nature.

The difficulty in removing this evil is in the moral courage of the man; he has it not. Though he may resolve a thousand times, a thousand times he breaks his resolve, or rather it breaks itself. It is so difficult to resist, when you have nothing to resist with, no courage or a momentary thing, only seeming strong at the time (when the resolve takes place,) but impotent when the trial comes. So the drunkard; he has no strength of will left, and the dyspeptic is but a drunkard in another sense.

What, then, is to be done? for this is a great evil and must be met, if possible. The remedy is, put a watch and tie upon the man; he himself is not capable of doing it. Or you must leave himself, to the risk of becoming worse, and perhaps of dying, or, if he has self-regard left, to be forced into reformation. He may prefer mending his ways to a worse evil—to dissolution, for death has sometimes horrible pictures for the stomach-ridden invalid. Medicines, the world has long since decided, are of no good in dyspepsia. They may aid in some respects, as time aids, but always at the expense of original power. Time and medicine will kill any man prematurely. The poor afflicted patient must, first of all, remove the cause. He may have been doctoring for years, piling evil upon evil, while the cause, "like a worm in the bud," remained. This is a double abuse of poor nature. Throw aside this incubus, the whole of it; stop aggravating the wound it has made; lessen your food, which a false appetite urges you on to partake, and flatters you that all is right—it is the false "syren song" that accompanies all dyspeptics.

Break off, then, what should never have been indulged in—the little excesses of the table. If you are a laboring man, more food will be required; less if a man of sedentary habits, and especially of literary habits, which weaken the stomach additionally through sympathy. This is the absolute, indispensable condition of all cures. Without it, aggravation can only make the matter worse, and the patient continue as he has—a wretched, suffering man, the "iron in his heart" wherever he goes. Resolutely, then, stop this excess. And this is enough. If any nature is left, any strength, it will develop; it will grow up as a plant long kept down—never so thrifty thereafter, but still having life and being—and infinitely better than the smothered, strangled thing with the weight upon it.

We have spoken of dyspepsia as it is generally brought on, through the stomach and food. "Strong drink" will sometimes do this, excesses in venery, excesses of many kinds, if not of all, all tending to affect the stomach, the organ of tenderness. But whatever the excess which produced the evil, it must be stopped—the stomach must be favored. There are other things that aid, but the great thing is to remove the cause and keep it removed. This is the all-important point, and it is sufficient. With it a cure can be effected; without it, it can not. Cheerfulness of society, it is said, is a good addition, so is traveling in strange lands; so is exercise. But always make a clean bottom by removing the exciting cause. To do this, self must not be gratified, but mortified; it must be done, however unpalatable. Yet how little it is done, as the million of sufferers testify. It is so hard to do, because there is a lack of power; not that the evil is so strong—it is we that are weak, we dyspeptics. Had the man the usual strength which he had in health, he would easily floor his adversary. But this he lacks, and this is the evil; he can hardly cure himself. He does it, however; it is being done daily. Were it not, what would become of us as a nation? of the world? The evil frequently cures itself; it is perhaps hard to say in how many cases. This is fortunate, that it bears its own correction. But it is also unfortunate that it must be strained to such an extent—till the machine is almost ruined. Better begin in time, and save the wreck while its timbers are yet sound.

The friends of these sufferers have a responsibility. It becomes them to see that they are aided, forced, if need be—and it generally needs to be. Aid them, then; be a will to them in place of theirs, which is impotent. It will not do to leave a man unaided in his "vapors;" he is not himself; he must be taken care of; he suffers more than you are aware of. Leave him not rudderless, at the mercy of the winds.—Herald of Health.

HUSK MATTRESSES.

Our rural friends are very hospitable; when we visit them they treat us during the day with the greatest kindness, but they are often cruel to us at night, and most always consign us to a feather bed, in the smothering depressions of which we pass a sleepless night. That a feather bed is a fit thing to sleep upon, is an idea rapidly disappearing, we are happy to say; yet in many communities feathers still prevail, and they are looked upon as silk dresses are, in some measure an index of the wealth, or competence of the owner. It is quite time that all this was changed, and comfort and health consulted rather than show. We say comfort,—for no one after having slept for a few weeks on a hard bed, would willingly return to feathers. Curled hair makes the very best mattress, but is expensive; the next best thing is corn husks, a cheap material, and accessible to all. The inner husks, or shucks, as they are called in some places, allowed to curl up a little, are often used without any preparation. A softer bed is made by slitting the husks in strips, half an inch or so in width; a fork may be be used to facilitate the stripping. The best husk bed we ever saw was made from the husks of green corn, shredded by drawing through a flax hatchel. Husk beds should be opened about once in six months, the husks shaken out from the fine particles and dust, be sprinkled, and allowed to lie in the sun for a while. Treated in this way the husks will be almost as good as new. We give this timely hint, in order that at husking time, those who would enjoy the luxury of a husk bed may take measures to secure the necessary material.—American Agriculturist.

A PREVENTIVE OF CHOLERA.

D. L. W. Lewis of New York, proclaims that fresh air is the best preventive of cholera extant. He says if people will only keep their windows open night and day, giving fresh air a fair chance to fill their lungs and ventilate their apartments and purify their clothing, they run little danger from cholera. He writes: "The great point is to induce people to sleep with their windows open, in cool weather as well as warm. If necessary, put on additional clothing, but above all things have fresh air." Dr. Frank Hamilton, who, when the cholera broke out on Blackwell's Island, kept the people out of doors all day, and the windows of their rooms open at night, and thus in five days checked the ravages of the disease, adds his testimony to that of Dr. Lewis, and says: "The man who can persuade the poor people that with plenty of air they are secure against cholera, will do much." Dr. R. Ogden Doremus also indorses Dr. Lewis by saying: "God's oxygen is essential to life, and one of the best antidotes to disease."

NO MORE SEA.

"And there was no more sea."—REV. 21: 1.

I.

Summer Ocean, idly washing
  This grey rock on which I lean;
Summer Ocean, broadly flashing
  With thy hues of gold and green;
Gently swelling, wildly dashing
  O'er yon island-studded scene;
Summer Ocean, how I'll miss thee,—
  Miss the thunder of thy roar,
Miss the music of thy ripple,
  Miss thy sorrow soothing shore,—
Summer Ocean, how I'll miss thee,
  When "the sea shall be no more."
Summer Ocean, how I'll miss thee,
  As along thy strand I range;
Or as here I sit and watch thee
  In thy moods of endless change—
    Mirthful moods of morning gladness,
    Musing moods of sunset sadness;
    When the dying winds caress thee,
    And the sinking sunbeams kiss thee,
    And the crimson cloudlets press thee,
    And all nature seems to bless thee;—
Summer Ocean, how I'll miss thee,—
  Miss the wonders of thy shore,
Miss the magic of thy grandeur,
  When "the sea shall be no more!"

II.

And yet sometimes in my musings,
  When I think of what shall be,
In the day of earth's new glory,
  Still I seem to roam by thee;
As if all had not departed,
  But the glory lingered still;
As if all that made thee lovely,
  Had remained unchangeable.
Only that which marred thy beauty,—
  Only that had passed away,
Sullen wilds of Ocean-moorland,
  Bloated features of decay,
Only that dark waste of waters,
  Line ne'er fathom'd, eye ne'er scann'd,
Only that shall shrink and vanish,—
  Yielding back the imprison'd land.
Yielding back earth's fertile hollows,
  Long-submerged and hidden plains,
Giving up a thousand valleys
  Of the ancient world's domains.
Leaving still bright azure ranges,
  Winding round this rocky tower;
Leaving still yon gem-like island,
  Sparkling like an ocean-flower.
Leaving still some placid stretches,
  Where the sunbeams bathe at noon,
Leaving still some lake-like reaches,
  Mirrors for the silver moon.
Only all of gloom and horror,
  Idle wastes of endless brine,
Haunts of darkness, storm and danger,—
  These shall be no longer thine.
Backward ebbing, wave and ripple,
  Wondrous scenes shall then disclose;
And like earth's, the wastes of ocean
  Then shall blossom as the rose.

DENIALS, ADMISSIONS, AND AFFIRMATIONS.

I do not deny that man possesses intelligence, and admit that "mind" is frequently used in Scripture as a synonym of "spirit," as also, sometimes, is "soul," "life," "lives," etc., a part being put for the whole. What I mean by saying, "that man has not a spiritual nature," in the present or Adamic life, is (1), that he is not possessed of a "divine nature." What I affirm is (2), that man's nature in his descent from Adam, or in the present life, is wholly "natural," "carnal," or fleshly, "animal," "earthly"; consequently the "spirit in man" (Job 32: 8; Zech. 12: 1) is an attribute of the carnal man, possessed by, originating with, dependent upon, and propagated in the species, through the natural laws of procreation,—grows with his growth, strengthens with his strength, and decays with his decay; that independent of an organism, it has no power, either of perception, internal cognizance, or external manifestation, either in the past, present, or future.

To make this, if possible, still plainer, man is not now possessed of two natures, nor ever will be, at one and the same time; the Adamic nature is one, and that one "fleshly"; and in the resurrected state, all that are in Christ Jesus will have but one nature, and that one spiritual. Man is now a carnal body and a carnal mind; then he will be a spiritual body and a spiritual mind, wholly, exclusively, and completely.

(3.) That as death produces a disorganization of the constituent elements in man's composition, each elementary principle returning to its original condition, as it was prior to man's formation, save that the developed life-seed retains its individuality. So these will remain until the man is reconstructed, recreated, or reproduced, by the mighty power of God, at the resurrection, just as he brought Christ again from the dead when he exerted that power on him. Heb. 13: 20; Eph. 1: 19, 20; Acts 2: 24, 32; 3: 15; 1 Cor. 6: 14; 2 Cor. 4: 14. Examine carefully every one of these references, also Matt. 22: 29.

The "life," "soul" or "spirit"—call it what we may—is therefore of necessity in an inactive, unmanifested, dormant state, incapable of thought, until by its reorganization it is "re-clothed" with its remaining constituent, a spiritual body; and although it has, in the mean time, a being, i. e., an existence, yet it is not a person, a sentient being.

(4.) To obtain that spiritual body, man's nature must be changed; for "God giveth to every seed its own body," i. e., in kind, and "the life" is "the seed"; consequently this change of nature must have its beginning with the seed-principle; for inasmuch as man is flesh (Gen. 6: 3), and "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom (because it is not an heir), neither doth corruption inherit incorruption" (1 Cor. 15: 50), having no title, or perfected claim, by virtue of its descent from Adam, whose disobedience worked a forfeiture of the title of life,—this title of "heirship," which is absolutely necessary to inherit, can therefore only be obtained through Christ, who is the "quickening spirit" or "life-giver," and who is so because of his obedience (Rom. 5: 18, 19), through which he wrought out a perfected title to the inheritance of life (Rom. 7: 10), as the eldest son and "heir of all things," by the divine appointment of the Father (Heb. 1: 2); who also has willed to make us "joint heirs with Christ," by conferring upon us, flesh men, the same spirit which "raised Christ from the dead" (Rom. 8: 9–17), by which he now also lives (John 6: 57), and by which we too like him shall live (John 14: 19); because it is the reception of this spirit, or mind of Christ, that begins, carries on, and perfects that change of nature in us, by which we ultimately come to be partakers of the divine nature (2 Pet. 1: 4), and so children, therefore "heirs," heirs "to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power (or spirit) of God, through faith, unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time."—1 Pet. 1: 4, 5.

This spirit or mind that was in Christ constitutes the righteousness of God, by which we are justified; or that life of his by which we are saved (Rom. 5: 10); the righteousness of God which is through the faith of Christ, by which we may know him, and by which we may know the power of his resurrection; by which we, flesh men, may attain to the resurrection from among the dead.—Phil. 3: 9–11. Diaglott Trans.

This spirit comprehends the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which makes us free from the law of sin and death, or sin and die, as God has declared—"The soul that sinneth, it shall DIE," unless it turn from its sin and comes back to God; in which case it "shall not surely die" (Ezek. 18: 20–22), being made free from the law of sin and death, but "shall surely live," having come under the power of the law of the spirit of life,—God's law of righteousness or righteous law; for God is "the spirit of life," which law of life raised up Jesus again from among dead ones (1 Pet. 1: 1—Diaglott), and made him the depositary of that life to be conferred on us, in perfect conformity to and entire harmony with God's testimony of his Son. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 9–12; John 5: 21, 26, and 6: 40, 51, 54, 63.

Like all other works of the Deity, that "change of nature" in us has its beginning, development, and completion, by process of of time and circumstance; its origin, when the "carnal or flesh-mind" is "begotten again," "begotten by the word of truth" (James 1: 18), "the incorruptible seed" (1 Pet. 1: 23), termed conversion; then "quickened by the Spirit" at the time of our being "sealed," which Paul says (Eph. 1: 13) is after we believe, but counts us righteous when we believe; i. e., believe unto obedience as Abraham did (Rom. 4: 23, 24); at which time of sealing we are represented (Mark 4: 28) by "the blade"; then, when we have added to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, charity (2 Pet. 1: 5–7), brought forth the fruit of righteousness (Heb. 12: 11; James 1: 17, 18), we are represented by "the ear" (Mark 4: 28), "kernel" or "grain" (1 Cor. 15: 36, 37), being infants no longer. Eph. 4.

After that (1 Cor. 15: 23), "in the resurrection," when the harvest is come, we are represented by "the full corn in the ear," or perfected corn (Mark 4: 28; Heb. 12: 23; 1 Cor. 13: 10–12; 15: 53, 54, and 49), at time we shall be "complete in him." This constitutes the "new birth," having had its conception (conversion), its quickening and progressive development (growth in grace), and its final deliverance and full fruition (the resurrection state), when the sons of God are manifested, brought forth, or "delivered from the bondage of corruption" (Rom. 8: 19–21), shining forth as the sun, eis, into, the kingdom of their Father (Matt. 13: 43); after which they can die no more, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection (Luke 20: 36), when mortality will have been swallowed up of life (2 Cor. 5: 4), because that life had been manifested in our mortal flesh, i. e., in us, flesh men (2 Cor. 4: 11), from the time we were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise (Eph. 1: 13), received the spirit of adoption (Rom. 8: 15), i. e., which is to adopt, as is proven by verse 23, constituting us heirs of eternal life, or a spiritual seed, to be sown in death, and waiting for the ADOPTION, "the redemption of the body" (Rom. 8: 23), or to put on a spiritual body—immortality, in the resurrection morn, when the Son of God, for whom we wait, shall come from heaven (1 Thess. 1: 10) to wake us out of sleep (Job 14: 12; Dan. 12: 2; John 11: 11; 1 Thess. 4: 15, 16; Rev. 14: 13), and changing our vile bodies, shall fashion them like unto his own glorious body (Phil. 3: 21); when the morning stars will sing together, and all the sons of God will shout for joy. Job 38: 7.

Under the law, this "life-seed" was represented by the seed in the pomegranate on the skirts of the high priest's robe; which, on account of the exuberance of its seeds, was used as an emblem of plenty, and represented that multitudinous seed in Christ, promised through him to Abraham, which was to be like the sand upon the sea-shore, or the stars in the firmament, innumerable,—that vast multitude which John on Patmos saw in vision, when carried by the prophetic Spirit down to the scenes of the resurrection, yet future, where he saw that great multitude, redeemed by his blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation (Rev. 5: 9), which no man could number, standing before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes—spiritual natures or bodies, and palms in their hands. 7: 9.

Hence Christ, having become our High Priest, is represented as our life, and that life of ours as being hid with Christ in God, waiting for the time appointed of the Father (Gal. 4: 2), in his righteousness—the robe of our high priest, until Christ who is our life shall appear, and then shall we also appear with him in glory. Col. 3: 3, 4.

Having now fully defined our position, we will in our next examine Isa. 31: 3; viz., "flesh versus spirit." O. W. STETSON.

ENDING OF SECOND WOE AND SIXTH TRUMPET.

In the published lectures of our deceased Bro. William Miller, prior to 1840, upon the sixth trumpet and second woe, he proved satisfactorily to my mind, that the second woe ended with the closing events of the European revolution, in the year 1815, at which time the fourteenth verse of the eleventh chapter of Revelation was fulfilled, which reads thus: "The second woe is past, and behold the third woe cometh quickly." The term "quickly," he claimed, measured the time between the ending of the second woe and the beginning of the third, and would be about thirty years, during which time the winds of war, and other elements of evil, that would begin to let loose at the commencement of the third woe, would be restrained.

In confirmation of his conclusions, he referred to the almost universal peace and prosperity that succeeded that revolution, and did continue, as we shall see, about thirty years.

In about A. D. 1840, Bro. Josiah Litch proved, in an article or pamphlet upon the duration of the sixth trumpet, which was "prepared for an hour and a day and a month and a year" (Rev. 9: 15), being three hundred and ninety-one years and fifteen days, beginning with the taking of Constantinople by the Ottomans, about 1451, would end on a specified day in August, 1842, at which time he claimed the Turkish supremacy would be up. Those familiar with those views and European history of that year, will remember that on that very self-same day the allied powers of Europe, in the then pending war between the Pasha of Egypt and the Grand Turk, in a diplomatic note to the Sultan, informed him that he need give himself no further trouble about the war; that they (the Allies) had taken the matter into their own hands, and would coerce the refractory Pasha into subjection (which they did), and the Sultan "accepted of the intervention."

Bro. Litch, and nearly all the leading brethren, received the news of that intervention as a marked fulfillment of this prophecy, which ended the independent sovereignty of that empire; and subsequent events have confirmed that conclusion. Since that day, that power has been familiarly called the "sick man," whose dissolution was at hand, and it belonged to the sovereigns of Europe to prepare for the dividing up of its dead carcass.

These two points, the ending of second woe in 1815, and the sixth trumpet in 1842, I at the time accepted as next to demonstrated facts, and now, after a lapse of about twenty-four years, can see no good reason for changing that conclusion; but, on the contrary, can see much to confirm it.

Soon after the passing of the time movement of 1844, I had an interview with a good brother (I. D. Knapp, who was with us in that blessed movement, and who, thank God, is yet joyful in hope), upon our whereabouts in the prophetic events of the world. After having reviewed the various reliable points of evidence, we came to the conclusion that we had passed the two prominent landmarks named above, and must therefore be living on the verge of the third woe and the seventh trumpet. By these two ports we concluded to make fast our drifting barks, and watch the progress of events, being assured, if right, we should soon have confirmatory evidence. Our watchfulness soon brought light that has shone with increased brightness up to the present time.

We will now note a little of this increased testimony. The years 1845 and 1846 were remarkable for fires, inundations, shipwrecks, etc. 1847 for the Irish famine, and 1848 for the mighty whirlwind of revolution that broke out and spread over Europe, upsetting the thrones and kingdoms, as things of naught. The succeeding years have been followed by great national evils, among which may be mentioned the Crimean and the Italian wars in Europe, the mighty rebellion in these United States, which caused distress and perplexity in abundance, both at home and abroad; also wars and revolutions in Central and South America, likewise in China, and other parts of Asia, and, in fact, throughout nearly the whole habitable world.

To cap the climax, we now see the great powers of Europe waking up and preparing for war on a scale never before witnessed, and rushing forward to the conflict "like the rushing of mighty waters," under the guidance of those unclean spirits, which most evidently have "gone forth unto the kings of the earth and the whole world." And what for? The Revelator says, "To gather them unto the battle of that great day of God Almighty." O, how full of meaning is the declaration of our Savior at this time,—"BEHOLD! I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments." Who is there that cannot see the end of these things? Surely, they must be blind indeed.

But to the application. If these evils, these great and mighty events, are a part of any woe, and are to be classed under any trumpet, they most certainly are parts of the third woe and seventh trumpet, the others being far in the past.

Again we read, among the events that are to take place under this woe and this trumpet, "The nations" are to be "angry." If they are not now angry, it is difficult to imagine what they will do when they are so. But all accounts from the belligerent nations represent them to be perfectly frenzied with the war spirit, and that they "are angry." There is no mistaking this point.

The conclusion of the subject is this: that for twenty years or more we have been living "in days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound," in the "which the mystery of God" is "to be finished," as he hath declared unto "his servants the prophets," and in the incipient stages of the third woe; and have advanced so far toward the end that we are justified in looking daily for "the voice of the archangel and the trump of God" to be heard, which will raise the dead and usher in the solemn scenes of the judgment. Are we prepared? O how solemn the inquiry!

Now if this testimony in 1842 was inspiring to the child of God in those days, how much more should it be now. It was then like the shooting rays of light that betokened the approach of morning; but now it is like the approach of noon-day light. Had we now the hearing ear, and the applying conscience we then had, with this array of increased testimony, it appears to me we might arouse the world. But, alas! the nearer we approximate to the final day the less interest is manifested in these great and all-absorbing themes.

But, thank the Lord, the truth and the work of preparation are not retarded; they are most surely accomplishing their approximate ends. To the one class, they are like the plagues upon Egypt, hardening the hearts of the children of men, and fitting them for an overthrow more terrible than that of Pharoah and his hosts at the Red Sea. Upon the other class, to those who have "an eye to see and ear to hear," they are leading them out more and more from the world, and preparing them for that great deliverance of which that which was wrought by Moses was but a type, and soon they will be called away to stand upon the sea of glass, when they will sing, not only "the song of Moses," but that "of the Lamb." Praise the Lord for the hope.

For the World's Crisis.

DID THE BRIDEGROOM COME IN 1844?

The reader may consider this a foolish question to ask, and so it is. But what shall we say of a theory that teaches the affirmative of this question? For one, dear reader, we think, to say the least, it demands a passing notice. Therefore, we wish to call your attention to the following considerations: The claim is set up by a certain class of Adventists [Seventh Day], that the entire parable of the ten virgins, in Matt. 25, has had its complete fulfillment in the history of the Advent movement from 1840 to 1844. We are told that the midnight cry has been given, and on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, the Bridegroom came, and those that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. Thus placing the coming of Christ, or the Bridegroom, many years in the past. Now we wish to be excused from endorsing a theory so manifestly absurd. We choose to take a more consistent view of this matter, and believe that the coming of the Bridegroom is yet future.

The Bridegroom, in the parable, represents Christ, as all will admit. Then why may not the coming of the Bridegroom represent the coming of Christ? We think it does. Nothing seems more evident. Now if the Bridegroom came in 1844, as is claimed, will some one please tell us where he came to? and who saw him? He certainly did not come to this earth, from the fact that no one saw him. But when he comes in the clouds of heaven, we are told that "every eye shall see him." But hold, says the objector, we do not hold that the second coming of Christ has taken place,—by no means. Then we ask, why adopt a theory that teaches such an erroneous view? The coming of the Bridegroom is nothing more nor less than the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; and we cannot place the coming of one in the past unless we do the other. There is no dodging this point. But the theory under consideration teaches that the coming of the Bridegroom was his changing his position from the holy to the most holy place in the heavenly sanctuary, which took place on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844.

Admitting, for argument's sake, that such a change did then and there take place, where is the consistency in saying that that was the coming of the Bridegroom? We see none whatever. To say that the change of ministration of our great High Priest, from the holy to the holiest of all, providing such a change has taken place, is what is meant by the coming of the Bridegroom, is contrary to reason, revelation and common sense.

Query. How could the wise virgins follow the Bridegroom by faith into the most holy place on the tenth day of the seventh month, when they had no faith or knowledge that such a change had taken place for several years after? Consistency, where art thou? Again. When the Bridegroom came in the parable, they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. No admittance after that. In the likeness, or fulfillment we are told that when the Bridegroom came in 1844, those that were ready went in with him to the most holy place, and the door was left wide open. Since then, many have found admittance, and there is still a chance. Where, we ask, is the likeness, or similitude, between the parable and its so-called fulfillment?

That the coming of the Bridegroom represents the coming of Christ, is most positively shown in the closing up of the parable in these words: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh." But, say the advocates of the above theory, those who make the coming of the Bridegroom represent the coming of Christ fail to show that there will be any knocking for admittance after the Lord comes. True, say they, there will be a cry, but it will not be, "Lord, Lord, open to us." No, no; but, "mountains and rocks, fall on us," etc. We have only to cite the reader on this point to Luke 13: 25, which reads as follows: "When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us," etc. In whatever light we may view the knocking, as brought to view in this testimony, one thing is certain, namely: the master of the house has not yet risen up and shut to the door; neither will the door be shut while probation lasts. None, who have not a theory to serve, can fail to see that the shut door, as brought to view in Luke 13: 25, synchronizes with the shut door in the parable. Also, that the "knocking" is synonymous with the knocking in the parable, which events are yet future.

The mistaken notion that the Bridegroom came in 1844, gave rise to that error of all errors, to wit: the tight-shut door, or no salvation,—views which disgraced the Advent cause for several years. As that view has been long since discarded, honesty demands that we renounce our faith in a position that led to such an erroneous conclusion.

But, says the objector, in order to have a perfect likeness, both histories must be complete; all the events in both must be in the past. This is the very point, reader, we wish particularly noticed. That there is a certain definite point of time, marked by the adverb "then," when the kingdom of heaven shall "be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom," none will deny. But there is a difference of opinion as to the chronology of this definite point of time. The word "then," which commences the chapter, is an adverb of time, and has reference to the time spoken of in the preceding paragraph, which reads as follows: "But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour when he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened," etc. When? Why, when the evil servant is cut asunder, and his portion appointed with the hypocrites, of course. We would like to know by what rule of grammar it can be made to apply anywhere else. If any one has any authority for any other grammatical construction of the word "then," we would like to see it.

Our position, then, is chiefly this: We believe that the first Advent movement, from 1840 to 1844, was a fulfillment of that part of the parable represented by the going forth of the virgins to meet the Bridegroom. Since 1844, we have been, and still are, living in the tarrying time. The rest of the parable remains yet to be fulfilled. We claim that the tarrying in the parable synchronizes with the tarrying of the vision. "If the vision tarry, wait for it," implying that the Bridegroom would tarry beyond the time set for his return. Now, if the cry was given in 1844, and the tarrying of the Bridegroom was confined to the short space of time from March to October of that year, as is claimed, then, instead of its being midnight when the cry was made, it was only the first part of the morning, as all must see.

Again, if the Bridegroom was to tarry only from March to October, a few months, there seemingly would have been no occasion for taking a vessel of oil with their lamps; as a lamp full would have been sufficient to have lasted. Thus we fail to discover any correct likeness, or similitude, between the parable and its fulfillment, by the Advent body, with the exception of the "going forth," and the "tarrying time," which we now occupy.

But, says the objector, the midnight cry must be given during probation, from the fact that the foolish virgins are told, while applying for oil, to "go . . . to them that sell and buy" for themselves. The argument drawn from this is, that probation had not closed when the cry was made, as there was a chance to buy oil; or, in other words, a chance to get a preparation for the Lord's coming. This argument amounts to nothing, from the fact that not one of the foolish virgins that went to buy obtained a particle of oil. While they were gone "to buy, the Bridegroom came; and they that were ready [the wise] went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins [the foolish that had been away to buy oil], saying, Lord, Lord, open to us." There is not a particle of evidence that one of the foolish ever gained admittance. So will it be "when once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door," there will then be no admittance. Those who have neglected to seek a due preparation, will be forever shut out of the kingdom.

In conclusion, reader, let us look at some of the results of the theory under examination. (1.) All that did not follow the Bridegroom, by faith, into the most holy place, on the tenth day of the seventh month, are foolish virgins. (2.) Inasmuch as not one of the foolish virgins ever gained admittance after the door was shut, so none of the Advent body, only such as went in by faith, from the holy to the most holy, on the tenth day of the seventh month, can ever gain admittance to the New Jerusalem. How foolish, then, for Elds. Litch, Grant, Himes, Brewer, and many others, to be publishing and trying to arouse a formal church to get ready for the coming of the Bridegroom, when his coming is already in the past. Not only so, but they are all foolish virgins, whose cases are irrevocably fixed. They are forever shut out of the kingdom of God. There is no evading this point. Therefore we would respectfully decline endorsing a theory that leads to such erroneous and unscriptural conclusions.

THREE JERUSALEMS.

Elder A., as you make three Jerusalems in your theory—two yet future—I want to know which was the one promised to Abraham; for through a certain promise, he looked for a city which had foundations? After urging this point, it was thought that the one which is to come down was the one promised. Then I thought I might be excused from taking much interest in the one to be built by strangers, as I could expect to be heir only to the one promised to Abraham.

Elder B., what do you think about the two cities in the future?

"I do not believe there is any city coming down from heaven."

Elder C., what are your views?

"I think both cities will be merged into one."

Elder Zechariah, what was your view of that city which was to be built up by the BRANCH, aided by strangers, or those that were afar off? Isa. 60; Zech. 6: 12.

"Just what I said, that it should come to pass if they would diligently obey the voice of the Lord their God."

Elder D., did those Jews diligently obey the voice of the Lord?

"No."

Then that city will not be built up for them, will it?

"I declare, I never looked at it in that light before."

Well, what do you think?

"I think that it will not be built."

Just so it seems to me. H. PRATT.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT.

In every age of Christendom there has been what may be called the Religion of the World, which so far imitates the one true faith as to deceive the unthinking and weak. The world does not set itself openly in opposition to religious truth, as such. It has, in all the ages, acknowledged, in one sense or other, God's truth, attached to one or other of its own characteristics. Men are influenced by the spirit of the age in which they live; and selecting that portion of religious truth which corresponds most closely to that spirit, they make the combination the sum and substance of all revelation. Thus their faith, and consequently their practice, becomes distorted, incomplete, false. Every command in God's revelation is necessary in faith and practice for the complete development and regeneration of our nature. The neglect of some of these commands, and the exaggeration of others, therefore, either in particular ages, or in individuals, makes the work incomplete.

This influence on the individual may be seen in the multiplicity of sects by which Christendom is cursed. Some individual, with unusual mental or other gifts, grasps one or two articles of God's truth, tears them from their place in the complete circle, exaggerates them, magnifies them into the sum of all truth, makes the segment the complete circle, makes them the watch-word, the battle-cry for followers, and the result is a new division in the christian church.

The same influence may also be seen upon the ages. Each has its own particular mark. Even in the early days of the church, Satan, playing upon the weakness of our sinful nature, fashioned the religion of the world, by connecting a portion of the truth with the philosophy of the day, making the combination partly like christianity, but in reality a bitter foe to it.

As time went on, the temper of the age changed, and with it the religion of the world. The age was rude and fierce, and the popular faith of the day took the darker side of the gospel. Leaving the joy and cheerfulness of a firm faith in all the gospel's commands and promises, it took only its awful mysteriousness, its fearful glory, its sovereign, inflexible justice, as its sum and substance. "God is a consuming fire," was the religion of the day in what we now call the Dark Ages. It entirely forgot that "God is love" also. The religion of the world was then a fearful religion. Superstitions and cruelties abounded. The noble firmness, the graceful austerity of the true christian, were superceded by forbidding spectres—harsh and cruel, forbidding and repulsive.

But what is the world's device in our own day? The very opposite of that in the Dark Ages, and one, we believe, even more pernicious. The religion of the day has now taken the brighter side of the gospel, its tidings of comfort, its precepts of love. It has now become pure humanitarianism. All darker, deeper views of our common sinful nature are lost in the bright and beautiful pictures we draw of the God of nature and of grace.

This is the religion natural to a civilized age; and well has Satan and our inclinations dressed and completed it into an idol of God's truth. As the reason is cultivated, the taste formed, the affections and sentiments refined, a general decency and grace will of course spread over the face of society, quite independently of the influence of revelation. Beauty, and delicacy, and propriety,—all natural outgrowths of our common nature,—extend to the conduct of life, to all we have, all we do, and all we are. Elegance is gradually made the test and standard of virtue, which is no longer thought to possess intrinsic value, or even to exist, further than that it leads to quiet and comfort and general refinement. Conscience is forgotten as an independent arbiter of actions, and its authority is in various ways explained away. Partly it is superceded by the so-called "moral sense," which is merely a love for the beautiful; partly by the "rule of expediency," which is substituted for it in the details of our conduct. But conscience is stern and gloomy in its commands. It tells of guilt and of prospective punishment for sins. When its terrors disappear in our religious knowledge of ourselves, then will vanish also, in the creed of the day, those fearful images of divine wrath and judgment with which Holy Scripture abounds. They are explained away by sophistry, by cunning, and by sin. Everything is bright and cheerful. Religion is pleasant and easy. Benevolence is the chief virtue. Intolerance, excess of zeal, are not only unpopular, but deadly sins. Austerity is an absurdity. Even firmness in faith and doctrine, is looked upon with suspicion and distrust. With our new discoveries, and the cultivation of our tastes and intellect, religion will commonly seem to be dull and uninteresting. Hence, any new excitement is eagerly sought for and rewarded. New systems, new plans, new doctrines, new objects in religion, and new and bewildering preachers, are necessary to satisfy the innate lack we feel for the real and true.

Such, in a great degree, is the religion of the day—simply the natural production of the human heart under contingent circumstances, colored and modified in words and phrases and general tone, and enlightened and exalted in a measure, by christianity. It drops one whole side of gospel truth—it explains away the austere, inflexible law of God's justice, and considers it sufficient for happiness here and hereafter, to be benevolent, courteous, candid, correct in conduct, and delicate. It has no true fear of God, no fervent zeal for his honor, no deep hatred of sin, no zealous adherence to doctrinal truth, no special sensitiveness about the means of gaining ends, no warm loyalty to God's church, no true sense of the authority of religion as external to the mind.

"God is love." He is also "a consuming fire." As sinners on the road to heaven or hell, we must love and fear till our dying day. Mere mental culture will not save us; mere sentiment will not save us. "Progress," "development," "humanitarianism," "moral culture," "refinement," are, in this age, the devil's battle-cry to drown our ears to the voice of God, through our own consciences, which tell us of a judgment to come, and of punishment, not only for sins committed, but for duties left undone. This is the darker side of the gospel, which we, in our day, have almost dropped from our belief and practice.—American Churchman.

FLATTERY.

It is wrong to flatter those who are just starting upon pilgrimage. It has a bad effect upon them when they begin to see how vile and wicked they really are. Words of praise spoken at such times, designed to encourage, may do a great deal of harm. The Holy Spirit will not deal too harshly with them. We need not fear that Spirit causing them to think too meanly of themselves. Let them humble themselves; it will do them good. God will exalt them in due time. He does not desire us to do it. By flattering them, and telling them what consistent lives they have lived in the past, you will make them ashamed of having humbled themselves, and drown all their convictions; when, probably, had we let them alone, they would have become humble followers of that meek and lowly Jesus, instead of stiff-necked, pharisaical professors.

How often are prospects of great revivals killed in this way. Let us be careful how we compliment those who are being humbled by the mighty power of God. Let the naked sword of the Spirit do its work.

LONGINGS.

In our hours of loneliness, we often express the desire of meeting with our dear brethren and sisters, when they meet to worship the Lord, and tell of his dealings toward them. We have prayed much for this privilege, yet we would say, not my will, but Thine be done.

Still we cannot help longing to meet with the children of our Father, and have not yet given up all hope of having our request granted in this life. We remember that many others are in a similar situation, and we know that our Master doeth all things well. He will withhold nothing that is for our good.

Let us trust in him in adversity, as well as in prosperity. If we are deprived the privilege of meeting our friends here, we shall strive to live near to Jesus, and when he is revealed in glory, we shall meet all the dear saints to part no more forever.

Pray for us, for we deeply feel the need of your prayers, "and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

NO MORE SEA.

"And there was no more sea."—Rev. 21: 1.

I.

Summer Ocean, idly washing
This grey rock on which I lean;
Summer Ocean, broadly flashing
With thy hues of gold and green;
Gently swelling, wildly dashing
O'er yon island-studded scene;
Summer Ocean, how I'll miss thee,—
Miss the thunder of thy roar,
Miss the music of thy ripple,
Miss thy sorrow soothing shore,—
Summer Ocean, how I'll miss thee,
When "the sea shall be no more."
Summer Ocean, how I'll miss thee,
As along thy strand I range;
Or as here I sit and watch thee
In thy moods of endless change—
Mirthful moods of morning gladness,
Musing moods of sunset sadness;
When the dying winds caress thee,
And the sinking sunbeams kiss thee,
And the crimson cloudlets press thee,
And all nature seems to bless thee;—
Summer Ocean, how I'll miss thee,—
Miss the wonders of thy shore,
Miss the magic of thy grandeur,
When "the sea shall be no more!"

II.

And yet sometimes in my musings,
When I think of what shall be,
In the day of earth's new glory,
Still I seem to roam by thee;
As if all had not departed,
But the glory lingered still;
As if all that made thee lovely,
Had remained unchangeable.
Only that which marred thy beauty,—
Only that had passed away,
Sullen wilds of Ocean-moorland,
Bloated features of decay,
Only that dark waste of waters,
Line ne'er fathom'd, eye ne'er scann'd,
Only that shall shrink and vanish,—
Yielding back the imprison'd land.
Yielding back earth's fertile hollows,
Long-submerged and hidden plains,
Giving up a thousand valleys
Of the ancient world's domains.
Leaving still bright azure ranges,
Winding round this rocky tower;
Leaving still yon gem-like island,
Sparkling like an ocean-flower.
Leaving still some placid stretches,
Where the sunbeams bathe at noon,
Leaving still some lake-like reaches,
Mirrors for the silver moon.
Only all of gloom and horror,
Idle wastes of endless brine,
Haunts of darkness, storm and danger,—
These shall be no longer thine.
Backward ebbing, wave and ripple,
Wondrous scenes shall then disclose;
And like earth's, the wastes of ocean
Then shall blossom as the rose.

DENIALS, ADMISSIONS, AND AFFIRMATIONS.

I do not deny that man possesses intelligence, and admit that "mind" is frequently used in Scripture as a synonym of "spirit," as also, sometimes, is "soul," "life," "lives," etc., a part being put for the whole. What I mean by saying, "that man has not a spiritual nature," in the present or Adamic life, is (1), that he is not possessed of a "divine nature." What I affirm is (2), that man's nature in his descent from Adam, or in the present life, is wholly "natural," "carnal," or fleshly, "animal," "earthly"; consequently the "spirit in man" (Job 32: 8; Zech. 12: 1) is an attribute of the carnal man, possessed by, originating with, dependent upon, and propagated in the species, through the natural laws of procreation,—grows with his growth, strengthens with his strength, and decays with his decay; that independent of an organism, it has no power, either of perception, internal cognizance, or external manifestation, either in the past, present, or future.

To make this, if possible, still plainer, man is not now possessed of two natures, nor ever will be, at one and the same time; the Adamic nature is one, and that one "fleshly"; and in the resurrected state, all that are in Christ Jesus will have but one nature, and that one spiritual. Man is now a carnal body and a carnal mind; then he will be a spiritual body and a spiritual mind, wholly, exclusively, and completely.

(3.) That as death produces a disorganization of the constituent elements in man's composition, each elementary principle returning to its original condition, as it was prior to man's formation, save that the developed life-seed retains its individuality. So these will remain until the man is reconstructed, recreated, or reproduced, by the mighty power of God, at the resurrection, just as he brought Christ again from the dead when he exerted that power on him. Heb. 13: 20; Eph. 1: 19, 20; Acts 2: 24, 32; 3: 15; 1 Cor. 6: 14; 2 Cor. 4: 14. Examine carefully every one of these references, also Matt. 22: 29.

The "life," "soul" or "spirit"—call it what we may—is therefore of necessity in an inactive, unmanifested, dormant state, incapable of thought, until by its reorganization it is "re-clothed" with its remaining constituent, a spiritual body; and although it has, in the mean time, a being, i. e., an existence, yet it is not a person, a sentient being.

(4.) To obtain that spiritual body, man's nature must be changed; for "God giveth to every seed its own body," i. e., in kind; and "the life" is "the seed"; consequently this change of nature must have its beginning with the seed-principle; for inasmuch as man is flesh (Gen. 6: 3), and "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom (because it is not an heir), neither doth corruption inherit incorruption" (1 Cor. 15: 50), having no title, or perfected claim, by virtue of its descent from Adam, whose disobedience worked a forfeiture of the title of life,—this title of "heirship," which is absolutely necessary to inherit, can therefore only be obtained through Christ, who is the "quickening spirit" or "life-giver," and who is so because of his obedience (Rom. 5: 18, 19), through which he wrought out a perfected title to the inheritance of life (Rom. 7: 10), as "the eldest son and "heir of all things," by the divine appointment of the Father (Heb. 1: 2); who also has willed to make us "joint heirs with Christ," by conferring upon us, flesh men, the same spirit which "raised Christ from the dead" (Rom. 8: 9–17), by which he now also lives (John 6: 57), and by which we too like him shall live (John 14: 19); because it is the reception of this spirit, or mind of Christ, that begins, carries on, and perfects that change of nature in us, by which we ultimately come to be partakers of the divine nature (2 Pet. 1: 4), and so children, therefore "heirs," heirs "to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power (or spirit) of God, through faith, unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time."—1 Pet. 1: 4, 5.

This spirit or mind that was in Christ constitutes the righteousness of God, by which we are justified; or that life of his by which we are saved (Rom. 5: 10); the righteousness of God which is through the faith of Christ, by which we may know him, and by which we may know the power of his resurrection; by which we, flesh men, may attain to the resurrection from among the dead.—Phil. 3: 9–11. Diaglott Trans.

This spirit comprehends the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which makes us free from the law of sin and death, or sin and die, as God has declared—"The soul that sinneth, it shall DIE," unless it turn from its sin and comes back to God; in which case it "shall not surely die" (Ezek. 18: 20–22), being made free from the law of sin and death, but "shall surely live," having come under the power of the law of the spirit of life,—God's law of righteousness or righteous law; for God is "the spirit of life," which law of life raised up Jesus again from among dead ones (1 Pet. 1: 1—Diaglott), and made him the depositary of that life to be conferred on us, in perfect conformity to and entire harmony with God's testimony of his Son. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 9–12; John 5: 21, 26, and 6: 40, 51, 54, 63.

Like all other works of the Deity, that "change of nature" in us has its beginning, development, and completion, by process of of time and circumstance; its origin, when the "carnal or flesh-mind" is "begotten again," "begotten by the word of truth" (James 1: 18), "the incorruptible seed" (1 Pet. 1: 23), termed conversion; then "quickened by the Spirit" at the time of our being "sealed," which Paul says (Eph. 1: 13) is after we believe, but counts us righteous when we believe; i. e., believe unto obedience as Abraham did (Rom. 4: 23, 24); at which time of sealing we are represented (Mark 4: 28) by "the blade"; then, when we have added to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, charity (2 Pet. 1: 5–7), brought forth the fruit of righteousness (Heb. 12: 11; James 1: 17, 18), we are represented by "the ear" (Mark 4: 28), "kernel" or "grain" (1 Cor. 15: 36, 37), being infants no longer. Eph. 4.

After that (1 Cor. 15: 23), "in the resurrection," when the harvest is come, we are represented by "the full corn in the ear," or perfected corn (Mark 4: 28; Heb. 12: 23; 1 Cor. 13: 10–12; 15: 53, 54, and 49), at time we shall be "complete in him." This constitutes the "new birth,"* having had its conception (conversion), its quickening and progressive development (growth in grace), and its final deliverance and full fruition (the resurrection state), when the sons of God are manifested, brought forth, or "delivered from the bondage of corruption" (Rom. 8: 19–21), shining forth as the sun, eis, into, the kingdom of their Father (Matt. 13: 43); after which they can die no more, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection (Luke 20: 36), when mortality will have been swallowed up of life (2 Cor. 5: 4), because that life had been manifested in our mortal flesh, i. e., in us, flesh men (2 Cor. 4: 11), from the time we were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise (Eph. 1: 13), received the spirit of adoption (Rom. 8: 15), i. e., which is to adopt, as is proven by verse 23, constituting us heirs of eternal life, or a spiritual seed, to be sown in death, and waiting for the ADOPTION, "the redemption of the body" (Rom. 8: 23), or to put on a spiritual body—immortality, in the resurrection morn, when the Son of God, for whom we wait, shall come from heaven (1 Thess. 1: 10) to wake us out of sleep (Job 14: 12; Dan. 12: 2; John 11: 11; 1 Thess. 4: 15, 16; Rev. 14: 13), and changing our vile bodies, shall fashion them like unto his own glorious body (Phil. 3: 21); when the morning stars will sing together, and all the sons of God will shout for joy. Job 38: 7.

Under the law, this "life-seed" was represented by the seed in the pomegranate on the skirts of the high priest's robe; which, on account of the exuberance of its seeds, was used as an emblem of plenty, and represented that multitudinous seed in Christ, promised through him to Abraham, which was to be like the sand upon the sea-shore, or the stars in the firmament, innumerable,—that vast multitude which John on Patmos saw in vision, when carried by the prophetic Spirit down to the scenes of the resurrection, yet future, where he saw that great multitude, redeemed by his blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation (Rev. 5: 9), which no man could number, standing before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes—spiritual natures or bodies, and palms in their hands. 7: 9.

Hence Christ, having become our High Priest, is represented as our life, and that life of ours as being hid with Christ in God, waiting for the time appointed of the Father (Gal. 4: 2), in his righteousness—the robe of our war spirit, high priest, until Christ who is our life shall appear, and then shall we also appear with him in glory. Col. 3: 3, 4.

Having now fully defined our position, we will in our next examine Isa. 31: 3; viz., "flesh versus spirit." G. W. Stetson.

ENDING OF SECOND WOE AND SIXTH TRUMPET.

In the published lectures of our deceased Bro. William Miller, prior to 1840, upon the sixth trumpet and second woe, he proved satisfactorily to my mind, that the second woe ended with the closing events of the European revolution, in the year 1815, at which time the fourteenth verse of the eleventh chapter of Revelation was fulfilled, which reads thus: "The second woe is past, and behold the third woe cometh quickly." The term "quickly," he claimed, measured the time between the ending of the second woe and the beginning of the third, and would be about thirty years, during which time the winds of war, and other elements of evil, that would begin to let loose at the commencement of the third woe, would be restrained.

In confirmation of his conclusions, he referred to the almost universal peace and prosperity that succeeded that revolution, and did continue, as we shall see, about thirty years.

In about A. D. 1840, Bro. Josiah Litch proved, in an article or pamphlet upon the duration of the sixth trumpet, which was "prepared for an hour and a day and a month and a year" (Rev. 9: 15), being three hundred and ninety-one years and fifteen days, beginning with the taking of Constantinople by the Ottomans, about 1451, would end on a specified day in August, 1842, at which time he claimed the Turkish supremacy would be up. Those familiar with those views and European history of that year, will remember that on that very self-same day the allied powers of Europe, in the then pending war between the Pasha of Egypt and the Grand Turk, in a diplomatic note to the Sultan, informed him that he need give himself no further trouble about the war; that they (the Allies) had taken the matter into their own hands, and would coerce the refractory Pasha into subjection (which they did), and the Sultan "accepted of the intervention."

Bro. Litch, and nearly all the leading brethren, received the news of that intervention as a marked fulfillment of this prophecy, which ended the independent sovereignty of that empire; and subsequent events have confirmed that conclusion. Since that day, that power has been familiarly called the "sick man," whose dissolution was at hand, and it belonged to the sovereigns of Europe to prepare for the dividing up of its dead carcass.

These two points, the ending of second woe in 1815, and the sixth trumpet in 1842, I at the time accepted as next to demonstrated facts, and now, after a lapse of about twenty-four years, can see no good reason for changing that conclusion; but, on the contrary, can see much to confirm it.

Soon after the passing of the time movement of 1844, I had an interview with a good brother (I. D. Knapp, who was with us in that blessed movement, and who, thank God, is yet joyful in hope), upon our whereabouts in the prophetic events of the world. After having reviewed the various reliable points of evidence, we came to the conclusion that we had passed the two prominent landmarks named above, and must therefore be living on the verge of the third woe and the seventh trumpet. By these two ports we concluded to make fast our drifting barks, and watch the progress of events, being assured, if right, we should soon have confirmatory evidence. Our watchfulness soon brought light that has shone with increased brightness up to the present time.

We will now note a little of this increased testimony. The years 1845 and 1846 were remarkable for fires, inundations, shipwrecks, etc. 1847 for the Irish famine, and 1848 for the mighty whirlwind of revolution that broke out and spread over Europe, upsetting the thrones and kingdoms, as things of naught. The succeeding years have been followed by great national evils, among which may be mentioned the Crimean and the Italian wars in Europe, the mighty rebellion in these United States, which caused distress and perplexity in abundance, both at home and abroad; also wars and revolutions in Central and South America, likewise in China, and other parts of Asia, and, in fact, throughout nearly the whole habitable world.

To cap the climax, we now see the great powers of Europe waking up and preparing for war on a scale never before witnessed, and rushing forward to the conflict "like the rushing of mighty waters," under the guidance of those unclean spirits, which most evidently have "gone forth unto the kings of the earth and the whole world." And what for? The Revelator says, "To gather them unto the battle of that great day of God Almighty." O, how full of meaning is the declaration of our Savior at this time,—"BEHOLD! I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments." Who is there that cannot see the end of these things? Surely, they must be blind indeed.

But to the application. If these evils, these great and mighty events, are a part of any woe, and are to be classed under any trumpet, they most certainly are parts of the third woe and seventh trumpet, the others being far in the past.

Again we read, among the events that are to take place under this woe and this trumpet, "The nations" are to be "angry." If they are not now angry, it is difficult to imagine what they will do when they are so. But all accounts from the belligerent nations represent them to be perfectly frenzied with the war spirit, and that they "are angry." There is no mistaking this point.

The conclusion of the subject is this: that for twenty years or more we have been living "in days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound," in the "which the mystery of God" is "to be finished," as he hath declared unto "his servants the prophets," and in the incipient stages of the third woe; and have advanced so far toward the end that we are justified in looking daily for "the voice of the archangel and the trump of God" to be heard, which will raise the dead and usher in the solemn scenes of the judgment. Are we prepared? O how solemn the inquiry!

Now if this testimony in 1842 was inspiring to the child of God in those days, how much more should it be now. It was then like the shooting rays of light that betokened the approach of morning; but now it is like the approach of noon-day light. Had we now the hearing ear, and the applying conscience we then had, with this array of increased testimony, it appears to me we might arouse the world. But, alas! the nearer we approximate to the final day the less interest is manifested in these great and all-absorbing themes.

But, thank the Lord, the truth and the work of preparation are not retarded; they are most surely accomplishing their approximate ends. To the one class, they are like the plagues upon Egypt, hardening the hearts of the children of men, and fitting them for an overthrow more terrible than that of Pharoah and his hosts at the Red Sea. Upon the other class, to those who have "an eye to see and ear to hear," they are leading them out more and more from the world, and preparing them for that great deliverance of which that which was wrought by Moses was but a type, and soon they will be called away to stand upon the sea of glass, when they will sing, not only "the song of Moses," but that "of the Lamb." Praise the Lord for the hope.

For the World's Crisis.

DID THE BRIDEGROOM COME IN 1844?

The reader may consider this a foolish question to ask, and so it is. But what shall we say of a theory that teaches the affirmative of this question? For one, dear reader, we think, to say the least, it demands a passing notice. Therefore, we wish to call your attention to the following considerations: The claim is set up by a certain class of Adventists [Seventh Day], that the entire parable of the ten virgins, in Matt. 25, has had its complete fulfillment in the history of the Advent movement from 1840 to 1844. We are told that the midnight cry has been given, and on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, the Bridegroom came, and those that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. Thus placing the coming of Christ, or the Bridegroom, many years in the past. Now we wish to be excused from endorsing a theory so manifestly absurd. We choose to take a more consistent view of this matter, and believe that the coming of the Bridegroom is yet future.

The Bridegroom, in the parable, represents Christ, as all will admit. Then why may not the coming of the Bridegroom represent the coming of Christ? We think it does. Nothing seems more evident. Now if the Bridegroom came in 1844, as is claimed, will some one please tell us where he came to? and who saw him? He certainly did not come to this earth, from the fact that no one saw him. But when he comes in the clouds of heaven, we are told that "every eye shall see him." But hold, says the objector, we do not hold that the second coming of Christ has taken place,—by no means. Then we ask, why adopt a theory that teaches such an erroneous view? The coming of the Bridegroom is nothing more nor less than the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; and we cannot place the coming of one in the past unless we do the other. There is no dodging this point. But the theory under consideration teaches that the coming of the Bridegroom was his changing his position from the holy to the most holy place in the heavenly sanctuary, which took place on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844.

Admitting, for argument's sake, that such a change did then and there take place, where is the consistency in saying that that was the coming of the Bridegroom? We see none whatever. To say that the change of ministration of our great High Priest, from the holy to the holiest of all, providing such a change has taken place, is what is meant by the coming of the Bridegroom, is contrary to reason, revelation and common sense.

Query. How could the wise virgins follow the Bridegroom by faith into the most holy place on the tenth day of the seventh month, when they had no faith or knowledge that such a change had taken place for several years after? Consistency, where art thou? Again. When the Bridegroom came in the parable, they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. No admittance after that. In the likeness, or fulfillment we are told that when the Bridegroom came in 1844, those that were ready went in with him to the most holy place, and the door was left wide open. Since then, many have found admittance, and there is still a chance. Where, we ask, is the likeness, or similitude, between the parable and its so-called fulfillment?

That the coming of the Bridegroom represents the coming of Christ, is most positively shown in the closing up of the parable in these words: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh." But, say the advocates of the above theory, those who make the coming of the Bridegroom represent the coming of Christ fail to show that there will be any knocking for admittance after the Lord comes. True, say they, there will be a cry, but it will not be, "Lord, Lord, open to us." No, no; but, "mountains and rocks, fall on us," etc. We have only to cite the reader on this point to Luke 13: 25, which reads as follows: "When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us," etc. In whatever light we may view the knocking, as brought to view in this testimony, one thing is certain, namely: the master of the house has not yet risen up and shut to the door; neither will the door be shut while probation lasts. None, who have not a theory to serve, can fail to see that the shut door, as brought to view in Luke 13: 25, synchronizes with the shut door in the parable. Also, that the "knocking" is synonymous with the knocking in the parable, which events are yet future.

The mistaken notion that the Bridegroom came in 1844, gave rise to that error of all errors, to wit: the tight-shut door, or no salvation,—views which disgraced the Advent cause for several years. As that view has been long since discarded, honesty demands that we renounce our faith in a position that led to such an erroneous conclusion.

But, says the objector, in order to have a perfect likeness, both histories must be complete; all the events in both must be in the past. This is the very point, reader, we wish particularly noticed. That there is a certain definite point of time, marked by the adverb "then," when the kingdom of heaven shall "be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom," none will deny. But there is a difference of opinion as to the chronology of this definite point of time. The word "then," which commences the chapter, is an adverb of time, and has reference to the time spoken of in the preceding paragraph, which reads as follows: "But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour when he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened," etc. When? Why, when the evil servant is cut asunder, and his portion appointed with the hypocrites, of course. We would like to know by what rule of grammar it can be made to apply anywhere else. If any one has any authority for any other grammatical construction of the word "then," we would like to see it.

Our position, then, is chiefly this: We believe that the first Advent movement, from 1840 to 1844, was a fulfillment of that part of the parable represented by the going forth of the virgins to meet the Bridegroom. Since 1844, we have been, and still are, living in the tarrying time. The rest of the parable remains yet to be fulfilled. We claim that the tarrying in the parable synchronizes with the tarrying of the vision. "If the vision tarry, wait for it," implying that the Bridegroom would tarry beyond the time set for his return. Now, if the cry was given in 1844, and the tarrying of the Bridegroom was confined to the short space of time from March to October of that year, as is claimed, then, instead of its being midnight when the cry was made, it was only the first part of the morning, as all must see.

Again, if the Bridegroom was to tarry only from March to October, a few months, there seemingly would have been no occasion for taking a vessel of oil with their lamps; as a lamp full would have been sufficient to have lasted. Thus we fail to discover any correct likeness, or similitude, between the parable and its fulfillment, by the Advent body, with the exception of the "going forth," and the "tarrying time," which we now occupy.

But, says the objector, the midnight cry must be given during probation, from the fact that the foolish virgins are told, while applying for oil, to "go . . . to them that sell and buy" for themselves. The argument drawn from this is, that probation had not closed when the cry was made, as there was a chance to buy oil; or, in other words, a chance to get a preparation for the Lord's coming. This argument amounts to nothing, from the fact that not one of the foolish virgins that went to buy obtained a particle of oil. While they were gone "to buy, the Bridegroom came; and they that were ready [the wise] went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins [the foolish that had been away to buy oil], saying, Lord, Lord, open to us." There is not a particle of evidence that one of the foolish ever gained admittance. So will it be "when once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door," there will then be no admittance. Those who have neglected to seek a due preparation, will be forever shut out of the kingdom.

In conclusion, reader, let us look at some of the results of the theory under examination. (1.) All that did not follow the Bridegroom, by faith, into the most holy place, on the tenth day of the seventh month, are foolish virgins. (2.) Inasmuch as not one of the foolish virgins ever gained admittance after the door was shut, so none of the Advent body, only such as went in by faith, from the holy to the most holy, on the tenth day of the seventh month, can ever gain admittance to the New Jerusalem. How foolish, then, for Elds. Litch, Grant, Himes, Brewer, and many others, to be publishing and trying to arouse a formal church to get ready for the coming of the Bridegroom, when his coming is already in the past. Not only so, but they are all foolish virgins, whose cases are irrevocably fixed. They are forever shut out of the kingdom of God. There is no evading this point. Therefore we would respectfully decline endorsing a theory that leads to such erroneous and unscriptural conclusions.

THREE JERUSALEMS.

Elder A., as you make three Jerusalems in your theory—two yet future—I want to know which was the one promised to Abraham; for through a certain promise, he looked for a city which had foundations? After urging this point, it was thought that the one which is to come down was the one promised. Then I thought I might be excused from taking much interest in the one to be built by strangers, as I could expect to be heir only to the one promised to Abraham.

Elder B., what do you think about the two cities in the future?

"I do not believe there is any city coming down from heaven."

Elder C., what are your views?

"I think both cities will be merged into one."

Elder Zachariah, what was your view of that city which was to be built up by the BRANCH, aided by strangers, or those that were afar off? Isa. 60; Zech. 6: 12.

"Just what I said, that it should come to pass if they would diligently obey the voice of the Lord their God."

Elder D., did those Jews diligently obey the voice of the Lord?

"No."

Then that city will not be built up for them, will it?

"I declare, I never looked at it in that light before."

Well, what do you think?

"I think that it will not be built."

Just so it seems to me. H. Pratt.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT.

In every age of Christendom there has been what may be called the Religion of the World, which so far imitates the one true faith as to deceive the unthinking and weak. The world does not set itself openly in opposition to religious truth, as such. It has, in all the ages, acknowledged, in one sense or other, God's truth, attached to one or other of its own characteristics. Men are influenced by the spirit of the age in which they live; and selecting that portion of religious truth which corresponds most closely to that spirit, they make the combination the sum and substance of all revelation. Thus their faith, and consequently their practice, becomes distorted, incomplete, false. Every command in God's revelation is necessary in faith and practice for the complete development and regeneration of our nature. The neglect of some of these commands, and the exaggeration of others, therefore, either in particular ages, or in individuals, makes the work incomplete.

This influence on the individual may be seen in the multiplicity of sects by which Christendom is cursed. Some individual, with unusual mental or other gifts, grasps one or two articles of God's truth, tears them from their place in the complete circle, exaggerates them, magnifies them into the sum of all truth, makes the segment the complete circle, makes them the watch-word, the battle-cry for followers, and the result is a new division in the christian church.

The same influence may also be seen upon the ages. Each has its own particular mark. Even in the early days of the church, Satan, playing upon the weakness of our sinful nature, fashioned the religion of the world, by connecting a portion of the truth with the philosophy of the day, making the combination partly like christianity, but in reality a bitter foe to it.

As time went on, the temper of the age changed, and with it the religion of the world. The age was rude and fierce, and the popular faith of the day took the darker side of the gospel. Leaving the joy and cheerfulness of a firm faith in all the gospel's commands and promises, it took only its awful mysteriousness, its fearful glory, its sovereign, inflexible justice, as its sum and substance. "God is a consuming fire," was the religion of the day in what we now call the Dark Ages. It entirely forgot that "God is love" also. The religion of the world was then a fearful religion. Superstitions and cruelties abounded. The noble firmness, the graceful austerity of the true christian, were superceded by forbidding spectres—harsh and cruel, forbidding and repulsive.

But what is the world's device in our own day? The very opposite of that in the Dark Ages, and one, we believe, even more pernicious. The religion of the day has now taken the brighter side of the gospel, its tidings of comfort, its precepts of love. It has now become pure humanitarianism. All darker, deeper views of our common sinful nature are lost in the bright and beautiful pictures we draw of the God of nature and of grace.

This is the religion natural to a civilized age; and well has Satan and our inclinations dressed and completed it into an idol of God's truth. As the reason is cultivated, the taste formed, the affections and sentiments refined, a general decency and grace will of course spread over the face of society, quite independently of the influence of revelation. Beauty, and delicacy, and propriety,—all natural outgrowths of our common nature,—extend to the conduct of life, to all we have, all we do, and all we are. Elegance is gradually made the test and standard of virtue, which is no longer thought to possess intrinsic value, or even to exist, further than that it leads to quiet and comfort and general refinement. Conscience is forgotten as an independent arbiter of actions, and its authority is in various ways explained away. Partly it is superceded by the so-called "moral sense," which is merely a love for the beautiful; partly by the "rule of expediency," which is substituted for it in the details of our coudnct. But conscience is stern and gloomy in its commands. It tells of guilt and of prospective punishment for sins. When its terrors disappear in our religious knowledge of ourselves, then will vanish also, in the creed of the day, those fearful images of divine wrath and judgment with which Holy Scripture abounds. They are explained away by sophistry, by cunning, and by sin. Everything is bright and cheerful. Religion is pleasant and easy. Benevolence is the chief virtue. Intolerance, excess of zeal, are not only unpopular, but deadly sins. Austerity is an absurdity. Even firmness in faith and doctrine, is looked upon with suspicion and distrust. With our new discoveries, and the cultivation of our tastes and intellect, religion will commonly seem to be dull and uninteresting. Hence, any new excitement is eagerly sought for and rewarded. New systems, new plans, new doctrines, new objects in religion, and new and bewildering preachers, are necessary to satisfy the innate lack we feel for the real and true.

Such, in a great degree, is the religion of the day—simply the natural production of the human heart under contingent circumstances, colored and modified in words and phrases and general tone, and enlightened and exalted in a measure, by christianity. It drops one whole side of gospel truth—it explains away the austere, inflexible law of God's justice, and considers it sufficient for happiness here and hereafter, to be benevolent, courteous, candid, correct in conduct, and delicate. It has no true fear of God, no fervent zeal for his honor, no deep hatred of sin, no zealous adherence to doctrinal truth, no special sensitiveness about the means of gaining ends, no warm loyalty to God's church, no true sense of the authority of religion as external to the mind.

"God is love." He is also "a consuming fire." As sinners on the road to heaven or hell, we must love and fear till our dying day. Mere mental culture will not save us; mere sentiment will not save us. "Progress," "development," "humanitarianism," "moral culture," "refinement," are, in this age, the devil's battle-cry to drown our ears to the voice of God, through our own consciences, which tell us of a judgment to come, and of punishment, not only for sins committed, but for duties left undone. This is the darker side of the gospel, which we, in our day, have almost dropped from our belief and practice.—American Churchman.

FLATTERY.

It is wrong to flatter those who are just starting upon pilgrimage. It has a bad effect upon them when they begin to see how vile and wicked they really are. Words of praise spoken at such times, designed to encourage, may do a great deal of harm. The Holy Spirit will not deal too harshly with them. We need not fear that Spirit causing them to think too meanly of themselves. Let them humble themselves; it will do them good. God will exalt them in due time. He does not desire us to do it. By flattering them, and telling them what consistent lives they have lived in the past, you will make them ashamed of having humbled themselves, and drown all their convictions; when, probably, had we let them alone, they would have become humble followers of that meek and lowly Jesus, instead of stiff-necked, pharisaical professors.

How often are prospects of great revivals killed in this way. Let us be careful how we compliment those who are being humbled by the mighty power of God. Let the naked sword of the Spirit do its work.

LONGINGS.

In our hours of loneliness, we often express the desire of meeting with our dear brethren and sisters, when they meet to worship the Lord, and tell of his dealings toward them. We have prayed much for this privilege, yet we would say, not my will, but Thine be done.

Still we cannot help longing to meet with the children of our Father, and have not yet given up all hope of having our request granted in this life. We remember that many others are in a similar situation, and we know that our Master doeth all things well. He will withhold nothing that is for our good.

Let us trust in him in adversity, as well as in prosperity. If we are deprived the privilege of meeting our friends here, we shall strive to live near to Jesus, and when he is revealed in glory, we shall meet all the dear saints to part no more forever.

Pray for us, for we deeply feel the need of your prayers, "and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

ANOTHER STAR SHOWER.

In an article on the 'Falling Stars,' in the Pilgrim for January 1st, we drew attention to the fact that the star-showers of November 12th-13th were periodic,—the first having occurred on the night of the 12th of November, 1799, and the second on the 12th of November, 1833, just 34 years apart; and that hence astronomers were generally looking for a third grand display at the close of another 34 years, in November, 1867.

From an article in the papers, it appears that Professor Newton, of Yale College, who has paid much attention to the subject, expects the recurrence of that display on the 13th or 14th of November, this year, instead of 1867. What reasons the Professor has for expecting it this year we have not seen; yet we still incline to the opinion of Olbers and other distinguished astronomers, that "the next appearance (in America) of the phenomena of shooting stars and fireballs intermixed, falling like flakes of snow, will not recur until between the 12th and 14th of November, 1867." If they are periodic, and occur at intervals of 34 years, we do not see how they can occur here before that year.

It will be remembered that the enormous swarm of falling stars in November, 1779, was almost exclusively seen in America, and that of 1833, wholly so; hence 1867 seems to be the periodic year in which America may expect another shower.

As the great star-shower of 1832 was visible only in Europe, (one year earlier than that in America,) there is reason to expect another grand display in Europe, this year, if not in America; and, accordingly, we see that preparations are being made there to observe this sublime spectacle. As it may be seen in America, we shall watch for it, and we advise our readers to do so. W. B. M.

A SOLAR SYSTEM BURNED UP.—On the 12th of May a bright star was suddenly noticed in the constellation Corona Borealis or Northern Crown. It was then as bright as stars of the second magnitude—Orion's belt for example. It rapidly faded again, and on the 22nd of June was reckoned as of the ninth magnitude. But on analysing the light there appeared to be two kinds, one analogous to solar and stellar light, the other that of the flame of burning bodies. Of course any worlds dependent on this central sun for heat were burned to cinders. The events now manifested to our eyes may have occurred centuries ago, so long does it take light to traverse these vast unmeasured spaces.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

If Jesus were on earth now, we think he would say to all as he said to the Jews, "O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" It is strange that every one, who reads his Bible with the least care, can not see the import of "the signs of the times" in this perilous hour. We find that candid, thinking, observing, commen-sense men, who make no profession of religion, and seldom, if ever, read the Bible, are satisfied that some great event is at hand, and describe the state of things in the world in complete harmony with the description in the Bible, as given by the prophet, when speaking of the condition of things in the last days. Indeed, we often find more candor among unconverted men than professors of religion. Many of the latter seem to be the blindest of all;—just like the Pharisees in the days of the Savior, who could "not discern the signs of the times."

Human nature is the same now as then. It was not the mere name that constituted a man a Pharisee, but his doctrine and character. So now, if one shows the same doctrine and character, then it is proper to call him a Pharisee. It is certain that the doctrine of the Pharisees triumphs in these days among a large portion of Protestant professors, and in all the Roman Catholic churches. And do we need to bring any proof to show that the same spirit, or disposition, is manifested at the present day concerning the second coming of Christ as was shown by the Pharisees in relation to the first advent of our Savior? They could say, "Away with him," "crucify him, crucify him." They did not want him here on earth. So now; they are willing he should stay where he is; but they do not want him to come here to interfere with their plans. They are willing he should reign spiritually in men's hearts, but do not want his personal presence. They will make great feasts for bloody heroes, and political demagogues, who will stoop to the basest of means to carry out their plans; but when we talk of the coming of Jesus, our best friend, who has done more for this world than all men can ever do; we find these modern Pharisees no more willing to receive him now than at the first advent. And as we approach the sublime day of his appearing, their opposition and bitterness towards his coming seem stronger. They crowd the festivals and fairs, stay away from prayer meetings, dress in immodest and costly apparel, build costly temples for the professed worship of God, oppress the poor and the hireling in his wages; read novels, neglect the Bible, and scoff at those who talk about the coming of Jesus, and love his appearing.

This is just such a state of things as is foretold in the Scriptures, which is to characterize nominal christendom in "the last days." They will be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." They will keep up the "form of godliness," "denying the power thereof." Who can fail to see that Paul's description of "the last days," found in 2. Tim. 3: 1-5, is a perfect picture of the times in which we live?

Satan will do all in his power to keep those quiet, who see the perils of the hour in which we are living. But shall we keep still? Will the Lord say "well done" if we do? Shall we be doing as we would be done by in an hour of danger to refuse to give the alarm, because some do not like to hear it? If a house was on fire, should we be justified in keeping still, and withholding the cry of "FIRE" because it might wake up or disturb some of the neighbors? Better that the neighbors should lose a little sleep than that another should be ruined. So now; what if some Pharisees do not like the cry—Jesus is coming! is it not better that they should be disturbed, in order that others may be saved, who will hear, than to keep still to accommodate those who will not heed the warning? It is time to "cry aloud" and "spare not,"—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

Dear reader, is your lamp trimmed and burning? Are you all ready to welcome the King of kings and Lord of lords?

"SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT."—Do not fail to read the article in another column, headed—"Something to think about." It was the leading editorial in the American Churchman, an Episcopal paper, published in Chicago, dated Sept. 13th, 1866. The remarks on "the religion of the day" demand the serious attention of every true disciple of Jesus, and of all who wish to become his followers. Thousands are being deceived by what the "Churchman" calls "the religion of the day,"—mere humanitarianism—a human system, independent of salvation though nominally a christian religion. It is one of Satan's most successful snares ever laid to entrap human beings. Please give the article a careful reading, especially the last half.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.—We have recently come across an old book, first published by Simeon Ashe, in 1653, entitled "Divine Contentment." We received much profit in reading it. We purpose to give our readers some extracts from it, hoping they will be much benefited by them. We make a beginning this week. See article headed "Divine Contentment."

SHORT OBITUARIES.

We are under the necessity of requesting those who write obituaries for the Crisis, to make them short and comprehensive as possible. It should be considered that most of those whose obituaries are published, are scarcely known outside of the neighborhood where they lived; consequently, most of our readers have little or no interest to read their obituaries notices. The great object of obituary notices is to notify friends who live at a distance. Those who live in the immediate vicinity of the deceased do not need the newspaper notice; because they are already informed. When one dies, who has been generally known, then the obituary notice is more needful, and should be longer than when it is only a child, or one unknown to the public.

We are aware that every word spoken by our loved ones on their dying bed are treasured up as very choice relics, by the surviving friends; and that they would be glad to see them all in print, but if they will consider a moment, they will see that it would not be best to fill up "our paper" with long records of what the sick and dying have said; unless they were quite extensively known to our readers, so that many might be interested. Most papers only give the bare account of the death, without any comments.

We sometimes receive a long string of pretty verses concerning some darling child, contributed by some friend of the bereaved family. We are sorry to be obliged to refuse their publication, but we know there would be much dissatisfaction if we published all that are written. This is one of the crosses of an editor, who has a desire to gratify the feelings of all his readers. But as it is impossible to do it, he must do the best he can, and bear all censure without murmuring or impatience. We hope our readers will exercise as much charity as they can, and pray that we may have heavenly wisdom to do all to the glory of the Lord.

PAPAL LAMENTATIONS.

The Catholics see and feel that their power will soon be gone. Their control of "times and laws" is about ended. This startling fact has come upon them suddenly and unexpectedly. At the very time the Roman woman was boasting, "I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow," she received her death warrant, as did Belshazzar at his last impious feast, when the hand was seen writing on the wall,—"mene, mene, tekel, upharsin." Why did the woman make the expression, "I sit a queen and am no widow?" Because many said she must soon lose her power. This she did not believe, so long as Austria remained a first class power.

A private letter from Madrid states that at the news of each successive victory of the Prussians over the Austrians, Queen Isabella of Spain, shed tears, and broke out into lamentations; saying, "It is all over with us! with the Pope, with Austria, with all of us. The heretics, the Protestants, triumph."

We see no chance for the continuance of the Papal power more than another year. We are entering a period of tragic interest in this world's history. It is high time for all to be ready for the marriage of the Lamb, who expect or desire to be saved. There is not a moment to be lost in the foolish pleasures of this world. The end of the present dispensation is at hand. Those who see the light should let it shine, lest they be condemned for neglect of duty. This is a critical part of the christian's journey, when he needs to be extra watchful if he would travel safely through the perils of these last days.

Dear reader, are you all ready for the grand event about to transpire? Is your heart pure? Do you love the appearing of Jesus?

WARS.

The spirit of war seems to be almost universal. Instead of the approach of a temporal millennium, as taught and believed by many, when the instruments of warfare will be beaten up into implements of husbandry, we see the opposite is most emphatically true. Men cry "peace, peace, but there is no peace." Wars and rumors of wars come to us from all parts of the world. The nations are becoming more and more uneasy, and dissatisfied with their condition. Men are continually becoming more weary of restraint, and claim the right to do as they please. A state of anarchy seems rapidly approaching in the most civilized portions of the world. People are unwilling to "be subject one to another," as the Bible directs.

The same spirit is manifesting itself in the church as in the state; hence the many contentions and divisions that are now destroying the church of Christ. Let us do those "things which make for peace." Much prayer and watchfulness is needed in these times, lest we partake of the war spirit in some form. Whenever we yield to it, we grieve away the Spirit of Christ. The Bible gives us no caution against being too kind, long-suffering, or forbearing. Indeed, there is no danger in that direction. Jesus is our pattern. Are we manifesting the same spirit that he exhibited? We are required "to walk, even as he walked." Are we imitating him as we should? Are we peacemakers, or are we creating divisions? Are we bearing all thing patiently? or, do we murmur about our lot in life?

It does no good to fret about what we can not help; and it is certainly unprofitable to fret about what we can help. The more we fret, the more occasion we find for fretting, until it becomes a habit. None enjoy the society of one out of patience. He destroys his own peace, and makes himself disagreeable to all with whom he associates. Jesus wishes his children to be lovely, amiable, kind to all, and to do good to every one. Let us all try to be more like our heavenly pattern.

BRO. HALL'S TRACTS.

In answer to the requests for the tracts donated by Bro. S. Hall to the Society for distribution, we would say, that just as soon as received (we do not print them), we will forward them as requested.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PROPOSED TRACTS.

They do not appear yet. A long delay, from various causes it seems, but to me quite unexpected. I am now informed they will be ready for distribution in about two, or at most three weeks. S. HALL.

"NO MORE SEA."

The splendid poem bearing this title, which the reader may find on another page, is, we suppose, from the pen of Dr. Horatius Bonar, who, with his brother Andrew, is the editor of the London Journal of Prophecy, from which it was copied. In the music of rhyme, but with a fine and masterly conception of the Scripture text on which it forms a comment, it exactly expresses our own view of how the sea will appear and be arranged in the coming new earth. Read it, and rejoice in the deliciousness of truth.

The view of Bonar was held also by John Wesley, as appears in his sermon on Rev. 21: 5. He thought there would be no more a wide-spread and boisterous ocean, but beautiful, clear, and limpid waters, rising here and there in crystal fountains to refresh and adorn the earth with liquid lapse of murmuring stream instead. We believe it. God will fix it all just right. His judgment of the beautiful is perfect. If pellucid waters, and golden strands, and shining shores, and gently undulating hills and dales, and green glens, and flowery fields, and verdant trees, and singing birds of a thousand hues, and scenes of material loveliness passing all human conception, are required for the perfection of His restored creation and for the joy of the redeemed, He will have them all there. Amen. It most concerns us all to know if we shall ever reach that world ourselves. It will not be gained without an effort. D. T. T.

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD.—No. 2.

CROSSES.

Your husbandman and Lord hath lopped off some of the branches already; the tree itself is to be transplanted to the high garden. In a good time be it—our Lord ripen you. All these crosses (and indeed when I remember them they are heavy and many—peace, peace be the end of them!) are to make you white and ripe for the Lord's sickle. I have seen the Lord weaning you from the breasts of this world. It was never his mind that it should be your patrimony, and God be thanked for that; ye look the liker one of the heirs. Let the movables go,—why not? They are not yours,—fasten your gripe upon the heritage.

I think more of my Lord's sweet cross than of a crown of gold and a free kingdom lying to it.

Let Christ fare well, suppose I should eat ashes. I know that he must be sweet himself when his cross is so sweet. And it is the part of us all, if we marry himself, to marry the crosses, losses, and reproaches also that follow him; for mercy followeth Christ's cross. His prison for beauty is made of marble and ivory; his chains that are laid on his prisoners are golden chains; and the sighs of the prisoners of hope are perfumed with comforts, the like whereof cannot be bred or found on this side of sun or moon.

It is my aim and hearty desire, that my furnace, which is of the Lord's kindling, may emit sparks of fire upon standers-by, to the warming of their hearts with God's love. The very dust that falleth from Christ's feet, his old, ragged clothes, his knotty and black cross, are sweeter to me than kings' golden crowns, and their time-eaten pleasures.

Sew no clouts upon Christ's robe. Take Christ in his rags and losses, and as persecuted by men, and be content to sigh and pant up the mountain with Christ's cross on your back.

It is good that your crosses will but convoy you to heaven's gates; in can they not go; the gates shall be closed upon them when ye shall be admitted to the throne. O, what is laid up for you! therefore harden your face against the wind.

My chains are gold; Christ's cross is all over gilded and perfumed; his prison is the garden and orchard of my delights. Mine enemies have made me blessed. They have sent me to the Bridegroom's chamber. Love is his banner over me; I live a king's life. I want nothing but heaven, and possession of my crown; my earnest is great; Christ is no niggard to me. Dear brother, be for the Lord Jesus and his heart-broken Bride.

O, this world is out of all conceit, and all love with our Well-beloved! O that I could sell my laughter, joy, ease, and all for him, and be content with a straw bed and bread by weight and water by measure in the camp of our weeping Christ! I know that his sackcloth and ashes are better than the fool's laughter, but, alas! we do not harden our faces against the cold north storms which blow upon Christ's fair face. We love well summer religion, and to be that which sin has made us, even as thin-skinned as if we were made of white paper, and would fain be carried to heaven in a close-covered chariot, wishing from our hearts that Christ would give us his seal for nothing but a fair summer, until we be landed at heaven's gates.

Your Lord may gather his roses and shake his apples at what season of the year he pleaseth. And now the number of crosses lying in our way to glory are fewer by one than when I saw you. One year's time of heaven shall swallow up all sorrows; I know that your cup is sugared with mercy.

Subscribe to the Almighty's will; put your hand to the pen, and let the cross of your Lord Jesus have your submissive and resolute AMEN. If ye ask and try whose this cross is? I dare say that it is not all your own, the best half of it is Christ's. If Christ and ye be halvers of this suffering, and he say, "Half mine," what should all you? "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."—Isa. 63: 9. Then Christ bore the first stroke of this cross; it rebounded off him upon you, and ye get it at second hand, and ye and he are halvers in it. And I am here right upon the style of the word of God.—Phil. 3: 10. "The fellowship of Christ's sufferings."—Col. 1: 24. "The remnant of the afflictions of Christ." Heb. 11: 26. "The reproach of Christ."—Christ when he married you, married you and all the crosses and grieved hearts that follow you. And he mindeth to distil heaven out of this loss and all others the like; for wisdom devised it, and love laid it on, and Christ owneth it as his own, and putteth your shoulder only beneath a piece of it.

A cross of our own choosing, honeyed and sugared with consolations, we cannot have; Christ went in over the door threshold of Paradise bleeding to death. D. T. T.

For the World's Crisis.

SURPRISE PARTIES AGAIN.

Last week a sister in Connecticut sent us $20.00 for the benefit of the needy of this great city, among whom it is my privilege to labor. We had two dollars left in our funds for the same purpose, and on Friday last Srs. Helginson and Maria assisted me in distributing the amount in the shape of flour, meal, etc., etc., making in all $22.00 worth. I write for the purpose of encouraging the faith of God's precious saints. The glory belongs not to me. I am but a servant of servants. The Lord's servants use me as their servant to distribute their gifts; hence Francis H. Burbank writes not to puff himself, but he writes to give an account of his servantship. He desires above all that his heavenly Father should have all the praise.

The first place visited was the home of Sr. D., a widow having three children to maintain. She was a washerwoman. As might be expected, she was not much burdened with this world's goods. We gave her a bag of flour of twenty-four and a half pounds, a bag of meal of eight pounds, a pound of candles, and a pound of soap. As we laid them upon her little table, she exclaimed,

"O, how the Lord has rewarded me. The other day I heard of a minister's family who were suffering, and having fifty cents, I gave them one half. The next day the Lord gave me seventy-five, and here to-day he has given me such a great blessing."

That woman had little money, but much faith. One man, a brother in the Lord, who several years ago was worth thousands of dollars, called on me several weeks ago, and gave me fifty cents. Amongst other things he said,

"Once, when I was rich, I would give a shilling away, when I could easily have given a dollar. Now, I give a shilling away, where I want to give the dollar."

The next place visited was a room in a wooden shanty on Middle Alley, where lived Sr. G., a widow with one little boy to support. She is in poverty's vale. For several months she has been unable to do any work, on account of her feeble state of health. We gave her the same benefits as in the preceding case, adding a pound of sugar, and a half pound of tea.

Next, into the cellar of the same shanty, where lived a widowed mother and her only daughter, a girl of thirteen years. The mother had just recovered her speech, having had a stroke of paralysis. She was suffering so badly from inflammatory rheumatism that it was with exceeding difficulty that she could walk about the humble home, which was two-thirds under ground. To add to her sufferings and distress, her daughter was suffering with that terrible malady, the Asiatic Cholera. Her screams could be heard half a square off. A teaspoonful of our "cholera remedy" relieved her in a few minutes, and the next day when I visited the cellar again she was getting well rapidly. That poor christian mother's heart was filled with praise and thanksgiving. We gave the same bounties as in the preceding instance.

Thence to Mrs. C.'s, a poor woman who has four little ones to provide for. From there to Sr. P.'s, an invalid. Joy and gladness filled her heart. Therefrom to Sr. J.'s, whose drunken husband had left her in a starving condition.

Bro. C. came next in the list. Has had no employment for three weeks, but has been, and does still go out every day in search of employment. He has taken Eddie Washington, a little orphan, off of my hands, to bring up as his own. May the Lord bless this faithful christian man.

Lastly to Sr. ——'s, another sad case. She is a dear good saint of Jesus, but plagued with an ungodly husband, who does little or nothing for his family. He has three children, and the mother is obliged to support them, while the father spends the greater part of his time in another State, visiting his family but a few times in the course of the year. For a period of three months he had sent her but three dollars. She is a distressed woman. Her stove had been sold to pay her rent and to obtain food. And she had just sold her little girl's dress to get bread; and just before we entered that home, the last crust had been eaten. Truly the Lord sent us to that heart-broken woman, to make her heart glad.

In all these homes we had seasons of prayer, and endeavored to teach all the blessedness of exercising unshaken confidence in the Father of us all. "Have faith in God," is our watchword. His promises are yea and amen.

We gave surprise parties in all to eight families, embracing one man, eight women, and twelve children. The average amount given to each family in provisions, etc., would not exceed $2.75, or about one dollar for each person.

Our Sunday school has grown so large, I have engaged another hall in the same building to accommodate the number. Now we have two halls in operation. A better set of scholars I have nowhere seen. Pray for us and them, and may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ abide with all who love him in sincerity. Yours, etc., in the highways,

LETTER FROM BRO. J. G. HOOK.

BRO. ADAMS:—The people are being stirred in this place, and its surroundings, by the power of truth in the tracts that were furnished me for free distribution at the office of publication in Boston. Praise God that he has stirred up his servants to write so many precious truths, and others to publish them, and others to pay for them, that they may be scattered upon all waters without money or price. Let others scatter them like autumnal leaves, and do it while probation lasts. We are surely near the end.

I am preaching evenings in a hall, as no one in the place invited me to their houses of worship; but, thank God, I feel free to preach all the counsel of God in "my own hired house." During the day I visit the wharves and fishing boats, distribute tracts, preach, warn, counsel, and entreat the people to be reconciled to God. Many listen with interest, and gladly accept the little tract messengers, and promise to read them, and carry them to their homes, in different parts of the Province, for others to read also. I also give them to farmers and country people, who receive them joyfully, and promise to read and spread them around their neighborhoods. As I hand strangers papers and tracts, they often ask questions, and I thus find myself surrounded by from ten to fifty, who eagerly listen to the words of the stranger visitor. Some mock, however, and pass on; others say, "Come and preach at our place." Others are very bold, and confess in the presence of all bystanders that it is the truth, and they believe it. So while I am grieved by the treatment of some, I am cheered and gladdened by the kind words of others; and while sometimes made sorrowful, am always rejoicing. Glory to God. Hallelujah.

Pray for me and this mission, for I am satisfied it is of God. The Lord be praised for the tokens of good already seen. I am to remain in this place a few days longer, and then journey towards Liverpool; and, as I go, preach, and distribute tracts. I am sure they will do great good.

I wish you to send me fifty dollars' worth more of tracts to Liverpool, immediately, for free distribution. This way of giving the people the gospel removes prejudice at once, and they are more ready to hear the word preached. Send all letters to Yarmouth, N. S.

JOHN G. HOOK.

Yarmouth, N. S., Oct. 18th, 1866.

We send the tracts, as requested by Bro. Hook. May the blessing of God rest upon our brother as he goes forth scattering tracts, preaching the word, and doing what he can to make ready a people for "the great day of the Lord," which is near. "It is NEAR and hasteth greatly." Calls for tracts for free distribution are constantly being received, and we are sending them out north, south, east and west. Stewards of the Lord, see to it that ye do your part in sending in funds as the Master would have you, that the Society may be enabled to print and scatter tracts more extensively than ever before, and "so that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

For the World's Crisis.

THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—Agreeably to my suggestions to you, when we parted at Alton Bay, I found the interests of the mission in this place required my personal attention. I arrived here Friday morning, Oct. 5th, and went direct to the mission house, in North Memphis. I found Bro. Leslie in his little room beside the mission house, something like the chamber prepared for the prophet Elijah, in ancient time. There was just room enough for sleeping, with a table and two chairs, and nothing more. He is humble, economical, and practical. Here he is ready, by day or night, to attend to any calls of his people, whom he loves to serve, and who esteem his services. In these cholera times, he has frequent calls by day and night for medicine and help among the sick.

Our meeting was indeed a joyous one. We embraced, we wept, and rejoiced, and we praised God together as kindred souls. O, it was a scene of personal interest and joy; such as occurs only between friends long parted, who are engaged in a great and good enterprise; and laboring amid cares and trials, weakness and sickness, among strangers. Ah, to see an old friend and fellow laborer under such circumstances, is indeed one of the most happy of all personal greetings.

Well, surprise and joy subsiding, the first thing was work. What is to be done? Sister Butler had been obliged to return home, weak and sick; and Bro. L. was now alone. And in his own weakness and sickness, he had a short time ago become discouraged, and wrote me that he had concluded to give up the mission and return home. But, soon after this, his health came up, and with it his hopes revived of going on with the work. The freedmen set in their entreaties, also, that he should not leave them, which the more confirmed him in his duty to remain. And so soon as he resumed his meetings, the Lord poured out his spirit, and convicted large numbers of sin, so that from fifty to seventy asked prayers. He was overwhelmed and surprised at this change, both in his own condition and health, and the work of God among sinners. And so he entirely changed his mind and plans in relation to the mission. He now felt that he could not give it up. He must stay and carry it on at any rate, even if he did not receive support from the society to do so. I found him in this condition, trusting, working and praising in the service of the Lord; and at the same time waiting for the decision and advice of the Board, as to what was best to do.

In our consultations, after looking over the whole ground, we arrived at the following:

First. The owner of the mission house will still rent it for the use of the meeting and school, if we want it.

Second. The freedmen were determined, in case we go on, to meet the rent of the house.

Third. The freedmen had resolved to have a school, if we would get them a teacher. And they will support the teacher themselves, so as to give Bro. Leslie his whole time to visit, and preach to them the gospel.

Fourth. The freedmen were unanimous in their desire to have Bro. Leslie remain among them as a preacher, and desire the society to keep him here and support him; while they do the rest to keep the meeting and school going.

This unexpected opening cheered our hearts and inspired hope, as it seemed to be practicable. Our former plan to build a house, did not now seem to be a practicable one; and so it was given up, for the time, at least. But this later opening seemed to be of the Lord, because it gives us the opportunity to get the gospel of the kingdom before the people, without any care or special charge of the school. And yet the school goes on in harmony, giving us the good will of the freedmen in this respect, as well as in preaching the gospel to them.

The door is now open in this city to us,—a "wide and effectual door." We have the full confidence of the freedmen; and what we have done in the past has prepared the way for the future. They know from the sacrifices we have made, from the missionary society at Boston, and from the self-denying labors of Bro. Leslie, Sister Butler, and others sent out by the Board, that we all are their friends. And so when some sectarians from the North, or opposers in the South, attempt to prejudice them against us, they fail to do it. They know that we are their friends, and we have their confidence. They are aware that we hold views concerning the coming of Christ, the intermediate state, the resurrection and future reign of Christ and his saints, which have not been held by themselves and others; and yet they know we are christians, and are among them to do them good, and prepare them for the kingdom of God.

We now have calls for help in the country, where the northern element prevails to such an extent as to give us protection. And the way is opening for us in all the region. All the towns and cities of any note on the river, are open to us; and with a proper introduction, our preachers would be kindly received, both above and below Memphis, and right in the heart of the South. If, then, we are to do any thing among the freedmen, this is the place to begin to do it. And since we have made so great a sacrifice for this object, and this city and vicinity, it does not seem wise to abandon it now.

Besides, Bro. Leslie feels that this special work is resting upon him, and with returning health, in answer to prayer, and the present revival, with the love of this people, he could not tear himself away. He is now giving himself entirely to preaching, Sabbath school, visiting, and distributing tracts.

I have found a most interesting state of things here among the freedmen. There are great revivals in all their meetings, and thousands have been converted within the last few months.

The field is ripe, and the door is open. We need the labors of Bro. Hook in this field, and hope it will not be long ere he will be with this dear people to proclaim to them the gospel of the kingdom.

For the World's Crisis.

REPORT OF THE MAINE ANNUAL ADVENT CONFERENCE,

HELD AT RICHMOND, OCT. 3D TO 7TH, 1866.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 3d. Conference met according to appointment. The evening was spent in prayer, song, and exhortation, and was a season of some interest.

Thursday morning. A goodly number of brethren and sisters came together, and devoted the forenoon in exhorting one another to more faithfulness to God and to his cause. It was a profitable meeting. At 2 P. M. Bro. H. B. Sevey gave a stirring discourse from Rev. 21: 7. After preaching, conference met for business. Bro. H. B. Sevey was re-elected chairman of the conference, and R. R. York and J. A. Libby, Secretaries. S. K. Partridge, J. A. Libby, and R. R. York, were appointed a committee to prepare business for the conference. In the evening, Bro. J. C. Wheeler preached from 1 Tim. 6: 12 to a large and attentive audience.

Friday morning, at eight o'clock, conference met for business. The following items were brought in by the business committee for the consideration of the conference:

1. To hear the report of the brethren, chosen last year to correspond with the ministers and churches of each quarterly conference, to see if the conference shall be dissolved and a new one organized.

2. To admit to the conference those who might be proposed and wished to join.

3. To choose a committee to draft a constitution for the conference.

4. See what can be done to supply destitute places with faithful laborers.

The first article for consideration was passed over, the committee not being prepared to report. Item second was taken up, and the following brethren admitted by unanimous vote as members of conference:—Clarkson Goud, Jer. Partridge, I. C. Wellcome, D. W. Griffin, B. S. Emery, Hiram S. Mitchell, Silas Timberlake, Stephen Harding, Thos. M. Storer, T. Bates, Geo. Umberhind, Joshua Hemenway, Harvey Gaul, Jos. Benner.

Article third was taken up, and the following brethren appointed to draft a constitution, viz: C. Goud, W. H. Mitchell, I. C. Wellcome, S. K. Partridge, D. W. Griffin. Item fourth was talked over quite freely, and finally recommended that, as the laborers are so few in number and they are doing what they can, we pray the Lord to send forth more laborers into the vineyard.

A good prayer meeting occupied the remainder of the forenoon. Preaching in the afternoon by Bro. J. A. Libby, from James

ANOTHER STAR SHOWER.

In an article on the 'Falling Stars,' in the Pilgrim for January 1st, we drew attention to the fact that the star-showers of November 12th-13th were periodic,—the first having occurred on the night of the 12th of November, 1799, and the second on the 12th of November, 1833, just 34 years apart; and that hence astronomers were generally looking for a third grand display at the close of another 34 years, in November, 1867.

From an article in the papers, it appears that Professor Newton, of Yale College, who has paid much attention to the subject, expects the recurrence of that display on the 13th or 14th of November, this year, instead of 1867. What reasons the Professor has for expecting it this year we have not seen; yet we still incline to the opinion of Olbers and other distinguished astronomers, that "the next appearance [in America] of the phenomena of shooting stars and fireballs intermixed, falling like flakes of snow, will not recur until between the 12th and 14th of November, 1867." If they are periodic, and occur at intervals of 34 years, we do not see how they can occur here before that year.

It will be remembered that the enormous swarm of falling stars in November, 1779, was almost exclusively seen in America, and that of 1833, wholly so; hence 1867 seems to be the periodic year in which America may expect another shower.

As the great star-shower of 1832 was visible only in Europe, (one year earlier than that in America,) there is reason to expect another grand display in Europe, this year, if not in America; and, accordingly, we see that preparations are being made there to observe this sublime spectacle. As it may be seen in America, we shall watch for it, and we advise our readers to do so. W. B. H.

Czechowski's Thrilling Narrative.

A small edition of this work has been printed in paper covers, to be disposed of for the benefit of the European Mission. The book will be sent post-paid to every one who contributes $1.00 or more to the aid of the Mission. Bro. Czechowski is in need of help. Let the friends take this means to aid him, and receive an interesting book in return. The book will be sent to those only who order it.

A Solar System Burned up.—On the 12th of May a bright star was suddenly noticed in the constellation Corona Borealis or Northern Crown. It was then as bright as stars of the second magnitude—Orion's belt for example. It rapidly faded again, and on the 22nd of June was reckoned as of the ninth magnitude. But on analyzing the light there appeared to be two kinds, one analogous to solar and stellar light, the other that of the flame of burning bodies. Of course any worlds dependent on this central sun for heat were burned to cinders. The events now manifested to our eyes may have occurred centuries ago, so long does it take light to traverse these vast unmeasured spaces.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

If Jesus were on earth now, we think he would say to all as he said to the Jews, "O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" It is strange that every one, who reads his Bible with the least care, can not see the import of "the signs of the times" in this perilous hour. We find that candid, thinking, observing, common-sense men, who make no profession of religion, and seldom, if ever, read the Bible, are satisfied that some great event is at hand, and describe the state of things in the world in complete harmony with the description in the Bible, as given by the prophet, when speaking of the condition of things in the last days. Indeed, we often find more candor among unconverted men than professors of religion. Many of the latter seem to be the blindest of all;—just like the Pharisees in the days of the Savior, who could "not discern the signs of the times."

Human nature is the same now as then. It was not the mere name that constituted a man a Pharisee, but his doctrine and character. So now, if one shows the same doctrine and character, then it is proper to call him a Pharisee. It is certain that the doctrine of the Pharisees triumphs in these days among a large portion of Protestant professors, and in all the Roman Catholic churches. And do we need to bring any proof to show that the same spirit, or disposition, is manifested at the present day concerning the second coming of Christ as was shown by the Pharisees in relation to the first advent of our Savior? They could say, "Away with him," "crucify him, crucify him." They did not want him here on earth. So now; they are willing he should stay where he is; but they do not want him to come here to interfere with their plans. They are willing he should reign spiritually in men's hearts, but do not want his personal presence. They will make great feasts for bloody heroes, and political demagogues, who will stoop to the basest of means to carry out their plans; but when we talk of the coming of Jesus, our best friend, who has done more for this world than all men can ever do; we find these modern Pharisees no more willing to receive him now than at the first advent. And as we approach the sublime day of his appearing, their opposition and bitterness towards his coming seem stronger. They crowd the festivals and fairs, stay away from prayer meetings, dress in immodest and costly apparel, build costly temples for the professed worship of God, oppress the poor and the hireling in his wages; read novels, neglect the Bible, and scoff at those who talk about the coming of Jesus, and love his appearing.

This is just such a state of things as is foretold in the Scriptures, which is to characterize nominal christendom in "the last days." They will be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." They will keep up the "form of godliness," "denying the power thereof." Who can fail to see that Paul's description of "the last days," found in 2. Tim. 3: 1–5, is a perfect picture of the times in which we live?

Satan will do all in his power to keep those quiet, who see the perils of the hour in which we are living. But shall we keep still? Will the Lord say "well done" if we do? Shall we be doing as we would be done by in an hour of danger to refuse to give the alarm, because some do not like to hear it? If a house was on fire, should we be justified in keeping still, and withholding the cry of "FIRE" because it might wake up or disturb some of the neighbors? Better that the neighbors should lose a little sleep than that another should be ruined. So now; what if some Pharisees do not like the cry—Jesus is coming! is it not better that they should be disturbed, in order that others may be saved, who will hear, than to keep still to accommodate those who will not heed the warning? It is time to "cry aloud" and "spare not,"—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

Dear reader, is your lamp trimmed and burning? Are you all ready to welcome the King of kings and Lord of lords?

"Something to think about."—Do not fail to read the article in another column, headed—"Something to think about." It was the leading editorial in the American Churchman, an Episcopal paper, published in Chicago, dated Sept. 13th, 1866. The remarks on "the religion of the day" demand the serious attention of every true disciple of Jesus, and of all who wish to become his followers. Thousands are being deceived by what the "Churchman" calls "the religion of the day,"—mere humanitarianism—a human system, independent of salvation though nominally a christian religion. It is one of Satan's most successful snares ever laid to entrap human beings. Please give the article a careful reading, especially the last half.

Divine Contentment.—We have recently come across an old book, first published by Simeon Ashe, in 1653, entitled "Divine Contentment." We received much profit in reading it. We purpose to give our readers some extracts from it, hoping they will be much benefited by them. We make a beginning this week. See article headed "Divine Contentment."

SHORT OBITUARIES.

We are under the necessity of requesting those who write obituaries for the Crisis, to make them short and comprehensive as possible. It should be considered that most of those whose obituaries are published, are scarcely known outside of the neighborhood where they lived; consequently, most of our readers have little or no interest to read their obituaries notices. The great object of obituary notices is to notify friends who live at a distance. Those who live in the immediate vicinity of the deceased do not need the newspaper notice; because they are already informed. When one dies, who has been generally known, then the obituary notice is more needful, and should be longer than when it is only a child, or one unknown to the public.

We are aware that every word spoken by our loved ones on their dying bed are treasured up as very choice relics, by the surviving friends; and that they would be glad to see them all in print, but if they will consider a moment, they will see that it would not be best to fill up "our paper" with long records of what the sick and dying have said; unless they were quite extensively known to our readers, so that many might be interested. Most papers only give the bare account of the death, without any comments.

We sometimes receive a long string of pretty verses concerning some darling child, contributed by some friend of the bereaved family. We are sorry to be obliged to refuse their publication, but we know there would be much dissatisfaction if we published all that are written. This is one of the crosses of an editor, who has a desire to gratify the feelings of all his readers. But as it is impossible to do it, he must do the best he can, and bear all censure without murmuring or impatience. We hope our readers will exercise as much charity as they can, and pray that we may have heavenly wisdom to do all to the glory of the Lord.

PAPAL LAMENTATIONS.

The Catholics see and feel that their power will soon be gone. Their control of "times and laws" is about ended. This startling fact has come upon them suddenly and unexpectedly. At the very time the Roman woman was boasting, "I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow;" she received her death warrant, as did Belshazzar at his last impious feast, when the hand was seen writing on the wall,—"mene, mene, tekel, upharsin." Why did the woman make the expression, "I sit a queen and am no widow?" Because many said she must soon lose her power. This she did not believe, so long as Austria remained a first class power.

A private letter from Madrid states that at the news of each successive victory of the Prussians over the Austrians, Queen Isabella of Spain, shed tears, and broke out into lamentations; saying, "It is all over with us! with the Pope, with Austria, with all of us. The heretics, the Protestants, triumph."

We see no chance for the continuance of the Papal power more than another year. We are entering a period of tragic interest in this world's history. It is high time for all to be ready for the marriage of the Lamb, who expect or desire to be saved. There is not a moment to be lost in the foolish pleasures of this world. The end of the present dispensation is at hand. Those who see the light should let it shine, lest they be condemned for neglect of duty. This is a critical part of the christian's journey, when he needs to be extra watchful if he would travel safely through the perils of these last days.

Dear reader, are you all ready for the grand event about to transpire? Is your heart pure? Do you love the appearing of Jesus?

WARS.

The spirit of war seems to be almost universal. Instead of the approach of a temporal millennium, as taught and believed by many, when the instruments of warfare will be beaten up into implements of husbandry, we see the opposite is most emphatically true. Men cry "peace, peace, but there is no peace." Wars and rumors of wars come to us from all parts of the world. The nations are becoming more and more uneasy, and dissatisfied with their condition. Men are continually becoming more weary of restraint, and claim the right to do as they please. A state of anarchy seems rapidly approaching in the most civilized portions of the world. People are unwilling to "be subject one to another," as the Bible directs.

The same spirit is manifesting itself in the church as in the state; hence the many contentions and divisions that are now destroying the church of Christ. Let us do those "things which make for peace." Much prayer and watchfulness is needed in these times, lest we partake of the war spirit in some form. Whenever we yield to it, we grieve away the Spirit of Christ. The Bible gives us no caution against being too kind, long-suffering, or forbearing. Indeed, there is no danger in that direction. Jesus is our pattern. Are we manifesting the same spirit that he exhibited? We are required "to walk, even as he walked." Are we imitating him as we should? Are we peacemakers, or are we creating divisions? Are we bearing all thing patiently? or, do we murmur about our lot in life?

It does no good to fret about what we can not help; and it is certainly unprofitable to fret about what we can help. The more we fret, the more occasion we find for fretting, until it becomes a habit. None enjoy the society of one out of patience. He destroys his own peace, and makes himself disagreeable to all with whom he associates. Jesus wishes his children to be lovely, amiable, kind to all, and to do good to every one. Let us all try to be more like our heavenly pattern.

BRO. HALL'S TRACTS.

In answer to the requests for the tracts donated by Bro. S. Hall to the Society for distribution, we would say, that just as soon as received (we do not print them), we will forward them as requested.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PROPOSED TRACTS.

They do not appear yet. A long delay, from various causes it seems, but to me quite unexpected. I am now informed they will be ready for distribution in about two, or at most three weeks. S. Hall.

"NO MORE SEA."

The splendid poem bearing this title, which the reader may find on another page, is, we suppose, from the pen of Dr. Horatius Bonar, who, with his brother Andrew, is the editor of the London Journal of Prophecy, from which it was copied. In the music of rhyme, but with a fine and masterly conception of the Scripture text on which it forms a comment, it exactly expresses our own view of how the sea will appear and be arranged in the coming new earth. Read it, and rejoice in the deliciousness of truth.

The view of Bonar was held also by John Wesley, as appears in his sermon on Rev. 21: 5. He thought there would be no more a wide-spread and boisterous ocean, but beautiful, clear, and limpid waters, rising here and there in crystal fountains to refresh and adorn the earth with liquid lapse of murmuring stream instead. We believe it. God will fix it all just right. His judgment of the beautiful is perfect. If pellucid waters, and golden strands, and shining shores, and gently undulating hills and dales, and green glens, and flowery fields, and verdant trees, and singing birds of a thousand hues, and scenes of material loveliness passing all human conception, are required for the perfection of His restored creation and for the joy of the redeemed, He will have them all there. Amen. It most concerns us all to know if we shall ever reach that world ourselves. It will not be gained without an effort. D. T. T.

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD.—No. 2.

CROSSES.

Your husbandman and Lord hath lopped off some of the branches already; the tree itself is to be transplanted to the high garden. In a good time be it—our Lord ripen you. All these crosses (and indeed when I remember them they are heavy and many—peace, peace be the end of them!) are to make you white and ripe for the Lord's sickle. I have seen the Lord weaning you from the breasts of this world. It was never his mind that it should be your patrimony, and God be thanked for that; ye look the liker one of the heirs. Let the movables go,—why not? They are not yours,—fasten your gripe upon the heritage.

I think more of my Lord's sweet cross than of a crown of gold and a free kingdom lying to it.

Let Christ fare well, suppose I should eat ashes. I know that he must be sweet himself when his cross is so sweet. And it is the part of us all, if we marry himself, to marry the crosses, losses, and reproaches also that follow him; for mercy followeth Christ's cross. His prison for beauty is made of marble and ivory; his chains that are laid on his prisoners are golden chains; and the sighs of the prisoners of hope are perfumed with comforts, the like whereof cannot be bred or found on this side of sun or moon.

It is my aim and hearty desire, that my furnace, which is of the Lord's kindling, may emit sparks of fire upon standers-by, to the warming of their hearts with God's love. The very dust that falleth from Christ's feet, his old, ragged clothes, his knotty and black cross, are sweeter to me than kings' golden crowns, and their time-eaten pleasures.

Sew no clouts upon Christ's robe. Take Christ in his rags and losses, and as persecuted by men, and be content to sigh and pant up the mountain with Christ's cross on your back.

It is good that your crosses will but convoy you to heaven's gates; in can they not go; the gates shall be closed upon them when ye shall be admitted to the throne. O, what is laid up for you! therefore harden your face against the wind.

My chains are gold; Christ's cross is all over gilded and perfumed; his prison is the garden and orchard of my delights. Mine enemies have made me blessed. They have sent me to the Bridegroom's chamber. Love is his banner over me; I live a king's life. I want nothing but heaven, and possession of my crown; my earnest is great; Christ is no niggard to me. Dear brother, be for the Lord Jesus and his heart-broken Bride.

O, this world is out of all conceit, and all love with our Well-beloved! O that I could sell my laughter, joy, ease, and all for him, and be content with a straw bed and bread by weight and water by measure in the camp of our weeping Christ! I know that his sackcloth and ashes are better than the fool's laughter, but, alas! we do not harden our faces against the cold north storms which blow upon Christ's fair face. We love well summer religion, and to be that which sin has made us, even as thin-skinned as if we were made of white paper, and would fain be carried to heaven in a close-covered chariot, wishing from our hearts that Christ would give us his seal for nothing but a fair summer, until we be landed at heaven's gates.

Your Lord may gather his roses and shake his apples at what season of the year he pleaseth. And now the number of crosses lying in our way to glory are fewer by one than when I saw you. One year's time of heaven shall swallow up all sorrows; I know that your cup is sugared with mercy.

Subscribe to the Almighty's will; put your hand to the pen, and let the cross of your Lord Jesus have your submissive and resolute Amen. If ye ask and try whose this cross is? I dare say that it is not all your own, the best half of it is Christ's. If Christ and ye be halvers of this suffering, and he say, "Half mine," what should ail you? "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."—Isa. 63: 9. Then Christ bore the first stroke of this cross; it rebounded off him upon you, and ye get it at second hand, and ye and he are halvers in it. And I am here right upon the style of the word of God.—Phil. 3: 10. "The fellowship of Christ's sufferings."—Col. 1: 24. "The remnant of the afflictions of Christ." Heb. 11: 26. "The reproach of Christ."—Christ when he married you, married you and all the crosses and grieved hearts that follow you. And he mindeth to distil heaven out of this loss and all others the like; for wisdom devised it, and love laid it on, and Christ owneth it as his own, and putteth your shoulder only beneath a piece of it.

A cross of our own choosing, honeyed and sugared with consolations, we cannot have; Christ went in over the door threshold of Paradise bleeding to death. D. T. T.

For the World's Crisis.

SURPRISE PARTIES AGAIN.

Last week a sister in Connecticut sent us $20.00 for the benefit of the needy of this great city, among whom it is my privilege to labor. We had two dollars left in our funds for the same purpose, and on Friday last Srs. Helginson and Maria assisted me in distributing the amount in the shape of flour, meal, etc., etc., making in all $22.00 worth. I write for the purpose of encouraging the faith of God's precious saints. The glory belongs not to me. I am but a servant of servants. The Lord's servants use me as their servant to distribute their gifts; hence Francis H. Burbank writes not to puff himself, but he writes to give an account of his servantship. He desires above all that his heavenly Father should have all the praise.

The first place visited was the home of Sr. D., a widow having three children to maintain. She was a washerwoman. As might be expected, she was not much burdened with this world's goods. We gave her a bag of flour of twenty-four and a half pounds, a bag of meal of eight pounds, a pound of candles, and a pound of soap. As we laid them upon her little table, she exclaimed.

"O, how the Lord has rewarded me. The other day I heard of a minister's family who were suffering, and having fifty cents, I gave them one half. The next day the Lord gave me seventy-five, and here to-day he has given me such a great blessing."

That woman had little money, but much faith. One man, a brother in the Lord, who several years ago was worth thousands of dollars, called on me several weeks ago, and gave me fifty cents. Amongst other things he said,

"Once, when I was rich, I would give a shilling away, when I could easily have given a dollar. Now, I give a shilling away, where I want to give the dollar."

The next place visited was a room in a wooden shanty on Middle Alley, where lived Sr. G., a widow with one little boy to support. She is in poverty's vale. For several months she has been unable to do any work, on account of her feeble state of health. We gave her the same benefits as in the preceding case, adding a pound of sugar, and a half pound of tea.

Next, into the cellar of the same shanty, where lived a widowed mother and her only daughter, a girl of thirteen years. The mother had just recovered her speech, having had a stroke of paralysis. She was suffering so badly from inflammatory rheumatism that it was with exceeding difficulty that she could walk about the humble home, which was two-thirds under ground. To add to her sufferings and distress, her daughter was suffering with that terrible malady, the Asiatic Cholera. Her screams could be heard half a square off. A teaspoonful of our "cholera remedy" relieved her in a few minutes, and the next day when I visited the cellar again she was getting well rapidly. That poor christian mother's heart was filled with praise and thanksgiving. We gave the same bounties as in the preceding instance.

Thence to Mrs. C.'s, a poor woman who has four little ones to provide for. From there to Sr. P.'s, an invalid. Joy and gladness filled her heart. Therefrom to Sr. J.'s, whose drunken husband had left her in a starving condition.

Bro. C. came next in the list. Has had no employment for three weeks, but has been, and does still go out every day in search of employment. He has taken Eddie Washington, a little orphan, off of my hands, to bring up as his own. May the Lord bless this faithful christian man.

Lastly to Sr. ——'s, another sad case. She is a dear good saint of Jesus, but plagued with an ungodly husband, who does little or nothing for his family. He has three children, and the mother is obliged to support them, while the father spends the greater part of his time in another State, visiting his family but a few times in the course of the year. For a period of three months he had sent her but three dollars. She is a distressed woman. Her stove had been sold to pay her rent and to obtain food. And she had just sold her little girl's dress to get bread; and just before we entered that home, the last crust had been eaten. Truly the Lord sent us to that heart-broken woman, to make her heart glad.

In all these homes we had seasons of prayer, and endeavored to teach all the blessedness of exercising unshaken confidence in the Father of us all. "Have faith in God," is our watchword. His promises are yea and amen.

We gave surprise parties in all to eight families, embracing one man, eight women, and twelve children. The average amount given to each family in provisions, etc., would not exceed $2.75, or about one dollar for each person.

Our Sunday school has grown so large, I have engaged another hall in the same building to accommodate the number. Now we have two halls in operation. A better set of scholars I have nowhere seen. Pray for us and them, and may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ abide with all who love him in sincerity. Yours, etc., in the highways,

F. H. Burbank.

LETTER FROM BRO. J. G. HOOK.

Bro. Adams:—The people are being stirred in this place, and its surroundings, by the power of truth in the tracts that were furnished me for free distribution at the office of publication in Boston. Praise God that he has stirred up his servants to write so many precious truths, and others to publish them, and others to pay for them, that they may be scattered upon all waters without money or price. Let others scatter them like autumnal leaves, and do it while probation lasts. We are surely near the end.

I am preaching evenings in a hall, as no one in the place invited me to their houses of worship; but, thank God, I feel free to preach all the counsel of God in "my own hired house." During the day I visit the wharves and fishing boats, distribute tracts, preach, warn, counsel, and entreat the people to be reconciled to God. Many listen with interest, and gladly accept the little tract messengers, and promise to read them, and carry them to their homes, in different parts of the Province, for others to read also. I also give them to farmers and country people, who receive them joyfully, and promise to read and spread them around their neighborhoods. As I hand strangers papers and tracts, they often ask questions, and I thus find myself surrounded by from ten to fifty, who eagerly listen to the words of the stranger visitor. Some mock, however, and pass on; others say, "Come and preach at our place." Others are very bold, and confess in the presence of all bystanders that it is the truth, and they believe it. So while I am grieved by the treatment of some, I am cheered and gladdened by the kind words of others; and while sometimes made sorrowful, am always rejoicing. Glory to God. Hallelujah.

Pray for me and this mission, for I am satisfied it is of God. The Lord be praised for the tokens of good already seen. I am to remain in this place a few days longer, and then journey towards Liverpool; and, as I go, preach, and distribute tracts. I am sure they will do great good.

I wish you to send me fifty dollars' worth more of tracts to Liverpool, immediately, for free distribution. This way of giving the people the gospel removes prejudice at once, and they are more ready to hear the word preached. Send all letters to Yarmouth, N. S.

John G. Hook.

Yarmouth, N. S., Oct. 18th, 1866.

We send the tracts, as requested by Bro. Hook. May the blessing of God rest upon our brother as he goes forth scattering tracts, preaching the word, and doing what he can to make ready a people for "the great day of the Lord," which is near. "It is near and hasteth greatly." Calls for tracts for free distribution are constantly being received, and we are sending them out north, south, east and west. Stewards of the Lord, see to it that ye do your part in sending in funds as the Master would have you, that the Society may be enabled to print and scatter tracts more extensively than ever before, and "so that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

For the World's Crisis.

THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

Bro. Grant:—Agreeably to my suggestions to you, when we parted at Alton Bay, I found the interests of the mission in this place required my personal attention. I arrived here Friday morning, Oct. 5th, and went direct to the mission house, in North Memphis. I found Bro. Leslie in his little room beside the mission house, something like the chamber prepared for the prophet Elijah, in ancient time. There was just room enough for sleeping, with a table and two chairs, and nothing more. He is humble, economical, and practical. Here he is ready, by day or night, to attend to any calls of his people, whom he loves to serve, and who esteem his services. In these cholera times, he has frequent calls by day and night for medicine and help among the sick.

Our meeting was indeed a joyous one. We embraced, we wept, and rejoiced, and we praised God together as kindred souls. O, it was a scene of personal interest and joy; such as occurs only between friends long parted, who are engaged in a great and good enterprise; and laboring amid cares and trials, weakness and sickness, among strangers. Ah, to see an old friend and fellow laborer under such circumstances, is indeed one of the most happy of all personal greetings.

Well, surprise and joy subsiding, the first thing was work. What is to be done? Sister Butler had been obliged to return home, weak and sick; and Bro. L. was now alone. And in his own weakness and sickness, he had a short time ago become discouraged, and wrote me that he had concluded to give up the mission and return home. But, soon after this, his health came up, and with it his hopes revived of going on with the work. The freedmen set in their entreaties, also, that he should not leave them, which the more confirmed him in his duty to remain. And so soon as he resumed his meetings, the Lord poured out his spirit, and convicted large numbers of sin, so that from fifty to seventy asked prayers. He was overwhelmed and surprised at this change, both in his own condition and health, and the work of God among sinners. And so he entirely changed his mind and plans in relation to the mission. He now felt that he could not give it up. He must stay and carry it on at any rate, even if he did not receive support from the society to do so. I found him in this condition, trusting, working and praising in the service of the Lord; and at the same time waiting for the decision and advice of the Board, as to what was best to do.

In our consultations, after looking over the whole ground, we arrived at the following:

First. The owner of the mission house will still rent it for the use of the meeting and school, if we want it.

Second. The freedmen were determined, in case we go on, to meet the rent of the house.

Third. The freedmen had resolved to have a school, if we would get them a teacher. And they will support the teacher themselves, so as to give Bro. Leslie his whole time to visit, and preach to them the gospel.

Fourth. The freedmen were unanimous in their desire to have Bro. Leslie remain among them as a preacher, and desire the society to keep him here and support him; while they do the rest to keep the meeting and school going.

This unexpected opening cheered our hearts and inspired hope, as it seemed to be practicable. Our former plan to build a house, did not now seem to be a practicable one; and so it was given up, for the time, at least. But this later opening seemed to be of the Lord, because it gives us the opportunity to get the gospel of the kingdom before the people, without any care or special charge of the school. And yet the school goes on in harmony, giving us the good will of the freedmen in this respect, as well as in preaching the gospel to them.

The door is now open in this city to us,—a "wide and effectual door." We have the full confidence of the freedmen; and what we have done in the past has prepared the way for the future. They know from the sacrifices we have made, from the missionary society at Boston, and from the self-denying labors of Bro. Leslie, Sister Butler, and others sent out by the Board, that we all are their friends. And so when some sectarians from the North, or opposers in the South, attempt to prejudice them against us, they fail to do it. They know that we are their friends, and we have their confidence. They are aware that we hold views concerning the coming of Christ, the intermediate state, the resurrection and future reign of Christ and his saints, which have not been held by themselves and others; and yet they know we are christians, and are among them to do them good, and prepare them for the kingdom of God.

We now have calls for help in the country, where the northern element prevails to such an extent as to give us protection. And the way is opening for us in all the region. All the towns and cities of any note on the river, are open to us; and with a proper introduction, our preachers would be kindly received, both above and below Memphis, and right in the heart of the South. If, then, we are to do any thing among the freedmen, this is the place to begin to do it. And since we have made so great a sacrifice for this object, and this city and vicinity, it does not seem wise to abandon it now.

Besides, Bro. Leslie feels that this special work is resting upon him, and with returning health, in answer to prayer, and the present revival, with the love of this people, he could not tear himself away. He is now giving himself entirely to preaching, Sabbath school, visiting, and distributing tracts.

I have found a most interesting state of things here among the freedmen. There are great revivals in all their meetings, and thousands have been converted within the last few months.

The field is ripe, and the door is open. We need the labors of Bro. Hook in this field, and hope it will not be long ere he will be with this dear people to proclaim to them the gospel of the kingdom.

For the World's Crisis.

REPORT OF THE MAINE ANNUAL ADVENT CONFERENCE,

Held at Richmond, Oct. 3d to 7th, 1866.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 3d. Conference met according to appointment. The evening was spent in prayer, song, and exhortation, and was a season of some interest.

Thursday morning. A goodly number of brethren and sisters came together, and devoted the forenoon in exhorting one another to more faithfulness to God and to his cause. It was a profitable meeting. At 2 P. M. Bro. H. B. Sevey gave a stirring discourse from Rev. 21: 7. After preaching, conference met for business. Bro. H. B. Sevey was re-elected chairman of the conference, and R. R. York and J. A. Libby, Secretaries. S. K. Partridge, J. A. Libby, and R. R. York, were appointed a committee to prepare business for the conference. In the evening, Bro. J. C. Wheeler preached from 1 Tim. 6: 12 to a large and attentive audience.

Friday morning, at eight o'clock, conference met for business. The following items were brought in by the business committee for the consideration of the conference:

1. To hear the report of the brethren, chosen last year to correspond with the ministers and churches of each quarterly conference, to see if the conference shall be dissolved and a new one organized.

2. To admit to the conference those who might be proposed and wished to join.

3. To choose a committee to draft a constitution for the conference.

4. See what can be done to supply destitute places with faithful laborers.

The first article for consideration was passed over, the committee not being prepared to report. Item second was taken up, and the following brethren admitted by unanimous vote as members of conference:—Clarkson Goud, Jer. Partridge, I. C. Wellcome, D. W. Griffin, B. S. Emery, Hiram S. Mitchell, Silas Timberlake, Stephen Harding, Thos. M. Storer, T. Bates, Geo. Umberhind, Joshua Hemenway, Harvey Gaul, Jos. Benner.

Article third was taken up, and the following brethren appointed to draft a constitution, viz: C. Goud, W. H. Mitchell, I. C. Wellcome, S. K. Partridge, D. W. Griffin. Item fourth was talked over quite freely, and finally recommended that, as the laborers are so few in number and they are doing what they can, we pray the Lord to send forth more laborers into the vineyard.

A good prayer meeting occupied the remainder of the forenoon. Preaching in the afternoon by Bro. J. A. Libby, from James

ANOTHER STAR SHOWER.

In an article on the 'Falling Stars,' in the Pilgrim for January 1st, we drew attention to the fact that the star-showers of November 12th-13th were periodic,—the first having occurred on the night of the 12th of November, 1799, and the second on the 12th of November, 1833, just 34 years apart; and that hence astronomers were generally looking for a third grand display at the close of another 34 years, in November, 1867.

From an article in the papers, it appears that Professor Newton, of Yale College, who has paid much attention to the subject, expects the recurrence of that display on the 13th or 14th of November, this year, instead of 1867. What reasons the Professor has for expecting it this year we have not seen; yet we still incline to the opinion of Olbers and other distinguished astronomers, that "the next appearance [in America] of the phenomena of shooting stars and fireballs intermixed, falling like flakes of snow, will not recur until between the 12th and 14th of November, 1867." If they are periodic, and occur at intervals of 34 years, we do not see how they can occur here before that year.

It will be remembered that the enormous swarm of falling stars in November, 1779, was almost exclusively seen in America, and that of 1833, wholly so; hence 1867 seems to be the periodic year in which America may expect another shower.

As the great star-shower of 1832 was visible only in Europe, (one year earlier than that in America,) there is reason to expect another grand display in Europe, this year, if not in America; and, accordingly, we see that preparations are being made there to observe this sublime spectacle. As it may be seen in America, we shall watch for it, and we advise our readers to do so.

Czechowski's Thrilling Narrative.

A small edition of this work has been printed in paper covers, to be disposed of for the benefit of the European Mission. The book will be sent post-paid to every one who contributes $1.00 or more to the aid of the Mission. Bro. Czechowski is in need of help. Let the friends take this means to aid him, and receive an interesting book in return. The book will be sent to those only who order it.

A SOLAR SYSTEM BURNED UP.—On the 12th of May a bright star was suddenly noticed in the constellation Corona Borealis or Northern Crown. It was then as bright as stars of the second magnitude—Orion's belt for example. It rapidly faded again, and on the 22nd of June was reckoned as of the ninth magnitude. But on analyzing the light there appeared to be two kinds, one analogous to solar and stellar light, the other that of the flame of burning bodies. Of course any worlds dependent on this central sun for heat were burned to cinders. The events now manifested to our eyes may have occurred centuries ago, so long does it take light to traverse these vast unmeasured spaces.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

If Jesus were on earth now, we think he would say to all as he said to the Jews, "O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" It is strange that every one, who reads his Bible with the least care, can not see the import of "the signs of the times" in this perilous hour. We find that candid, thinking, observing, commen-sense men, who make no profession of religion, and seldom, if ever, read the Bible, are satisfied that some great event is at hand, and describe the state of things in the world in complete harmony with the description in the Bible, as given by the prophet, when speaking of the condition of things in the last days. Indeed, we often find more candor among unconverted men than professors of religion. Many of the latter seem to be the blindest of all;—just like the Pharisees in the days of the Savior, who could "not discern the signs of the times."

Human nature is the same now as then. It was not the mere name that constituted a man a Pharisee, but his doctrine and character. So now, if one shows the same doctrine and character, then it is proper to call him a Pharisee. It is certain that the doctrine of the Pharisees triumphs in these days among a large portion of Protestant professors, and in all the Roman Catholic churches. And do we need to bring any proof to show that the same spirit, or disposition, is manifested at the present day concerning the second coming of Christ as was shown by the Pharisees in relation to the first advent of our Savior? They could say, "Away with him," "crucify him, crucify him." They did not want him here on earth. So now; they are willing he should stay where he is; but they do not want him to come here to interfere with their plans. They are willing he should reign spiritually in men's hearts, but do not want his personal presence. They will make great feasts for bloody heroes, and political demagogues, who will stoop to the basest of means to carry out their plans; but when we talk of the coming of Jesus, our best friend, who has done more for this world than all men can ever do; we find these modern Pharisees no more willing to receive him now than at the first advent. And as we approach the sublime day of his appearing, their opposition and bitterness towards his coming seem stronger. They crowd the festivals and fairs, stay away from prayer meetings, dress in immodest and costly apparel, build costly temples for the professed worship of God, oppress the poor and the hireling in his wages; read novels, neglect the Bible, and scoff at those who talk about the coming of Jesus, and love his appearing.

This is just such a state of things as is foretold in the Scriptures, which is to characterize nominal christendom in "the last days." They will be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." They will keep up the "form of godliness," "denying the power thereof." Who can fail to see that Paul's description of "the last days," found in 2. Tim. 3: 1–5, is a perfect picture of the times in which we live?

Satan will do all in his power to keep those quiet, who see the perils of the hour in which we are living. But shall we keep still? Will the Lord say "well done" if we do? Shall we be doing as we would be done by in an hour of danger to refuse to give the alarm, because some do not like to hear it? If a house was on fire, should we be justified in keeping still, and withholding the cry of "FIRE" because it might wake up or disturb some of the neighbors? Better that the neighbors should lose a little sleep than that another should be ruined. So now; what if some Pharisees do not like the cry—Jesus is coming! is it not better that they should be disturbed, in order that others may be saved, who will hear, than to keep still to accommodate those who will not heed the warning? It is time to "cry aloud" and "spare not,"—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

Dear reader, is your lamp trimmed and burning? Are you all ready to welcome the King of kings and Lord of lords?

"SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT."—Do not fail to read the article in another column, headed—"Something to think about." It was the leading editorial in the American Churchman, an Episcopal paper, published in Chicago, dated Sept. 13th, 1866. The remarks on "the religion of the day" demand the serious attention of every true disciple of Jesus, and of all who wish to become his followers. Thousands are being deceived by what the "Churchman" calls "the religion of the day,"—mere humanitarianism—a human system, independent of salvation though nominally a christian religion. It is one of Satan's most successful snares ever laid to entrap human beings. Please give the article a careful reading, especially the last half.

DIVINE CONTENTMENT.—We have recently come across an old book, first published by Simeon Ashe, in 1653, entitled "Divine Contentment." We received much profit in reading it. We purpose to give our readers some extracts from it, hoping they will be much benefited by them. We make a beginning this week. See article headed "Divine Contentment."

SHORT OBITUARIES.

We are under the necessity of requesting those who write obituaries for the Crisis, to make them short and comprehensive as possible. It should be considered that most of those whose obituaries are published, are scarcely known outside of the neighborhood where they lived; consequently, most of our readers have little or no interest to read their obituaries notices. The great object of obituary notices is to notify friends who live at a distance. Those who live in the immediate vicinity of the deceased do not need the newspaper notice; because they are already informed. When one dies, who has been generally known, then the obituary notice is more needful, and should be longer than when it is only a child, or one unknown to the public.

We are aware that every word spoken by our loved ones on their dying bed are treasured up as very choice relics, by the surviving friends; and that they would be glad to see them all in print, but if they will consider a moment, they will see that it would not be best to fill up "our paper" with long records of what the sick and dying have said; unless they were quite extensively known to our readers, so that many might be interested. Most papers only give the bare account of the death, without any comments.

We sometimes receive a long string of pretty verses concerning some darling child, contributed by some friend of the bereaved family. We are sorry to be obliged to refuse their publication, but we know there would be much dissatisfaction if we published all that are written. This is one of the crosses of an editor, who has a desire to gratify the feelings of all his readers. But as it is impossible to do it, he must do the best he can, and bear all censure without murmuring or impatience. We hope our readers will exercise as much charity as they can, and pray that we may have heavenly wisdom to do all to the glory of the Lord.

PAPAL LAMENTATIONS.

The Catholics see and feel that their power will soon be gone. Their control of "times and laws" is about ended. This startling fact has come upon them suddenly and unexpectedly. At the very time the Roman woman was boasting, "I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow," she received her death warrant, as did Belshazzar at his last impious feast, when the hand was seen writing on the wall,—"mene, mene, tekel, upharsin." Why did the woman make the expression, "I sit a queen and am no widow?" Because many said she must soon lose her power. This she did not believe, so long as Austria remained a first class power.

A private letter from Madrid states that at the news of each successive victory of the Prussians over the Austrians, Queen Isabella of Spain, shed tears, and broke out into lamentations; saying, "It is all over with us! with the Pope, with Austria, with all of us. The heretics, the Protestants, triumph."

We see no chance for the continuance of the Papal power more than another year. We are entering a period of tragic interest in this world's history. It is high time for all to be ready for the marriage of the Lamb, who expect or desire to be saved. There is not a moment to be lost in the foolish pleasures of this world. The end of the present dispensation is at hand. Those who see the light should let it shine, lest they be condemned for neglect of duty. This is a critical part of the christian's journey, when he needs to be extra watchful if he would travel safely through the perils of these last days.

Dear reader, are you all ready for the grand event about to transpire? Is your heart pure? Do you love the appearing of Jesus?

WARS.

The spirit of war seems to be almost universal. Instead of the approach of a temporal millennium, as taught and believed by many, when the instruments of warfare will be beaten up into implements of husbandry, we see the opposite is most emphatically true. Men cry "peace, peace, but there is no peace." Wars and rumors of wars come to us from all parts of the world. The nations are becoming more and more uneasy, and dissatisfied with their condition. Men are continually becoming more weary of restraint, and claim the right to do as they please. A state of anarchy seems rapidly approaching in the most civilized portions of the world. People are unwilling to "be subject one to another," as the Bible directs.

The same spirit is manifesting itself in the church as in the state; hence the many contentions and divisions that are now destroying the church of Christ. Let us do those "things which make for peace." Much prayer and watchfulness is needed in these times, lest we partake of the war spirit in some form. Whenever we yield to it, we grieve away the Spirit of Christ. The Bible gives us no caution against being too kind, long-suffering, or forbearing. Indeed, there is no danger in that direction. Jesus is our pattern. Are we manifesting the same spirit that he exhibited? We are required "to walk, even as he walked." Are we imitating him as we should? Are we peacemakers, or are we creating divisions? Are we bearing all thing patiently? or, do we murmur about our lot in life?

It does no good to fret about what we can not help; and it is certainly unprofitable to fret about what we can help. The more we fret, the more occasion we find for fretting, until it becomes a habit. None enjoy the society of one out of patience. He destroys his own peace, and makes himself disagreeable to all with whom he associates. Jesus wishes his children to be lovely, amiable, kind to all, and to do good to every one. Let us all try to be more like our heavenly pattern.

"NO MORE SEA."

The splendid poem bearing this title, which the reader may find on another page, is, we suppose, from the pen of Dr. Horatius Bonar, who, with his brother Andrew, is the editor of the London Journal of Prophecy, from which it was copied. In the music of rhyme, but with a fine and masterly conception of the Scripture text on which it forms a comment, it exactly expresses our own view of how the sea will appear and be arranged in the coming new earth. Read it, and rejoice in the deliciousness of truth.

The view of Bonar was held also by John Wesley, as appears in his sermon on Rev. 21: 5. He thought there would be no more a wide-spread and boisterous ocean, but beautiful, clear, and limpid waters, rising here and there in crystal fountains to refresh and adorn the earth with liquid lapse of murmuring stream instead. We believe it. God will fix it all just right. His judgment of the beautiful is perfect. If pellucid waters, and golden strands, and shining shores, and gently undulating hills and dales, and green glens, and flowery fields, and verdant trees, and singing birds of a thousand hues, and scenes of material loveliness passing all human conception, are required for the perfection of His restored creation and for the joy of the redeemed, He will have them all there. Amen. It most concerns us all to know if we shall ever reach that world ourselves. It will not be gained without an effort.

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD.—No. 2.

CROSSES.

Your husbandman and Lord hath lopped off some of the branches already; the tree itself is to be transplanted to the high garden. In a good time be it—our Lord ripen you. All these crosses (and indeed when I remember them they are heavy and many—peace, peace be the end of them!) are to make you white and ripe for the Lord's sickle. I have seen the Lord weaning you from the breasts of this world. It was never his mind that it should be your patrimony, and God be thanked for that; ye look the liker one of the heirs. Let the movables go,—why not? They are not yours,—fasten your gripe upon the heritage.

I think more of my Lord's sweet cross than of a crown of gold and a free kingdom lying to it.

Let Christ fare well, suppose I should eat ashes. I know that he must be sweet himself when his cross is so sweet. And it is the part of us all, if we marry himself, to marry the crosses, losses, and reproaches also that follow him; for mercy followeth Christ's cross. His prison for beauty is made of marble and ivory; his chains that are laid on his prisoners are golden chains; and the sighs of the prisoners of hope are perfumed with comforts, the like whereof cannot be bred or found on this side of sun or moon.

It is my aim and hearty desire, that my furnace, which is of the Lord's kindling, may emit sparks of fire upon standers-by, to the warming of their hearts with God's love. The very dust that falleth from Christ's feet, his old, ragged clothes, his knotty and black cross, are sweeter to me than kings' golden crowns, and their time-eaten pleasures.

Sew no clouts upon Christ's robe. Take Christ in his rags and losses, and as persecuted by men, and be content to sigh and pant up the mountain with Christ's cross on your back.

It is good that your crosses will but convoy you to heaven's gates; in can they not go; the gates shall be closed upon them when ye shall be admitted to the throne. O, what is laid up for you! therefore harden your face against the wind.

My chains are gold; Christ's cross is all over gilded and perfumed; his prison is the garden and orchard of my delights. Mine enemies have made me blessed. They have sent me to the Bridegroom's chamber. Love is his banner over me; I live a king's life. I want nothing but heaven, and possession of my crown; my earnest is great; Christ is no niggard to me. Dear brother, be for the Lord Jesus and his heart-broken Bride.

O, this world is out of all conceit, and all love with our Well-beloved! O that I could sell my laughter, joy, ease, and all for him, and be content with a straw bed and bread by weight and water by measure in the camp of our weeping Christ! I know that his sackcloth and ashes are better than the fool's laughter, but, alas! we do not harden our faces against the cold north storms which blow upon Christ's fair face. We love well summer religion, and to be that which sin has made us, even as thin-skinned as if we were made of white paper, and would fain be carried to heaven in a close-covered chariot, wishing from our hearts that Christ would give us his seal for nothing but a fair summer, until we be landed at heaven's gates.

Your Lord may gather his roses and shake his apples at what season of the year he pleaseth. And now the number of crosses lying in our way to glory are fewer by one than when I saw you. One year's time of heaven shall swallow up all sorrows; I know that your cup is sugared with mercy.

Subscribe to the Almighty's will; put your hand to the pen, and let the cross of your Lord Jesus have your submissive and resolute AMEN. If ye ask and try whose this cross is? I dare say that it is not all your own, the best half of it is Christ's. If Christ and ye be halvers of this suffering, and he say, "Half mine," what should ail you? "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."—Isa. 63: 9. Then Christ bore the first stroke of this cross; it rebounded off him upon you, and ye get it at second hand, and ye and he are halvers in it. And I am here right upon the style of the word of God.—Phil. 3: 10. "The fellowship of Christ's sufferings."—Col. 1: 24. "The remnant of the afflictions of Christ." Heb. 11: 26. "The reproach of Christ."—Christ when he married you, married you and all the crosses and grieved hearts that follow you. And he mindeth to distil heaven out of this loss and all others the like; for wisdom devised it, and love laid it on, and Christ owneth it as his own, and putteth your shoulder only beneath a piece of it.

A cross of our own choosing, honeyed and sugared with consolations, we cannot have; Christ went in over the door threshold of Paradise bleeding to death.

SURPRISE PARTIES AGAIN.

Last week a sister in Connecticut sent us $20.00 for the benefit of the needy of this great city, among whom it is my privilege to labor. We had two dollars left in our funds for the same purpose, and on Friday last Srs. Helginson and Maria assisted me in distributing the amount in the shape of flour, meal, etc., etc., making in all $22.00 worth. I write for the purpose of encouraging the faith of God's precious saints. The glory belongs not to me. I am but a servant of servants. The Lord's servants use me as their servant to distribute their gifts; hence Francis H. Burbank writes not to puff himself, but he writes to give an account of his servantship. He desires above all that his heavenly Father should have all the praise.

The first place visited was the home of Sr. D., a widow having three children to maintain. She was a washerwoman. As might be expected, she was not much burdened with this world's goods. We gave her a bag of flour of twenty-four and a half pounds, a bag of meal of eight pounds, a pound of candles, and a pound of soap. As we laid them upon her little table, she exclaimed.

"O, how the Lord has rewarded me. The other day I heard of a minister's family who were suffering, and having fifty cents, I gave them one half. The next day the Lord gave me seventy-five, and here to-day he has given me such a great blessing."

That woman had little money, but much faith. One man, a brother in the Lord, who several years ago was worth thousands of dollars, called on me several weeks ago, and gave me fifty cents. Amongst other things he said,

"Once, when I was rich, I would give a shilling away, when I could easily have given a dollar. Now, I give a shilling away, where I want to give the dollar."

The next place visited was a room in a wooden shanty on Middle Alley, where lived Sr. G., a widow with one little boy to support. She is in poverty's vale. For several months she has been unable to do any work, on account of her feeble state of health. We gave her the same benefits as in the preceding case, adding a pound of sugar, and a half pound of tea.

Next, into the cellar of the same shanty, where lived a widowed mother and her only daughter, a girl of thirteen years. The mother had just recovered her speech, having had a stroke of paralysis. She was suffering so badly from inflammatory rheumatism that it was with exceeding difficulty that she could walk about the humble home, which was two-thirds under ground. To add to her sufferings and distress, her daughter was suffering with that terrible malady, the Asiatic Cholera. Her screams could be heard half a square off. A teaspoonful of our "cholera remedy" relieved her in a few minutes, and the next day when I visited the cellar again she was getting well rapidly. That poor christian mother's heart was filled with praise and thanksgiving. We gave the same bounties as in the preceding instance.

Thence to Mrs. C.'s, a poor woman who has four little ones to provide for. From there to Sr. P.'s, an invalid. Joy and gladness filled her heart. Therefrom to Sr. J.'s, whose drunken husband had left her in a starving condition.

Bro. C. came next in the list. Has had no employment for three weeks, but has been, and does still go out every day in search of employment. He has taken Eddie Washington, a little orphan, off of my hands, to bring up as his own. May the Lord bless this faithful christian man.

Lastly to Sr. ——'s, another sad case. She is a dear good saint of Jesus, but plagued with an ungodly husband, who does little or nothing for his family. He has three children, and the mother is obliged to support them, while the father spends the greater part of his time in another State, visiting his family but a few times in the course of the year. For a period of three months he had sent her but three dollars. She is a distressed woman. Her stove had been sold to pay her rent and to obtain food. And she had just sold her little girl's dress to get bread; and just before we entered that home, the last crust had been eaten. Truly the Lord sent us to that heart-broken woman, to make her heart glad.

In all these homes we had seasons of prayer, and endeavored to teach all the blessedness of exercising unshaken confidence in the Father of us all. "Have faith in God," is our watchword. His promises are yea and amen.

We gave surprise parties in all to eight families, embracing one man, eight women, and twelve children. The average amount given to each family in provisions, etc., would not exceed $2.75, or about one dollar for each person.

Our Sunday school has grown so large, I have engaged another hall in the same building to accommodate the number. Now we have two halls in operation. A better set of scholars I have nowhere seen. Pray for us and them, and may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ abide with all who love him in sincerity. Yours, etc., in the highways,

LETTER FROM BRO. J. G. HOOK.

BRO. ADAMS:—The people are being stirred in this place, and its surroundings, by the power of truth in the tracts that were furnished me for free distribution at the office of publication in Boston. Praise God that he has stirred up his servants to write so many precious truths, and others to publish them, and others to pay for them, that they may be scattered upon all waters without money or price. Let others scatter them like autumnal leaves, and do it while probation lasts. We are surely near the end.

I am preaching evenings in a hall, as no one in the place invited me to their houses of worship; but, thank God, I feel free to preach all the counsel of God in "my own hired house." During the day I visit the wharves and fishing boats, distribute tracts, preach, warn, counsel, and entreat the people to be reconciled to God. Many listen with interest, and gladly accept the little tract messengers, and promise to read them, and carry them to their homes, in different parts of the Province, for others to read also. I also give them to farmers and country people, who receive them joyfully, and promise to read and spread them around their neighborhoods. As I hand strangers papers and tracts, they often ask questions, and I thus find myself surrounded by from ten to fifty, who eagerly listen to the words of the stranger visitor. Some mock, however, and pass on; others say, "Come and preach at our place." Others are very bold, and confess in the presence of all bystanders that it is the truth, and they believe it. So while I am grieved by the treatment of some, I am cheered and gladdened by the kind words of others; and while sometimes made sorrowful, am always rejoicing. Glory to God. Hallelujah.

Pray for me and this mission, for I am satisfied it is of God. The Lord be praised for the tokens of good already seen. I am to remain in this place a few days longer, and then journey towards Liverpool; and, as I go, preach, and distribute tracts. I am sure they will do great good.

I wish you to send me fifty dollars' worth more of tracts to Liverpool, immediately, for free distribution. This way of giving the people the gospel removes prejudice at once, and they are more ready to hear the word preached. Send all letters to Yarmouth, N. S.

JOHN G. HOOK.

Yarmouth, N. S., Oct. 18th, 1866.

We send the tracts, as requested by Bro. Hook. May the blessing of God rest upon our brother as he goes forth scattering tracts, preaching the word, and doing what he can to make ready a people for "the great day of the Lord," which is near. "It is NEAR and hasteth greatly." Calls for tracts for free distribution are constantly being received, and we are sending them out north, south, east and west. Stewards of the Lord, see to it that ye do your part in sending in funds as the Master would have you, that the Society may be enabled to print and scatter tracts more extensively than ever before, and "so that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—Agreeably to my suggestions to you, when we parted at Alton Bay, I found the interests of the mission in this place required my personal attention. I arrived here Friday morning, Oct. 5th, and went direct to the mission house, in North Memphis. I found Bro. Leslie in his little room beside the mission house, something like the chamber prepared for the prophet Elijah, in ancient time. There was just room enough for sleeping, with a table and two chairs, and nothing more. He is humble, economical, and practical. Here he is ready, by day or night, to attend to any calls of his people, whom he loves to serve, and who esteem his services. In these cholera times, he has frequent calls by day and night for medicine and help among the sick.

Our meeting was indeed a joyous one. We embraced, we wept, and rejoiced, and we praised God together as kindred souls. O, it was a scene of personal interest and joy; such as occurs only between friends long parted, who are engaged in a great and good enterprise; and laboring amid cares and trials, weakness and sickness, among strangers. Ah, to see an old friend and fellow laborer under such circumstances, is indeed one of the most happy of all personal greetings.

Well, surprise and joy subsiding, the first thing was work. What is to be done? Sister Butler had been obliged to return home, weak and sick; and Bro. L. was now alone. And in his own weakness and sickness, he had a short time ago become discouraged, and wrote me that he had concluded to give up the mission and return home. But, soon after this, his health came up, and with it his hopes revived of going on with the work. The freedmen set in their entreaties, also, that he should not leave them, which the more confirmed him in his duty to remain. And so soon as he resumed his meetings, the Lord poured out his spirit, and convicted large numbers of sin, so that from fifty to seventy asked prayers. He was overwhelmed and surprised at this change, both in his own condition and health, and the work of God among sinners. And so he entirely changed his mind and plans in relation to the mission. He now felt that he could not give it up. He must stay and carry it on at any rate, even if he did not receive support from the society to do so. I found him in this condition, trusting, working and praising in the service of the Lord; and at the same time waiting for the decision and advice of the Board, as to what was best to do.

In our consultations, after looking over the whole ground, we arrived at the following:

First. The owner of the mission house will still rent it for the use of the meeting and school, if we want it.

Second. The freedmen were determined, in case we go on, to meet the rent of the house.

Third. The freedmen had resolved to have a school, if we would get them a teacher. And they will support the teacher themselves, so as to give Bro. Leslie his whole time to visit, and preach to them the gospel.

Fourth. The freedmen were unanimous in their desire to have Bro. Leslie remain among them as a preacher, and desire the society to keep him here and support him; while they do the rest to keep the meeting and school going.

This unexpected opening cheered our hearts and inspired hope, as it seemed to be practicable. Our former plan to build a house, did not now seem to be a practicable one; and so it was given up, for the time, at least. But this later opening seemed to be of the Lord, because it gives us the opportunity to get the gospel of the kingdom before the people, without any care or special charge of the school. And yet the school goes on in harmony, giving us the good will of the freedmen in this respect, as well as in preaching the gospel to them.

The door is now open in this city to us,—a "wide and effectual door." We have the full confidence of the freedmen; and what we have done in the past has prepared the way for the future. They know from the sacrifices we have made, from the missionary society at Boston, and from the self-denying labors of Bro. Leslie, Sister Butler, and others sent out by the Board, that we all are their friends. And so when some sectarians from the North, or opposers in the South, attempt to prejudice them against us, they fail to do it. They know that we are their friends, and we have their confidence. They are aware that we hold views concerning the coming of Christ, the intermediate state, the resurrection and future reign of Christ and his saints, which have not been held by themselves and others; and yet they know we are christians, and are among them to do them good, and prepare them for the kingdom of God.

We now have calls for help in the country, where the northern element prevails to such an extent as to give us protection. And the way is opening for us in all the region. All the towns and cities of any note on the river, are open to us; and with a proper introduction, our preachers would be kindly received, both above and below Memphis, and right in the heart of the South. If, then, we are to do any thing among the freedmen, this is the place to begin to do it. And since we have made so great a sacrifice for this object, and this city and vicinity, it does not seem wise to abandon it now.

Besides, Bro. Leslie feels that this special work is resting upon him, and with returning health, in answer to prayer, and the present revival, with the love of this people, he could not tear himself away. He is now giving himself entirely to preaching, Sabbath school, visiting, and distributing tracts.

I have found a most interesting state of things here among the freedmen. There are great revivals in all their meetings, and thousands have been converted within the last few months.

The field is ripe, and the door is open. We need the labors of Bro. Hook in this field, and hope it will not be long ere he will be with this dear people to proclaim to them the gospel of the kingdom.

For the World's Crisis.

REPORT OF THE MAINE ANNUAL ADVENT CONFERENCE,

HELD AT RICHMOND, OCT. 3D TO 7TH, 1866.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 3d. Conference met according to appointment. The evening was spent in prayer, song, and exhortation, and was a season of some interest.

Thursday morning. A goodly number of brethren and sisters came together, and devoted the forenoon in exhorting one another to more faithfulness to God and to his cause. It was a profitable meeting. At 2 P. M. Bro. H. B. Sevey gave a stirring discourse from Rev. 21: 7. After preaching, conference met for business. Bro. H. B. Sevey was re-elected chairman of the conference, and R. R. York and J. A. Libby, Secretaries. S. K. Partridge, J. A. Libby, and R. R. York, were appointed a committee to prepare business for the conference. In the evening, Bro. J. C. Wheeler preached from 1 Tim. 6: 12 to a large and attentive audience.

Friday morning, at eight o'clock, conference met for business. The following items were brought in by the business committee for the consideration of the conference:

1. To hear the report of the brethren, chosen last year to correspond with the ministers and churches of each quarterly conference, to see if the conference shall be dissolved and a new one organized.

2. To admit to the conference those who might be proposed and wished to join.

3. To choose a committee to draft a constitution for the conference.

4. See what can be done to supply destitute places with faithful laborers.

The first article for consideration was passed over, the committee not being prepared to report. Item second was taken up, and the following brethren admitted by unanimous vote as members of conference:—Clarkson Goud, Jer. Partridge, I. C. Wellcome, D. W. Griffin, B. S. Emery, Hiram S. Mitchell, Silas Timberlake, Stephen Harding, Thos. M. Storer, T. Bates, Geo. Umberhind, Joshua Hemenway, Harvey Gaul, Jos. Benner.

Article third was taken up, and the following brethren appointed to draft a constitution, viz: C. Goud, W. H. Mitchell, I. C. Wellcome, S. K. Partridge, D. W. Griffin. Item fourth was talked over quite freely, and finally recommended that, as the laborers are so few in number and they are doing what they can, we pray the Lord to send forth more laborers into the vineyard.

A good prayer meeting occupied the remainder of the forenoon. Preaching in the afternoon by Bro. J. A. Libby, from James

2:23, and in the evening by Bro. B. S. Emery from 1 Cor. 15:35.

Saturday morning, conference met for business. The committee on drafting a constitution reported the following as a basis of action for the conference, viz:

Whereas our annual conference has become of sufficient importance to favorably affect the general interests of the Lord's cause in the State, even in an incipient stage of organization; and, whereas, its present condition, limits, and want of active elements for self-preservation and united action seem to require a more perfect organization, we therefore adopt the following

CONSTITUTION.

ART. 1. This conference shall be called the Maine Second Advent Conference, and shall hold its sessions annually, commencing the third Wednesday in Oct.; and its object shall be to save men through the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom of God at hand.

ART. 2. This conference shall consist of such ministers of the gospel as sustain a christian character, and are in good fellowship with each other, who wish to unite, and shall become members by a unanimous vote; also of delegates duly chosen from all churches and societies within the State, who are in harmony with this conference, and wish a voice in its action, viz: one delegate for each church and society, and one additional for every ten members.

ART. 3. The officers of this conference shall consist of President, Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer, chosen annually by a majority of the members present.

ART. 4. It shall be recommended to the ministers of this conference to counsel and encourage such persons as they think called of God to preach or exhort.

ART. 5. All complaints against the character or conduct of any minister of this conference shall be put in writing, and accompanied by the complainant's name, and then presented to the President of said conference; and in any such case, when evidence shall accompany the complaint of such clearness as to satisfy all the officers of said conference that there is a moral delinquency, they may notify him to refrain from preaching, and the public from giving him countenance, until his case shall be properly investigated.

ART. 6. It shall be the duty of the President and Secretary to call an extra session whenever petitioned by any ten members of said conference.

ART. 7. This constitution, except articles 1 and 2, may be amended at any annual session, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, provided there shall be twenty-four present.

Conference voted to adopt this constitution. At this stage of the meeting the conference was requested to consider the following preamble and resolution, which was adopted.

Whereas some of the brethren wish that the conference should take further action in the case of Elder Jesse Partridge, Therefore, Resolved, That we see no reason for changing the action taken in his case at our last annual meeting. It being the opinion of some that the merits of the case relating to Eld. J. Partridge were not understood, the conference volunteered to appoint the following brethren to examine all matters of difficulty that may be presented relating to the case of Eld. P., and report through the Crisis as soon as possible; viz., C. Goud, D. W. Griffin, J. Carr, Silas Timberlake, Jeremiah Partridge, Thos. M. Storer, S. K. Partridge, Geo. Umberhind, Stephen Harding, Hiram H. Mitchell.

Conference then adjourned to meet at the close of the afternoon public service. The remainder of the forenoon and a part of the afternoon was occupied in social meetings by those who remained at the meeting-house.

After the close of the afternoon service the conference met for choice of officers, according to the constitution, and to transact such other business as might come before them. The following brethren were chosen officers of the conference under its new arrangement for the ensuing year:—S. K. Partridge, President; R. R. York, Vice President; I. C. Wellcome, Secretary; R. R. York, Treasurer; R. R. York and J. A. Libby, Secretaries.

Voted, that the Secretary record the names of the members of the conference in this report, all who are known to be members at the commencement of this session and those received during this session.

Names. Ministers: Wm. H. Mitchell, B. S. Emery, R. R. York, I. C. Wellcome, C. Goud, J. A. Libby, J. C. Wheeler, E. M. Haggett, H. B. Sevey, J. H. Meader, Isaac Wight, L. L. Howard, I. Damman, John Morrill, J. Somes, S. K. Partridge, Thos. Smith, C. H. Leverton, H. D. Reed, Jeremiah Carr, J. R. Hall, Wm. M. Ingham, N. G. Reed. (If any are omitted, please notify.) Lay members: As we find no record of laymen having been voted in at any previous session, we can only record such as were received at this session; viz., Jeremiah Partridge, D. W. Griffin, F. Bates, Silas Timberlake, George Umberhind, Stephen Harding, I. M. Storer, Jere. Hemenway, Harvey Gaul, James Benner.

Voted, that all ministers belonging to this conference are permanent members, and all delegates are annual members.

Voted, that all money paid into the treasury for specific objects be so stated by the donors, and so disbursed by the treasurer, and all other money be at the direction of the conference.

Voted, that the officers of this conference constitute a disbursing committee to dispose of such money as may come into its treasury.

Voted, that the ministers of this conference constitute a committee to raise $500 the coming year, by subscription of the church, to be expended in preaching the gospel of the kingdom in new and destitute fields in Maine, to be disbursed by the Board.

Voted, that the Secretary prepare an article to be published in the Crisis, to awaken an interest on the subject last voted.

Voted, to accept Bro. Wm. H. Mitchell's invitation to hold our next annual session in Kennebunk.

Voted, that the Secretaries prepare the report of this session for publication in the World's Crisis.

Adjourned to meet at Kennebunk the third Wednesday in October, 1867.

Evening. Elder L. L. Howard preached a timely and good discourse from Rev. 8:1,—opening of the seals, which was followed by exhortations, after which one arose and asked the prayers of the people of God, which were fervently offered.

Sunday morning, eight o'clock. Met for prayer and conference; enjoyed a refreshing season in the Lord, notwithstanding the severe trials which afflict the church and embarrass the faithful laborers. The young man who asked prayers the last evening had found peace, and praised God for his saving grace. At eleven o'clock A. M., Elder Wm. H. Mitchell preached an able discourse from Isa. 25:9, to a large and attentive audience, who seemed deeply impressed. P. M., Elder N. F. Nason preached a strong, practical discourse from Matt. 6:33. Evening, Elder E. M. Haggett preached a good, practical, and doctrinal discourse from 1 John 3:3, which was followed by several exhortations and songs of Zion.

Thus closed another of our annual gatherings, which may be overruled by the great Head of the church for the advancement of his cause, through trials, toils, sorrows, and joys. We learn that another young man was converted and a wanderer reclaimed on the following morning. The brethren and friends in Richmond deserve and have our thanks for the kind entertainment we all received.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARIES.

The importance of having books to distribute among S. S. scholars is not now denied; it is everywhere felt, realized, and acted upon. Under such circumstances "the devil's seed basket" is easily put in motion to aid in supplying the general demand for books for Sunday Schools. The market is being filled, the schools flooded with books, good and bad. Many are filled with theological poison, many with romantic nonsense, and some with base scoffings and skeptical babblings against the faithful watchers in the church of Christ.

It becomes us, therefore, to look well to the important subject of having GOOD books for our schools and our children. I am heartily glad to see that the demands of faithful and discriminating believers for S. S. books, free from the mischief above mentioned, and the difficulty found in selecting them, is awakening a good interest to publish such books.

Many demands have been made on the office of the A. C. P. Society for S. S. books. The brethren in charge have gone to the various S. S. book Repositories in Boston, and looked, inquired, read, and finally selected (in haste, for they had not time to read all), as best they could, to fill orders from Advent S. S. Superintendents. Some of these books have been very unobjectionable, very valuable; but what terrible tales of stupidity, nonsense, and theological bosh have been found in others. We will give you a sample, from a book found in an Advent S. S., and purchased through the A. C. P. S. not long ago:

"END OF THE WORLD."

"Not long ago a great many silly people had a notion that the end of the world was just at hand, and some were wicked enough to pretend to fix the day. We are sure that every young Sunday School child could have taught those foolish people better, for he could have taught them what the Bible says, 'of that day and hour knoweth no man.'"—Methodist Sunday School Library, No. 42.

As before remarked, there is a good interest awakened to furnish such books for our children as we know to be good, scriptural, and healthful to the mind, leading it to Christ.

Bro. Hastings has published "Good Stories," "Clover Hill," "Pleasant Hours," "Bethlehem," and others.

The A. C. P. S. has published a series of "Stories for the Young Pilgrims," in pamphlet form. All these are very valuable, and ought to be scattered among our schools everywhere, and carried into fifty thousand families also, at an early day.

And shall not this work be followed up, until Jesus comes? Will not those among us who have gifts to write for the young, and select for them, produce MSS. for books, and have them published? If they are needed only one year, the benefits would be grand, glorious. I. C. WELLCOME.

For the World's Crisis.

WHY YET DELAY?

Why yet delay in coming to Christ? Do you not feel your need of him who has power to save you from everlasting destruction, and from being banished eternally from the presence of God and his saints? And who has said that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance; and, "Ask and you shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you; seek and ye shall find"; and, "He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, shall be saved."

Why do you delay? Conscience warns you against it. It has spoken to your heart with the entreaties of love, and with the remonstrance of anger; but you have remained undecided still, counterfeiting sleep, and trying not to hear. The time is coming, dear sinner, when God's goodness and mercy will cease forever towards you and all those who forget him; and then will come his severity and judgment. Jesus will come, not as before, to call sinners, but those who have heard his sayings and done them.

Would you hear his sayings and do them? Would you have his goodness and mercy endure forever, and his judgment not to come upon you? Would you be one of the meek, who shall inherit the earth, when it shall have been restored to its primitive state of purity, beauty and glory, never again to be polluted or defiled by sin or sinners, and the saints to have bodies fashioned like Christ's own glorious body, never more to be subject to the ills of mortality? Would you see the invisible, all-wise, and only true God, who made heaven and earth and all that is therein, your creator, preserver, and benefactor, in whom you live, move, and have a being, your loved ones who have been torn from your embrace by death, and are sleeping in their graves to-day? O, the bitter anguish that wrung your bleeding heart, the scalding tears that flowed, when you saw lying cold in death that beloved companion, who had been your support and comfort; whose hands had so often administered to your wants; whose lips had so often spoken words of consolation and good cheer; whose prayers were so often heard in your behalf. And that praying father and mother, that gentle sister and beloved brother, and that precious little one.

Then why delay any longer in coming to Christ? If you really feel your need of salvation, and want to enjoy all that God has promised in his word to those who keep his commandments; why not begin the good work now, and at once and forever put at rest the simple idea that you cannot do what the Master saith, for you can if you will try. He requires of us not what we cannot do, but what we can; and he has said, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Now will you not try to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ? If you will, with your whole soul, might, and strength, I am sure you will succeed, and you will be given to eat of the tree of life in the midst of the paradise of God, with all the redeemed, who will bear "palms of victory and crowns of glory," when Christ, the life-giver, comes to reign on his father David's throne. Why yet delay? CHAS. H. HURD.

Freedom, N. H.

☞ We learn through Bro. Hastings, under date of Oct. 30th, that Prof. C F. Hudson is "lying very low from hemorrhage of the lungs." Brethren, pray for him.—ED.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY."

This glorious promise still beams upon the scroll of time, and its flashing rays light up the dark clouds of futurity. The world is sweeping onward in its maddening career; crime walks the street in draperies of purple and gold; villainy is respectable if clad in broadcloth and velvet; broad waves of corruption sweep over the land, and the very heavens grow dark with the clouds of destiny. The political world is filled with fraud and treachery, for mankind in the struggle for power and wealth have insulted God and ignored his word. The soil of nations trembles beneath the martial tread of their gathered troops, and all Europe awaits the onset of war. The caimson banner must again wave over the clashing steel of contending hosts, for earth's monarchs are thirsting for blood. The dark waves of trouble and anxiety are beating against our helpless barks, and where, oh! where can we find a hope to cheer us in the hour of trial? The children of God are not thus left upon the sea of time without a polar star to guide their voyage; and afar, through the darkness of the night, the glorious promises of God's eternal truth still throw their sacred beams. "Behold, I come quickly," the words still cheer the waiting bride, and warn the foes of God.

Time flies; the years are hasting away, and we stand upon the verge of Eden restored; soon shall earth wear her bridal robes, and be wedded to the glories of eternity. Soon the glorious morn of the long promised millenium shall dawn upon our pilgrimage. Soon, very soon, we must give an account of our stewardship, and settle our account with the Lord of the vineyard. Soon we must stand before the Judge of all the earth, and hear the verdict of eternity. Soon we must be weighed in the scales of God's justice, and if not "found wanting," we shall receive the palm, the robe, the crown, and walk beside the river of life in the paradise of God. Let us then see to it well that we walk carefully amid the whirlpools of the latter days. Temptation is strong on every hand, and we must watch and pray if we would keep our garments pure and free from stain.

Let us strive to be faithful. We are almost through the pilgrimage, and even now the chariot wheels of the coming One are heard amid the mighty events of the nineteenth century. Let us then be up and doing, let us work for God and his truth while mercy tarries and judgment lingers.

Soon the long night of weeping will give place to the morn of redemption, and those faithful heads which have borne the thorn-crowns of persecution will wear the diadems of immortality, and the starry chaplets of eternal life will gleam upon the brows of God's little ones; the dim and dusty robes of earth will be lain aside, for the worthy ones shall walk in white; weary feet shall toil no more over the rocky paths of a sin-cursed earth, but the green vales of Eden restored shall wait for the lambs of the flock, and the glory-clad mountains shall bathe in the sunshine of eternal day.—Prophetic Watchman.

Obituaries.

REYNOLDS. Died in Lee, N. H., Oct. 13th, 1866, Bro. George Reynolds, aged sixty-one years.

Bro. Reynolds was a good man, faithful to his trust. He had been a believer in the soon coming of the Lord for years, and though disappointed, with others, in not seeing him before this time, yet he could say, I have kept the faith, and there is a crown laid up for me. He fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle. May the grace of God sustain the afflicted widow. Lord, hasten the time when

"Death and the tomb shall divide us no more."

C. F. EMERSON.

THAYER. Died, Oct. 8th, 1866, of whooping cough, Frankie, only daughter of S. P. and H. L. Thayer, of Baldwinsville.

Frankie was one of the Sabbath school of the Baptist church, and was beloved by her teacher and pastor, as well as schoolmates. She was always present when health permitted, not caring for storm or cold, that they should interfere with her punctual attendance at the Sabbath school.

And so we lose them, one by one, from our sight, and yet are not as those who have no hope. The resurrection is in waiting for just such lambs of the Savior's fold. H. L. THAYER.

GRAVES. Died in Apponaug, R. I., Sept. 9th, Samuel Graves, formerly of China, Me., in the sixty-eighth year of his age.

He died in full hope of a glorious immortality. His illness was short and severe, yet his soul was in perfect peace, and his mind clear and calm to the last. His last words were, "Be ye spiritually minded." We laid him away, feeling that his would be a "first resurrection." H. E. B.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Berlin, Oct. 22. The Prusso-Saxon treaty of peace was finally signed to-day.

Florence, Oct. 22. The "Plebescitum" of Venetia resulted in nearly a unanimous vote for union with Italy.

Paris, Oct. 23. There are rumors here to-day that another manifesto is about to be issued to the different Diplomatic Representatives of the Empire.

There has been a tremendous battle near Candia, resulting in the repulse of the Turks.

It is now said that the French troops will leave Rome in December.

It is said that the delusion from which the Empress of Mexico is suffering consists in a belief that she is surrounded by people who attempt to poison her. It is thought at Rome that when the Emperor Maximilian hears of the sad affliction which has befallen the Empress he will abdicate; for it was under her influence that he accepted the Mexican crown; and it is owing to her that he has persevered in his hazardous enterprise.

A terrible calamity occurred in Liverpool on the 9th by the explosion of a boiler attached to a small steam engine engaged in removing the cargo from a ship in the Bramley Moore Dock. The result was the death of eight men, and the limbs of some of these unfortunate creatures were torn asunder, and carried a considerable distance.

Very alarming reports still continue to circulate in Paris respecting the Emperor's health. A correspondent, writing on the 10, says that it is whispered among persons who are usually well informed as to what is going on at court, that his brain is affected.

Paris, Oct. 26. The condition of the Empress Carlotta is described as being hopeless. The Emperor Maximilian will probably return in the Austrian frigate which was recently dispatched from Trieste by the Emperor Francis Joseph.

It is said that twenty war steamers will leave for Mexico in November to bring home the entire French force now in that country.

The barque Paris brings news to Aug. 28.

The town of Hankow was completely inundated by a flood, being greater than for many years. The crops in the vicinity were destroyed. The cattle were drowned and thousands of people deprived of employment or shelter. Forty people were killed from a falling wall which the waters had undermined at Kwangtis, near Hankow. The destruction of life has been very great. The Chinese estimate it at 3000.

DOMESTIC.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 25. The schooner Victor, arrived at Lunenburg, reports that at Turks Island, on Sunday, Sept. 30, a terrific hurricane occurred, which destroyed over 800 houses and their contents, killing 20 and crippling a large number of persons. Over 3000 persons were houseless, penniless and almost naked. The whole laboring portion of the colony are destitute. The public school buildings, the armory, jail, quarantine hospital and market were destroyed. All the government outbuildings were blown down. The Government houses and public offices were shattered. 120,000 bushels of salt were swept away; six foreign and twelve vessels belonging to the island were lost with twenty of their crews.

New York, Oct. 27. The Tribune's Berlin correspondent says that on the 9th inst. the celebrated Dr. Langenbeck, chief Surgeon of the Prussian army, left for Biarritz to consult with the physicians of Napoleon on the possibility of an operation. On the next day a dispatch was received from the Prussian Embassy in Paris that there was no hope of recovery for Napoleon, and that his death may be hourly expected.

INFLUENCE OF THE MOON ON THE WEATHER.—The few scientific observations of the weather that extend over any considerable period fail to confirm the popular impression relative to lunar influence in determining the character of the weather. Dr. Marcet examined a register of the weather kept at Geneva for thirty-five years, to test this idea. The results which he obtained seemed upon the whole to lend some support to the popular notion of the influence of the new and full moon, but none whatever to any special influence of the first and third quarters. Against this slight confirmation are set the results of observations made at the Greenwich Observatory since 1840, from which it seems that changes of weather have been found to be as frequent at every age of the moon as when she is seven, fourteen, twenty-one or twenty-eight days old.

The quarterly meeting of the Western New York Christian Conference, will be held in Dansville, Livingston Co., commencing Friday evening, Nov. 23d, and held over Sunday. Let there be a grand rally of brethren and sisters from all quarters to this meeting. 2 : 23, and in the evening by Bro. B. S. Emery from 1 Cor. 15 : 35.

Saturday morning, conference met for business. The committee on drafting a constitution reported the following as a basis of action for the conference, viz :

Whereas our annual conference has become of sufficient importance to favorably affect the general interests of the Lord's cause in the State, even in an incipient stage of organization ; and, whereas, its present condition, limits, and want of active elements for self-preservation and united action seem to require a more perfect organisation, we therefore adopt the following

CONSTITUTION.

ART. 1. This conference shall be called the Maine Second Advent Conference, and shall hold its sessions annually, commencing the third Wednesday in Oct. ; and its object shall be to save men through the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom of God at hand.

ART. 2. This conference shall consist of such ministers of the gospel as sustain a christian character, and are in good fellowship with each other, who wish to unite, and shall become members by a unanimous vote ; also of delegates duly chosen from all churches and societies within the State, who are in harmony with this conference, and wish a voice in its action, viz : one delegate for each church and society, and one additional for every ten members.

ART. 3. The officers of this conference shall consist of President, Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer, chosen annually by a majority of the members present.

ART. 4. It shall be recommended to the ministers of this conference to counsel and encourage such persons as they think called of God to preach or exhort.

ART. 5. All complaints against the character or conduct of any minister of this conference shall be put in writing, and accompanied by the complainant's name, and then presented to the President of said conference ; and in any such case, when evidence shall accompany the complaint of such clearness as to satisfy all the officers of said conference that there is a moral delinquency, they may notify him to refrain from preaching, and the public from giving him countenance, until his case shall be properly investigated.

ART. 6. It shall be the duty of the President and Secretary to call an extra session whenever petitioned by any ten members of said conference.

ART. 7. This constitution, except articles 1 and 2, may be amended at any annual session, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, provided there shall be twenty-four present.

Conference voted to adopt this constitution. At this stage of the meeting the conference was requested to consider the following preamble and resolution, which was adopted.

Whereas some of the brethren wish that the conference should take further action in the case of Elder Jesse Partridge, Therefore, Resolved, That we see no reason for changing the action taken in his case at our last annual meeting. It being the opinion of some that the merits of the case relating to Eld. J. Partridge were not understood, the conference volunteered to appoint the following brethren to examine all matters of difficulty that may be presented relating to the case of Eld. P., and report through the Crisis as soon as possible ; viz., C. Goud, D. W. Griffin, J. Carr, Silas Timberlake, Jeremiah Partridge, Thos. M. Storer, S. K. Partridge, Geo. Umberhind, Stephen Harding, Hiram H. Mitchell.

Conference then adjourned to meet at the close of the afternoon public service. The remainder of the forenoon and a part of the afternoon was occupied in social meetings by those who remained at the meeting-house.

After the close of the afternoon service the conference met for choice of officers, according to the constitution, and to transact such other business as might come before them. The following brethren were chosen officers of the conference under its new arrangement for the ensuing year :—S. K. Partridge, President; R. R. York, Vice President; I. C. Wellcome, Secretary ; R. R. York, Treasurer ; R. R. York and J. A. Libby, Secretaries.

Voted, that the Secretary record the names of the members of the conference in this report, all who are known to be members at the commencement of this session and those received during this session.

Names. Ministers : Wm. H. Mitchell, B. S. Emery, R. R. York, I. C. Wellcome, C. Goud, J. A. Libby, J. C. Wheeler, E. M. Haggett, H. B. Sevey, J. H. Meader, Isaac Wight, L. L. Howard, I. Damman, John Morrill, J. Somes, S. K. Partridge, Thos. Smith, C. H. Leverton, H. D. Reed, Jeremiah Carr, J. R. Hall, Wm. M. Ingham, N. G. Reed. (If any are omitted, please notify.) Lay members : As we find no record of laymen having been voted in at any previous session, we can only record such as were received at this session ; viz., Jeremiah Partridge, D. W. Griffin, F. Bates, Silas Timberlake, George Umberhind, Stephen Harding, I. M. Storer, Jere. Hemenway, Harvey Gaul, James Benner.

Voted, that all ministers belonging to this conference are permanent members, and all delegates are annual members.

Voted, that all money paid into the treasury for specific objects be so stated by the donors, and so disbursed by the treasurer, and all other money be at the direction of the conference.

Voted, that the officers of this conference constitute a disbursing committee to dispose of such money as may come into its treasury.

Voted, that the ministers of this conference constitute a committee to raise $500 the coming year, by subscription of the church, to be expended in preaching the gospel of the kingdom in new and destitute fields in Maine, to be disbursed by the Board.

Voted, that the Secretary prepare an article to be published in the Crisis, to awaken an interest on the subject last voted.

Voted, to accept Bro. Wm. H. Mitchell's invitation to hold our next annual session in Kennebunk.

Voted, that the Secretaries prepare the report of this session for publication in the World's Crisis.

Adjourned to meet at Kennebunk the third Wednesday in October, 1867.

Evening. Elder L. L. Howard preached a timely and good discourse from Rev. 6 : 1,—opening of the seals, which was followed by exhortations, after which one arose and asked the prayers of the people of God, which were fervently offered.

Sunday morning, eight o'clock.—Met for prayer and conference ; enjoyed a refreshing season in the Lord, notwithstanding the severe trials which afflict the church and embarrass the faithful laborers. The young man who asked prayers the last evening had found peace, and praised God for his saving grace. At eleven o'clock A. M., Elder Wm. H. Mitchell preached an able discourse from Isa. 25 : 9, to a large and attentive audience, who seemed deeply impressed. P. M., Elder N. P. Nason preached a strong, practical discourse from Matt. 6 : 33. Evening, Elder E. M. Haggett preached a good, practical, and doctrinal discourse from 1 John 3 : 3, which was followed by several exhortations and songs of Zion.

Thus closed another of our annual gatherings, which may be overruled by the great Head of the church for the advancement of his cause, through trials, toils, sorrows, and joys. We learn that another young man was converted and a wanderer reclaimed on the following morning. The brethren and friends in Richmond deserve and have our thanks for the kind entertainment we all received.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARIES.

The importance of having books to distribute among S. S. scholars is not now denied ; it is everywhere felt, realized, and acted upon. Under such circumstances "the devil's seed basket" is easily put in motion to aid in supplying the general demand for books for Sunday Schools. The market is being filled, the schools flooded with books, good and bad. Many are filled with theological poison, many with romantic nonsense, and some with base scoffings and skeptical babblings against the faithful watchers in the church of Christ.

It becomes us, therefore, to look well to the important subject of having GOOD books for our schools and our children. I am heartily glad to see that the demands of faithful and discriminating believers for S. S. books, free from the mischief above mentioned, and the difficulty found in selecting them, is awakening a good interest to publish such books.

Many demands have been made on the office of the A. C. P. Society for S. S. books. The brethren in charge have gone to the various S. S. book Repositories in Boston, and looked, inquired, read, and finally selected (in haste, for they had not time to read all), as best they could, to fill orders from Advent S. S. Superintendents. Some of these books have been very unobjectionable, very valuable ; but what terrible tales of stupidity, nonsense, and theological bosh have been found in others. We will give you a sample, from a book found in an Advent S. S., and purchased through the A. C. P. S. not long ago :

"END OF THE WORLD."

"Not long ago a great many silly people had a notion that the end of the world was just at hand, and some were wicked enough to pretend to fix the day. We are sure that every young Sunday School child could have taught those foolish people better, for he could have taught them what the Bible says, 'of that day and hour knoweth no man.' "—Methodist Sunday School Library, No. 42.

As before remarked, there is a good interest awakened to furnish such books for our children as we know to be good, scriptural, and healthful to the mind, leading it to Christ.

Bro. Hastings has published "Good Stories," "Clover Hill," "Pleasant Hours," "Bethlehem," and others.

The A. C. P. S. has published a series of "Stories for the Young Pilgrims," in pamphlet form. All these are very valuable, and ought to be scattered among our schools everywhere, and carried into fifty thousand families also, at an early day.

And shall not this work be followed up, until Jesus comes ? Will not those among us who have gifts to write for the young, and select for them, produce MSS. for books, and have them published ? If they are needed only one year, the benefits would be grand, glorious. I. C. WELLCOME.

For the World's Crisis.

WHY YET DELAY?

Why yet delay in coming to Christ ? Do you not feel your need of him who has power to save you from everlasting destruction, and from being banished eternally from the presence of God and his saints ? And who has said that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance ; and, "Ask and you shall receive ; knock, and it shall be opened unto you ; seek and ye shall find" ; and, "He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, shall be saved."

Why do you delay ? Conscience warns you against it. It has spoken to your heart with the entreaties of love, and with the remonstrance of anger ; but you have remained undecided still, counterfeiting sleep, and trying not to hear. The time is coming, dear sinner, when God's goodness and mercy will cease forever towards you and all those who forget him ; and then will come his severity and judgment. Jesus will come, not as before, to call sinners, but those who have heard his sayings and done them.

Would you hear his sayings and do them ? Would you have his goodness and mercy endure forever, and his judgment not to come upon you ? Would you be one of the meek, who shall inherit the earth, when it shall have been restored to its primitive state of purity, beauty and glory, never again to be polluted or defiled by sin or sinners, and the saints to have bodies fashioned like Christ's own glorious body, never more to be subject to the ills of mortality ? Would you see the invisible, all-wise, and only true God, who made heaven and earth and all that is therein, your creator, preserver, and benefactor, in whom you live, move, and have a being, your loved ones who have been torn from your embrace by death, and are sleeping in their graves to-day ? O, the bitter anguish that wrung your bleeding heart, the scalding tears that flowed, when you saw lying cold in death that beloved companion, who had been your support and comfort ; whose hands had so often administered to your wants ; whose lips had so often spoken words of consolation and good cheer ; whose prayers were so often heard in your behalf. And that praying father and mother, that gentle sister and beloved brother, and that precious little one.

Then why delay any longer in coming to Christ ? If you really feel your need of salvation, and want to enjoy all that God has promised in his word to those who keep his commandments ; why not begin the good work now, and at once and forever put at rest the simple idea that you cannot do what the Master saith, for you can if you will try. He requires of us not what we cannot do, but what we can ; and he has said, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Now will you not try to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ ? If you will, with your whole soul, might, and strength, I am sure you will succeed, and you will be given to eat of the tree of life in the midst of the paradise of God, with all the redeemed, who will bear "palms of victory and crowns of glory," when Christ, the life-giver, comes to reign on his father David's throne. Why yet delay ? CHAS. H. HURD.

☞ We learn through Bro. Hastings, under date of Oct. 30th, that Prof. C F. Hudson is "lying very low from hemorrhage of the lungs." Brethren, pray for him.—ED.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY."

This glorious promise still beams upon the scroll of time, and its flashing rays light up the dark clouds of futurity. The world is sweeping onward in its maddening career ; crime walks the street in draperies of purple and gold ; villainy is respectable if clad in broadcloth and velvet ; broad waves of corruption sweep over the land, and the very heavens grow dark with the clouds of destiny. The political world is filled with fraud and treachery, for mankind in the struggle for power and wealth have insulted God and ignored his word. The soil of nations trembles beneath the martial tread of their gathered troops, and all Europe awaits the onset of war. The crimson banner must again wave over the clashing steel of contending hosts, for earth's monarchs are thirsting for blood. The dark waves of trouble and anxiety are beating against our helpless barks, and where, oh ! where can we find a hope to cheer us in the hour of trial ? The children of God are not thus left upon the sea of time without a polar star to guide their voyage ; and afar, through the darkness of the night, the glorious promises of God's eternal truth still throw their sacred beams. "Behold, I come quickly," the words still cheer the waiting bride, and warn the foes of God.

Time flies ; the years are hasting away, and we stand upon the verge of Eden restored ; soon shall earth wear her bridal robes, and be wedded to the glories of eternity. Soon the glorious morn of the long promised millenium shall dawn upon our pilgrimage. Soon, very soon, we must give an account of our stewardship, and settle our account with the Lord of the vineyard. Soon we must stand before the Judge of all the earth, and hear the verdict of eternity. Soon we must be weighed in the scales of God's justice, and if not "found wanting," we shall receive the palm, the robe, the crown, and walk beside the river of life in the paradise of God. Let us then see to it well that we walk carefully amid the whirlpools of the latter days. Temptation is strong on every hand, and we must watch and pray if we would keep our garments pure and free from stain.

Let us strive to be faithful. We are almost through the pilgrimage, and even now the chariot wheels of the coming One are heard amid the mighty events of the nineteenth century. Let us then be up and doing, let us work for God and his truth while mercy tarries and judgment lingers.

Soon the long night of weeping will give place to the morn of redemption, and those faithful heads which have borne the thorn-crowns of persecution will wear the diadems of immortality, and the starry chaplets of eternal life will gleam upon the brows of God's little ones ; the dim and dusty robes of earth will be lain aside, for the worthy ones shall walk in white ; weary feet shall toil no more over the rocky paths of a sin-cursed earth, but the green vales of Eden restored shall wait for the lambs of the flock, and the glory-clad mountains shall bathe in the sunshine of eternal day.—Prophetic Watchman.

Obituaries.

REYNOLDS. Died in Lee, N. H., Oct. 13th, 1866, Bro. George Reynolds, aged sixty-one years.

Bro. Reynolds was a good man, faithful to his trust. He had been a believer in the soon coming of the Lord for years, and though disappointed, with others, in not seeing him before this time, yet he could say, I have kept the faith, and there is a crown laid up for me. He fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle. May the grace of God sustain the afflicted widow. Lord, hasten the time when

C. F. EMERSON.

THAYER. Died, Oct. 8th, 1866, of whooping cough, Frankie, only daughter of S. P. and H. L. Thayer, of Baldwinsville.

Frankie was one of the Sabbath school of the Baptist church, and was beloved by her teacher and pastor, as well as schoolmates. She was always present when health permitted, not caring for storm or cold, that they should interfere with her punctual attendance at the Sabbath school.

And so we lose them, one by one, from our sight, and yet are not as those who have no hope. The resurrection is in waiting for just such lambs of the Savior's fold. H. L. THAYER.

GRAVES. Died in Apponaug, R. I., Sept. 9th, Samuel Graves, formerly of China, Me., in the sixty-eighth year of his age.

He died in full hope of a glorious immortality. His illness was short and severe, yet his soul was in perfect peace, and his mind clear and calm to the last. His last words were, "Be ye spiritually minded." We laid him away, feeling that his would be a "first resurrection." H. E. B.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Berlin, Oct. 22. The Prusso-Saxon treaty of peace was finally signed to-day.

Florence, Oct. 22. The "Plebescitum" of Venetia resulted in nearly a unanimous vote for union with Italy.

Paris, Oct. 23. There are rumors here to-day that another manifesto is about to be issued to the different Diplomatic Representatives of the Empire.

There has been a tremendous battle near Candia, resulting in the repulse of the Turks.

It is now said that the French troops will leave Rome in December.

It is said that the delusion from which the Empress of Mexico is suffering consists in a belief that she is surrounded by people who attempt to poison her. It is thought at Rome that when the Emperor Maximilian hears of the sad affliction which has befallen the Empress he will abdicate ; for it was under her influence that he accepted the Mexican crown, and it is owing to her that he has persevered in his hazardous enterprise.

A terrible calamity occurred in Liverpool on the 9th by the explosion of a boiler attached to a small steam engine engaged in removing the cargo from a ship in the Bramley Moore Dock. The result was the death of eight men, and the limbs of some of these unfortunate creatures were rent asunder, and carried a considerable distance.

Very alarming reports still continue to circulate in Paris respecting the Emperor's health. A correspondent, writing on the 10, says that it is whispered among persons who are usually well informed as to what is going on at court, that his brain is affected.

Paris, Oct. 26. The condition of the Empress Carlotta is described as being hopeless. The Emperor Maximilian will probably return in the Austrian frigate which was recently dispatched from Trieste by the Emperor Francis Joseph.

It is said that twenty war steamers will leave for Mexico in November to bring home the entire French force now in that country.

The barque Paris brings news to Aug. 25.

The town of Hankow was completely inundated by a flood, being greater than for many years. The crops in the vicinity were destroyed. The cattle were drowned and thousands of people deprived of employment or shelter. Forty people were killed from a falling wall which the waters had undermined at Kwangtiz, near Hankow. The destruction of life has been very great. The Chinese estimate it at 2000.

DOMESTIC.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 25. The schooner Victor, arrived at Lunenburg, reports that at Turks Island, on Sunday, Sept. 30, a terrific hurricane occurred, which destroyed over 800 houses and their contents, killing 20 and crippling a large number of persons. Over 3000 persons were houseless, penniless and almost naked. The whole laboring portion of the colony are destitute. The public school buildings, the armory, jail, quarantine hospital and market were destroyed. All the government outbuildings were blown down. The Government houses and public offices were shattered. 120,000 bushels of salt were swept away ; six foreign and twelve vessels belonging to the island were lost with twenty of their crews.

New York, Oct. 27. The Tribune's Berlin correspondent says that on the 9th inst. the celebrated Dr. Langenbeck, chief Surgeon of the Prussian army, left for Biarritz to consult with the physicians of Napoleon on the possibility of an operation. On the next day a dispatch was received from the Prussian Embassy in Paris that there was no hope of recovery for Napoleon, and that his death may be hourly expected.

INFLUENCE OF THE MOON ON THE WEATHER.—The few scientific observations of the weather that extend over any considerable period fail to confirm the popular impression relative to lunar influence in determining the character of the weather. Dr. Marcet examined a register of the weather kept at Geneva for thirty-five years, to test this idea. The results which he obtained seemed upon the whole to lend some support to the popular notion of the influence of the new and full moon, but none whatever to any special influence of the first and third quarters. Against this slight confirmation are set the results of observations made at the Greenwich Observatory since 1840, from which it seems that changes of weather have been found to be as frequent at every age of the moon as when she is seven, fourteen, twenty-one or twenty-eight days old.

Western New York Quarterly Conference.

The quarterly meeting of the Western New York Christian Conference, will be held in Dansville, Livingston Co., commencing Friday evening, Nov. 23d, and held over Sunday. Let there be a grand rally of brethren and sisters from all quarters to this meeting. Events transpiring before our eyes tell us plainly that very few such meetings will be held this side the kingdom. Come, then, brethren, in the name of the Lord, armed and equipped to work for God.

There will be teams at Wayland, on the Buffalo and N. Y. and E. R. R., on the arrival of the one o'clock train from the West. If those coming from the East can get the morning train from Elmira, they will arrive in time for the stage at ten o'clock. If not, if you will write to us, we will see that teams are at Wayland on the arrival of the 4 P. M. train.

A HYMN OF TRUST.

Leave God to order all thy ways,
And hope in him whate'er betide—
Thou'lt find him in the evil days
An all-sufficient strength and guide.
Who trusts in God's unchanging love,
Builds on the rock that naught can move.

What can these anxious cares avail,
These never-ceasing moans and sighs?
What can it help us to bewail
Each painful moment as it flies?
Our cross and trials do but press
The heavier for our bitterness.

Only your restless heart keep still,
And wait in cheerful hope, content
To take whate'er his gracious will,
His all-discerning love has sent;
Nor doubt our inmost wants are known
To Him who chose us for his own.

He knows when joyful hours are best,
He sends them as he sees it meet;
When thou hast borne its fiery test,
And now art freed from all deceit,
He comes to thee all unaware,
And makes thee own his loving care.

Nor in the heat of pain and strife,
Think God has cast thee off unheard;
Nor that the man whose prosperous life
Thou enviest, is of him preferred;
Time passes and much change doth bring,
And sets a bound to every thing.

All are alike before his face,
'Tis easy to our God most high
To make the rich man poor and base—
To give the poor man wealth and joy.
True wonders still of him are wrought,
Who setteth up and brings to naught.

Sing, pray, and swerve not from his ways,
But do thine own part faithfully;
Trust his rich promises of grace,
So shall it be fulfilled in thee.
God never yet forsook at need
The soul that trusted him indeed.

PULPIT HARDSHIPS.

Much has been said of ministerial hardships in general, until some of those earnest toilers who have met with the roughest of experiences have been almost ashamed to see further appeals for sympathy for trials borne by the ministry. Of pulpit hardships in particular less has been written than of stinted larders and slender wardrobes, study hours infringed upon by untimely visits, received or exacted, and querulous complaints of matter or manner in the pulpit made by those sure to be suitable judges of neither. Of hard, wearing seasons in the pulpit, the history is in great part unwritten. It may be for the reason that those who have endured them usually feel something of the same disinclination to reproduce them in description that veterans do of the more terrible scenes of the battle-field. Those who have not gone through them cannot depict them, and if others will not, it is no marvel that the story of them remains untold. Haply they who are looking constantly to the Lord's day as having these possible hardships in the pulpit, stored up for them in immediate prospect, are fair to keep the matter from more than a vague place in their thoughts; so that they could not reasonably be expected to come up to the writing point respecting them. May there not be then an unfilled niche awaiting these representations from some minister disabled for a season for pulpit labor, and so uniting in some sort the conditions of knowledge and disposition requisite for producing the picture? Let us see:

1. There are hardships in the pulpit which are of an external sort, and of these there are two classes. They relate respectively to physical and moral surroundings. As to the former: it is hard to preach in close, stifling air. So much has been said, however, on that point, that it is only named here because of its primary importance.

It is hard to preach in houses, no matter how well ventilated, which are built, as most church edifices are, in defiance of the laws governing sound. It is hard to speak from a pulpit at all, shut away at a distance from the audience too great usually to admit of looking them distinctly in the eye, so as to get their expression and communicate yours. People pen up a preacher at such a distance from them commonly, that they get out of point blank range. Enough on this head.

As to moral surroundings:

It is hard to preach where people show you they do not wish to hear. If they sleep, turn the leaves of their hymn books, stare around, or, with worse than heathen manners, whisper with one another, it is a great and grievous hardship to preach to them.

It is hard to preach where, in spite of decorous outward attention, you perceive your hearers to be in an unsympathetic frame. The attitude may signify interest, while the countenance betrays indifference. Or there may be no indifference, and only the interest of the cold critic, or of those who are evidently mentally combatting the truth you are urging upon their consciences.

It is hard to preach sometimes even to the sympathetic, where you perceive or fear that the sympathy is a mere giving up to the luxury of feeling in a way that crowds out conscience and those strong spiritual girdings up of the mind which are requisite to true edification. But,

2. The chief hardships met with in the pulpit lie quite out of the range of all these matters, external to the preacher himself.

The internal difficulties making labor a hardship are also two fold, mental and spiritual. It is hard to preach with a conscious lack of mental clearness. Whether that unfortunate state arise from a heterogeneous mass of things in stomach or brain, the hardship resulting is about the same.

It is hard to preach with a feeling that you have not had time and opportunity to master your subject. You feel you must master it or it will master you. No such thing as walking hand in hand with it on equal terms.

It is hard to preach in that relaxed mental state wherein ideas and even words seem to carry you along as in a current. One cannot always lay hold of thought and speech with the firm grip of one that uses what is seen to be fit, and rejects the rest. But when the sermon must flow from the lips, or even from the pen first, without one's being able to get his brain in fighting trim, like the vigorous, sinewy athlete, it goes hard.

Hardest of all by far, however, is spiritual hardship in the pulpit. It is very hard to stand up and urge men to their duty, when you have not done yours in preparing the message for them. The ghost of a neglected duty rises before you and will not down.

It is very hard to preach with a consciousness that you slighted that noble motto of Luther, for emergencies: "To have prayed well is to have studied well." To think you might have obtained the girdings wherewith one is girded by the Spirit of God for pulpit power, by an hour's wrestling in the closet, and neglected to do it, ah, that is hard to bear. Not that the Holy Ghost offers a bonus for laziness, by supplying in the closet what is to be had in the study, but that he gives, as before said, for emergencies, strength, point and clearness, where one has necessarily failed to reach them by ordinary means.

Lastly, it is very hard, yea, hardest of all, to stand before men, as the ambassador of God, to pray them in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God, with a deep, painful lack of the sense of being in a reconciled state one's self. A real christian may sometimes lack this. He must then walk in darkness, until his faith grows strong enough to realize a present Savior. How crushing to feel this lack of a thorough vitalizing faith as one stands in the pulpit. It is like making a battle charge with one's hands tied.

Mighty joys are in the pulpit, but, verily, there are hardships there.—Christian Review.

For the World's Crisis.

THE ANGEL OF DEATH.

The angel of death is still on his mission. The young, the fair, and the loved, are his especial marks. What devastation has he not made in this once fair earth! How dark would be the picture, were there no light beyond! But, be it known to the joy of every stricken heart, there is light beyond the grave. Glory to God, that we may read, "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death (O, glory to God!), and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."—2 Tim. 1: 9, 10.

What good news! Death abolished, and life and immortality attained beyond the grave. Is this not light beyond the dark confines of the tomb? light that shows us the reign of death to be short? that life and immortality are soon to gain their eternal triumph? that it is but a night's rest, an hour's triumph over God's saints? that they will soon come forth with the glad shout, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Cor. 15: 55.

DIED.

In this place, Goshen, Indiana, on Thursday, the 20th of September, 1866, Carrie Willard, wife of A. H. Ellwood, Esq., in the twenty-eighth year of her age. The funeral services were held in the Episcopal church in this place, on Sunday last. The crowded house, the long procession to the grave, the many tokens of respect and love, show how strong a hold she had gained on the hearts of those who knew her. She died in the faith and with the hopes of the Christian.—Goshen Times.

Six years ago, this dear niece of ours put on Christ in baptism, in company with two others near her own age, at the hand of Eld. S. A. Chaplin, from our residence, then in Warsaw, Indiana. Three years ago, dear Anna finished her course, having kept the faith, and died shouting victory, even in the enemy's grasp. Glory to God!

Now dear Carrie has fallen. But her dying testimony was,—

"If this prove to be my last illness, I wish all my friends to know that I die in the Lord; that my hope is firm unto the end; that I have no fears for myself. My only regret is, that I was not more faithful, that I might have had one star in my crown."

"Two weeks ago," she continued, "I sent to the Crisis office for tracts, but they have not come. I did wish to do some good."

Thursday morning, as her brother entered the room, she addressed him with much feeling, saying,—

"Oh, brother! what will you do when you come down to a dying bed, as I have, if you have no hope in Christ?"

As she lay a corpse in the house, her tracts came; two large bundles, to her address. Her husband sent one of these bundles to us to distribute for her, and the other he concluded to take to the school (as they were both at the head of a high school in Goshen), and open them there, telling the simple story, and let all take and read, as from her dying hand. Thus her works follow her.

"But thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."—"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." 1 Cor. 15: 57, 58. O, glory to Jesus! My heart doth magnify the Lord in view of these testimonials of his power to save. Amen.

Your sister, E. S. Willard.

REJECTION OF CHRIST.

Were I lying upon the battle-field, and were the life current ebbing quickly from the ghastly wound, I would gladly welcome the friendly hand that would stop the flowing tide. Were I a prisoner in a dark and loathsome cell, where the sun never shone, and day succeeded night unknown to one save by the accustomed return of the scanty and nauseous meal; where, in the solitude, I heard no sound save the dread creaking of the dungeon's doors, at the very motion of which "my pulse closed their gates with a shock on my heart;" it seems to me I would shower with gratitude the strong hand which should come and tear away the frightful gratings, and lead me up again to the abodes of men into the beautiful world, rich with its sunlight, fragrant with its flowers, and melodious with nature's choristers.

Were I upon a vast sandy desert, upon the unlimited breadth of which I had lost my way, while the full orb of noon was pouring down its rays in such torrents, as I would wish the rain-storm then to come, and did the machinery of my frame seem almost determined to stand still, as the faltering limbs refused to bear their burden further, and the fluttering heart beat with electric pulses; and, if then I caught a glimpse of a oasis near to me unobserved before, how would renewed life thrill through my veins, and the muscles return to their allegiance, that I might reach it, where I could find a shelter from the scorching heat, and quaff revivifying nectar from its fountain!

Were I in the crowded city, where the plague was raging, and did I see it had fastened upon me, and, as surely and measuredly as the tramp of soldiery, was approaching my heart, when it touched the strings of which life would have flown, how eagerly would I fly to the physician, and beseech him with the piteous accents of a dying man, to quench the flame which I felt rushing through my arteries toward the center of vitality. Thus in life we reason and act. But Jesus comes to man, and finds him dying; sin has made a wound upon his soul, and its very blood crimsons the ground. The Savior, the maker of it, offers to breathe again upon it, and bring it back to life, but,—tell it not to earth, or the unfeeling stones would rise and shame thee—he refuses. The Deliverer sees him in a dungeon, groping in chains amid the gloom of hopelessness, where he catches the vapors ascending from the pit, where, amid the elements of being, fiends hold their jubilee. Christ shows the fair fields of true delight, and is ready to strike off the fetters, to undo the heavy burdens, to open the windows of the soul, and let in the perfumed breezes of the skies; but man turns to his filth, his gloom, his tortures, and bids the Spirit "be gone." God again observes man toiling upon the great desert of life, where the fierce rays of divine wrath pierce through the groaning conscience,—and presents the oasis of salvation, where a fountain is open for sin and uncleanness, where the fruits of Paradise are reproduced and many species added, where the river of life flows, and every ripple smiling speaks of health and happiness. Here is a fortress, redemption; here is a verdant plain, purity; here is the rock in a weary land. Jesus Christ, the great physician, finds the sinner tottering toward the grave, the fearful contagion of guilt has seized his soul, paralyzes its members, destroys its sensibility, urges it on to ruin, to the darkness which knows no light, to the night which knows no morning, to the worm which never dies, and to the fire which it never quenched. He proposes to purify the heart, to turn its gloom to day, its bitterness to joy.
—Clark P. Hard.

For the World's Crisis.

"O, I WOULD LIVE ALWAY."

Tune.—"I love thee."

O, I would live alway—how dreadful to die,
To know life is ebbing, the grim monster nigh;
That no more for me will the sweet flowers bloom,
Ne'er gaze on their beauties or breathe their perfume.

O, I would live alway—I love not death's gloom,
The silence and darkness enshrouding the tomb;
To lie all unconscious beneath the cold ground,
While friends who have loved me weep o'er the low mound.

O, I would live alway, rejoicing to share
The reproach and the stigma God's children must bear,
And with them stand firm in the conflict and strife,
Courageously battling for eternal life.

O, I would live alway, but not where death reigns,
Where sin and pollution have left their dark stains,
And where in the earth and in ocean's vast deep,
Are millions of slain held in death's icy sleep.

O, I would live alway with those who remain,
Till Jesus from glory to earth comes again,
With lamp brightly burning and bridal robe on,
All ready and waiting to enter my home.

There I would live alway in Eden's fair bowers,
Where no chilling blast will e'er blight the sweet flowers;
And there in sweet union with those I love best,
Would share in the glories of eternal rest.

LABOR IN LOVE.

Much of the good that might be accomplished by many is lost, and sometimes great harm done, by stern manners and harsh words, which but ill accord with the spirit of christianity, whose essence is love. Many are thereby repelled from the cross, who might be drawn to it by "love's divine attraction." It takes a great deal of love to say hard things in a way that will do anybody any good. It remained for the apostle John, whose name was love, whose life was love, and who wrote more of love than any other of the apostles, to call those persons liars, who should say they knew God and yet did not keep his commandments. But it is a poor way indeed for us to win back to the truth erring brothers or sisters by telling them they are liars. It would do for Jesus to call the Scribes and Pharisees "hypocrites," but where we would do good once in that way, we would do harm a thousand times. Who could reform a man addicted to drinking, by calling him a "drunkard"? What prospect would there be of bringing back a wanderer to the fold by giving him the appellation of an "old backslider"? Or of awakening one who has lost his first love, but who is hardly aware of the fact, by praying for him publicly as being a formalist, cold, dead, etc.? Will it do yourself, the community, or your pastor any particular good, to pray for him publicly as though he were nearly or altogether destitute of the grace of God, and sadly lacking the power of the Holy Ghost? And may not churches be repelled from the truth, instead of being drawn up to it, in the same way that individuals are? Our place is not in the judgment seat, but somewhere, everywhere holding up the plain, sweet, or searching truths of God, that persons may see, and hear, and judge themselves.

We are not to smooth it over, or take from it its keen, pointed edge; we are not to heal the hurt of God's people slightly, saying, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace"; or say, All is well! when God hath not spoken it. But if a wound is very sore, and all but incurable, do not go rashly to work, as if it were your delight to give pain. But let tears in your own eyes evidence your sympathy and love, as you cut the cords and sever the ties that bind your patient to earth and sin. It must be done, but work with careful hand, or you may kill instead of cure.

One who had departed—at least in a measure—from the good way, spent an evening at the house of a sister who was strong and permanent, and full of zeal for the truth. Perhaps she had never departed from Christ, and lost her way in the wilderness, and wandered around restless, and tired, to find the right path again, or she might have had more sympathy, and dealt more kindly with the wandering one. As it was, she dealt in heavy blows, and the poor girl in her heart resisted the truth, thought she would leave the church, she would give up; no one loved her, no one cared only to find fault with her; and vexed and discouraged, she was leaving the house, and leaving a true friend (though she could not see it), and leaving all that was holy, and pure, and worth striving for in this world. A sister who had seen, and heard, and said nothing all that long evening, but whose heart yearned over this lost lamb, followed her into the hall and kissed her; said nothing, only kissed her, and went back to her place again. And this is the testimony of one, afterward safe in the fold, and close by the side of the good Shepherd,—"That kiss saved me!" Almost any one that is strong enough can cut off a limb, but it is a nice piece of work to take up the arteries, and bind up the wound in such a way that it shall heal; and if one has not the wisdom and skill required to do that part of the work, he had better not undertake the other, or the patient will die just as surely, and with much more suffering, than if left alone. If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him.

Let us not be of that number against whom the woe was pronounced, because they strengthened not the diseased, neither healed that which was sick, neither bound up that which was broken, neither brought again that which was driven away, neither sought that which was lost; but who ruled them with force and with cruelty. Ezek. 34: 4.

"Speak gently. It is better far
To rule by love than fear.
Speak gently. Let not harsh words mar
The good we might do here."

Some people delight in "getting the devil mad," as they call it, but there is very little virtue in that, if they have not the power to cast him out. We have spoken to those who speak. One word from the "sweet Psalmist" to those who hear, and we are done. "Blessed are they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them."—Earnest Christian.

Lay whatever things thou canst not
